The Varsity rink of Cushing, Jim Creighton, Doug Smith and Bob Demcoe had been one of the pleasant surprises of the bonspiel, advancing ahead of some of the best-known curlers in the Metro area. It was the youngest rink of the 448 that started the elimination tournament. All four curlers are 21 years of age.

The Cushing rink, which has only been together for little more than a week, will now enter the Ontario double-rink championships. The district playdowns begin Friday at the Boulevard Club.

Borodczak wins at table tennis

Nars Borodczak, a fourth-year Engineering student, won the All-Varsity table tennis tournament at Hart House Saturday.

Borodczak took the title by defeating Danny Strub (II Meds) in the final round, 21-14, 21-15, 21-14. Both Borodczak and Strub defeated five opponents to qualify for the final round.

Dave Lamb finished third in the tournament, which attracted some 40 entrants.

Tartars pin matmen

Wayne State Tartars' wrestling team defeated an unconditioned Varsity team, 21-16, at Hart House Friday night.

It was the first matches of the year for two of Blues' wrestlers who just started working out this week. Andy Szandtner and Bob Edwards both members of this year's Baby Blues football team, lost their matches but the pair should improve as the season progresses.

Szandtner is an intercollegiate champion from last year who has the muscle and fitness to become an intercollegiate champion. Edwards was one of the top high school wrestlers in Ontario last year.

Ward Passi breaks leg as Blues split 2 games

By GORD BELLMORE

MONTREAL — Varsity Hockey Blues lost the services of all-star left winger Ward Passi for the remainder of the season as they split their two-game road trip to Quebec on the weekend. Blues broke the "Laval jinx" Friday night, blanking Laval Rouge et Or, 2-0, in Quebec City, but were upset here Saturday night by Montreal Carabins, 1-0.

The big loss, however, was the talented Passi, who had his right leg broken below the knee Saturday night when he was deliberately charged by Pierre Charbonneau of U. of M. near the end of the second period.

Charbonneau, a tough and belligerent addition to Carabins this season, had been fattening his reputation throughout the game by running into every Blue he could catch. He had exchanged threats with Passi earlier in the second period before the incident in which Blues' star was injured.

Passi was a good 40 feet away from the play when Charbonneau hit him head-on. Passi said later that he saw the Carabin player at the last moment but it was too late to avoid the collision. He figured the break was caused by the impact of Charbonneau's knee or leg hitting him. There was no penalty on the play.

The loss of Passi was the lowest point of a completely frustrating evening for Blues, who did everything but score on Carabin goaltender Jean Viau. While Carabins are drastically improved over last season, especially on defence and in goal, they still couldn't skate with Blues, even though the Toronto team was visibly tired from travelling and the game at Laval the night previous.

Andre Boucher scored the only goal of the game in the second minute of play when he pushed the puck and Varsity goalie Gary Aitken into the net. The rest of the first period was scrambling and slow as Blues skated sluggishly and Montreal checked fiercely.

The second and third periods belonged to Blues, however, as the host team hung on grimly. Blues kept Carabins pinned in their own end of the rink for minutes at a time but couldn't penetrate the blanket checking of Montreal.

George Olah came closest to scoring for Blues when Viau blindly knocked down his shot and fell on the puck at the goal line. Blues also hit the goal post from a scramble in the third period.

Blues turned in their most solid effort of the season at Laval. In a very fast, wide open game, they almost chased Rouge et Or out of the rink in the first two periods and with any luck could have scored more than two goals.

Hank Monteith, the best player on the ice, opened the scoring in the first period when he outmanoeuvred three defenders and fired a high shot past Laval netminder Maurice Grenier. Centre Bobby McClelland scored the other goal three minutes later when he was left uncovered in front of Grenier.

Laval bounced back in the third period, buoyed by the work of Grenier, and tested Aitken several times, making him earn his first shutout.

Stray Shots — Varsity Coach Joe Kane handed out cigars for the fourth time before Blues boarded the train Thursday night. The new arrival was a boy. . .

A tough year for Ward Passi

It has certainly been a heart-breaking year for Ward Passi, the 20-year-old Sudbury native who took the Varsity sports scene by storm last year.

When Passi suffered a broken leg in Blues' hockey game against Montreal Carabins at Montreal Saturday night it was his second serious injury since the fall. In the first game of the interfaculty football season Passi, a halfback with Victoria College, suffered torn knee ligaments and missed the entire season. Now he is sidelined for the remainder of the college hockey schedule.

In his freshman year Passi played an important role on Vic's Mulock Cup winning team and then was the highest scoring rookie in the Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League. He scored 19 goals, tops in the league, and added 14 assists to finish second in scoring with 33 points. He was also a unanimous choice as the league's all-star left winger.

WARD PASSI

COLLEGE PUCK AND CAGE ROUNDUP

Marlins and 'Big W's' lead the way

McMaster Marlins stayed atop the Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League, edging McGill Redmen, 3-2, at Dundas, Ont., Saturday. Marlins have taken nine of a possible 10 points in the schedule to lead Varsity Blues by two points.

Blues were tied with Marlins for first place briefly when they blanked Laval Rouge et Or, 2-0, in Quebec City Friday night. They dropped back the next night, however, losing to Montreal Carabins, 1-0, in Montreal.

League scoring leader Bobby Apps netted the winning goal for McMaster against McGill in the third period. Gary Spoor counted the other Mac goals, Dave Kerr scored both McGill goals.

Redmen, who had scored only seven goals in their first three games, exploded for 12 in defeating Waterloo Warriors, 12-2, Friday night in Waterloo. McGill broke up a close game by netting eight goals in the third period.

Leon Abbott led Redmen, scoring three, and Tom Bell had two. Single goals were scored by Doug Carr, Bill McKellar, Rick Gordon, John Taylor, Don Taylor, Bert Halliwell, and Dave Kerr. Don Mervyn and Ken Thompson were the Waterloo goal-getters.

BASKETBALL

The three big "Ws", Windsor Lancers, Waterloo Warriors and Western Mustangs, remained undefeated in intercollegiate basketball play on the weekend. Each won two games. Lancers and Warriors are tied for first place, each having won four games, Mustangs are second with three victories.

Windsor edged Toronto, 88-79, in Toronto Friday and swamped McMaster Marauders for the second time this season, 102-62, in Hamilton Saturday, Bernie Friesmuth paced Lancers against Mac, netting 24 points.

Saturday's game at McMaster attracted the largest crowd ever to see a basketball game there. The throng was estimated at 1500.

Waterloo, surprisingly strong early in the season, won over McGill Redmen, 70-52, Friday at McGill and clubbed Queen's Golden Gaels, 74-58, Saturday in Kingston. All-star centre Jerry Raphael led Waterloo in both games, scoring 28 against McGill and 20 against Queen's. Bob Balahura also scored 20 against Queen's.

Western won at Queen's Friday, 75-55, and thumped McGill, 69-42, Saturday in Montreal. All-star guard Tom Williamson counted 29 points for Mustangs against Queen's and 20 points against McGill.

MYSTERY REPORT LOOMS

The long awaited report of the special board of governors' committee set up last March to consider requested changes in the Students' Administrative Council constitution may—or may not—report to the board tomorrow.

Although no official statement is available on the contents of the report, it is hoped that it will favor the student requests.

Last year's council submitted a brief to the administration asking for the return to students of financial control of their affairs and the right to hire their own full-time staff.

Following a round of negotiations between council and the administration, which at times involved open conflict, the special committee was established to consider the requested changes and report back to the board of governors.

In the interim, council has abstained from pushing for such things as constitutional amendments and the proposed student centre. And there has been no response or progress report from the committee.

A survey of available committee members last night only revealed that no one knew if the report would be submitted to the boards scheduled monthly meeting tomorrow.

One board member, the Hon. Mr. Justice Arthur Kelly, said the committee had completed its meetings, but he did not know if a report would be submitted. He suggested the secretary of the board, D. S. Claringbold, would know if it was on the agenda.

Mr. Claringbold said he did not know and that the item was not on the agenda.

C. A. Wright, dean of the faculty of law, and chairman of the committee, said he did not know if the report would be submitted. He does not sit on the board.

By KEN DRUSHKA

Academic Vice-President Dr. Moffat St. Andrew Woodside said he did not know either. Neither did Doug Ward, SAC president.

As the situation exists now, the SAC is responsible to the board, which has power over all financial decisions. The board also hires the SAC's permanent staff members.

Last summer the SAC selected R. S. Rawlings as its business administrator, but his appointment has not been made final pending the committee's report and the board's decision.

The SAC was established by the U of T Act, to represent the students to the board. The brief stated that "it is incongruous that such a representative committee should receive its duties and responsibilities from that very Board to which it is a representative."

Instead, the duties and responsibilities of the SAC should derive directly from the students and the constitution the students have agreed upon, the brief continued.

When the SAC submitted the brief last year, the recommended constitution changes were accepted by Caput. But then Frank Stone, administrative vice-president, referred the brief to the board, which set up the special committee.

The SAC requested, but was refused, a seat on this committee. No reason was given for the refusal.

The then SAC finance commissioner, John Hayes, charged Mr. Stone with obstruction, treating students like infants and insulting the Caput.

Since that time there has been silence on the part of both the SAC and the board in anticipation of the committee's report.

Model MPs seek less homosexuality

Government and official opposition of the University of Toronto Model Parliament collaborated Tuesday to pass a Liberally amended New Democrat resolution on defence.

The resolution, calling for sweeping changes in Canada's defence policies was passed by a 74-25 vote. In the past such resolutions have been talked out and not brought to a vote.

Monday night Governor-General Moffat St. Andrew Woodside officially opened the first session of the annual parliament, presided over by Speaker Lucien Lamoreux, deputy speaker of the House of Commons.

The speech from the throne called for Canada's active support of the admission of the People's Republic of China to the United Nations.

Confederation and a proposed "civil service college" also came up for discussion. But possibly more interest was paid to the suggestion that legislation allowing federal prisoners to be visited by their "legal mates" would help to "decrease the incidence of homosexuality so prevalent in our prison system."

Opposition leaders expressed disappointment with the throne speech.

Communists presented a new national flag—a green maple leaf superimposed on red and white triangles. It was voted down.

NDP member Brian Watson (II UC) touched on the issue of separatism, saying that although five years ago he would have said Canada had one flag, one queen, it is now necessary to recognize the French fact.

Forty members of the Engineering Society Brute Force Committee proclaimed the Model Parliament dissolved during the afternoon session and stated that they had executed a coup d'etat.

The Engineers appeared in the Debates Room Gallery and showered the chamber with copies of a proclamation which declared the parliament dissolved and named a new administration for the "territory of Canada".

Among those named to this revolutionary council were Hal Banks, Minister of Labor, Judy Lamarsh, Chief Midwife; Marsh Jeanneret (formerly of the U of T press), Minister of Finance; and Eddie Shack, Minister of Education.

John Cowan opened the Tuesday night session with a speech calling for logical, coherent defence policies.

But during the ensuing debate, both members and spectators left the House, returning only for the vote.

Fear African chaos

By GEORGE BRYANT

"Unless a multi-racial society is achieved in Africa, it is headed for chaos."

Blair Fraser, overseas editor of Maclean's magazine speaking last night on The Risks of Independence in Africa, claimed that mankind has never achieved a multi-racial society on earth, and that only in Africa is such a society necessary.

"The most essential problem is between the black people and the brown,—not the Europeans," he said. "Indians now exercise a monopoly over all distribution systems in East Africa."

"If the offending races are driven out, the economy of Africa will go back to the 19th century." The population of Africa has exploded to the point that a pre-20th-century society cannot support it, Mr. Fraser explained. There will be great famine and death when this exodus occurs, he predicted.

Mr. Fraser said that "being optimistic about the future of Africa demands almost a super-human effort from the leaders of the African countries."

Secret notes revealed

"Talk! Talk! Talk! Is that all you do when there are breads around?"

This was typical of the personal notes passed by members at the Tuesday afternoon session of the Model Parliament. Other examples include:

"Mike Levine: Does the gov't favor exporting Gelfite fish to the Arabs? Jules Kvo-nis."

"Try me—just for the 'Halibut'."

"The level we are trying to attain is a horizontal one. In this we have encountered a fair degree of success."

"We have been locked in by the Engineers."

"Wilf: Yes but is Gordon Churchill a symbol of nationality and moderation?"

"Michael Dear: You must speak—I'm waiting with bated breath to hear your silver-tongued oratory—If you don't, I'll—I'll—I'll just DIE! Your ardent admirer and friend Karin."

"Mary—Do you intend to support us on the speech from the throne? Without it our government will be forced to resign. Michael."

"Roads from igloo to igloo. A kayak for everyone. Two seals in every garage. One (illegible) bonnet on every hatrack. Vive Alvin Hamilton. (Signature illegible.)"

"There's nothing wrong with the NDP that a few centuries off evolution wouldn't cure."

The Varsity needs a copy runner whose pay will be from $25 to $30 a week.

The job involves driving from our office to our press three or four times a night, in your own car or motorcycle, Sundays, Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Between trips you can study in the calm Varsity office or in the nearby library.

See Editor Ken Drushka or Executive Editor Alan Walker for further details.

Skates above ice

Stilts on ice are part of a new act in the ice frolics '64. Jamie Riddell, a native of St. Catharines, is going to demonstrate his specialty, stilt-skating.

He uses special skates which are built up until he rides about three feet above the ice in difficult and dangerous manoeuvres.

Other ice show performers are winners in their fields.

Junior pairs champs Susan and Paul Heunegard, also winners of the Canadian fours championship, are appearing in the ice frolics too.

Good seats are still available for the ice frolics, Fri. Jan. 31, at 75 cents, and the Brothers Four concert, Sunday, Feb. 2, at $1.25.

Secret hearings

This week's SAC university committee hearings are not open to interested students and reporters.

The reason? They're being held in Simcoe Hall, of course.

Afternoon hearings today will be held with members of the administration, who have requested the sessions be closed.

"They may have something to say to us they don't want the student body to know yet," committee director Don Rogers (II UC) told The Varsity last night.

Open hearings resume Friday at 2 p.m. Students wishing to submit a brief may do so by contacting Rogers. Further sessions will be held next week, if necessary.

Need more books

Two thousand text-books so far, but 4,000 still to be rounded up before Friday.

That is Tuesday's progress report on the University of Toronto World University Service's five-day book drive.

Annabeth Doyle, chairman of the WUS gifts-in-kind committee, said that "while faculty members have responded generously, much greater support must come from students if the drive is to be a success."

"So far," she went on, "we have collected almost no money with these books." She explained that the 10 cents per book which WUS is asking for covers book freight costs. One dime sends one book overseas.

Eric Luks (flatteringly shown indeed) and Anna Beth Doyle shovel books into the WUS van. (See story on this page).

Will ease hunger

A campaign for freedom will be staged by the University of Toronto Student Christian Movement Wednesday.

The campaign is in aid of the Student's Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee (usually shortened to SN-ICK), the student-run civil rights organization working in the South.

SCM plans to issue SNICK buttons to U of T sympathizers at $1 each.

Germ of the SNICK movement at U of T was planted by Tom Wakayama, a University of Western Ontario student who interrupted his studies to crusade with student canvassers in the South in the Negro voter-registration drive last summer.

Long fees lineup

If you found it hard to pay your fees at Simcoe Hall Monday, you weren't the only one. But the line up told you that, too.

If they hadn't paid full fees in September (and lots didn't), about 14,389 undergraduates and graduates will have queued up this month when the last faculties pay their fees Saturday.

Arts and Science students at University and New Colleges kept two cashiers busy all day Monday. Artsmen at the other federated colleges were able to pay at their own college.

Not all students in line were paying fees. Many were confused about the procedure in picking up bursaries.

Type B bursaries are not expected to arrive until next month.

More student loans

The federal government intends to move ahead this year with its proposals for a national scholarship and loan fund, External Affairs Minister Martin has announced.

Lecture on acting

This year's Edgar Stone Lecture in drama will be given by Prof. Daniel Seltzer of Harvard University, on Thursday at 4:30 p.m. in Hart House.

The subject of his talk will be Styles of Elizabethan Acting: Methods of Research and Some Conclusions.

Display at ROM

For a small outlay, you can take microphotographs of chemical crystals at home.

The results of this colorful science — as taken by a master of the art — are on display at the Royal Ontario Museum until Feb. 9.

Playboy is anti-sexual

By GEORGE BRYANT

Although Playboy magazine is fascinated with sexuality, it is really anti-sexual, a minister said last week.

Rev. George Hopton, addressing a Student Christian Movement lunch seminar on Playboy's "Doctrine of the Male," explained that Playboy, "avoided the co-humanity necessary to be serious about sex."

"Playboy is the mass media representative of a large peer group of university students and young executives who have leisure time and have had an identity crisis."

Mr. Hopton said SCMs were told that throughout the magazine there is a consistent message of how to be the perfect playboy. He is a skilled consumer of sports cars, liquor and clothes, but he must not be too attached to styles.

Another item of consumption is sex — a girl is indispensable to the playboy at leisure. But Playboy advises she must be kept within the entertainment — only field.

Mr. Hopton showed the Playmate of the Month to the enthused SCMs and said that "she is the symbol par excellence of Playboy sex, for she may be folded when not in use. . . Playboy girls are unreal — they're unlike any I've ever met."

Mr. Hopton showed a cartoon picturing packaged frozen girls in a supermarket. "The Playboy girl is detachable and disposable," he commented.

Mr. Hopton concluded: "There is no viable society built on this myth of the consumer and the consumed. We need mutual relationships between male and female."

To hold federal seminar

The Current Canada seminar to be held Feb. 14-16 will bring together a number of top men in their fields to discuss the question of Confederation. Kevin Keough (III SMC) CUS campus rep announced yesterday.

Among those officiating or attending will be controversial Douglas Fisher, M. P., Peter Gzowski of Maclean's Magazine, Bord Laskin of the U of T Law School, Charles Taylor from McGill, Frank Scott of McGill and chairman of the Royal Commission on Biculturalism and Bilingualism (who will only observe and be available for questions), and outspoken René Lévesque of the Quebec Legislature.

The keynote speech outlining the basic problems of Confederation will be delivered on Friday night in Carr Auditorium. A panel discussion chaired by Mr. Fisher and Prof. Laskin will follow on Saturday afternoon in the Elmsley East Common Room on the political and economic aspects of Confederation.

There will be a similar panel discussion Sunday afternoon chaired by Peter Gzowski on the social and cultural aspects. Smaller seminar groups will follow.

Students can pick up application forms in the SAC office for the seminar. Registration forms should be in by Friday.

Most oppose 'White Book'

The Varsity asked members of the Hillel Foundation to comment on recent statements made here concerning the United Jewish Appeal "Honour Roll."

Sample reactions are: George Blackburn (II UC): I am in favor of charities using these aggressive advertising campaigns because I feel it is the only way they will get the funds they require.

David Rapoport (IMeds): I am not in favor of it (the White Book.)

Joel Miller (III SPS): I don't think the White Book is a reason for not giving, but the ideal way of giving is anonymously.

Barbara Grossman (II UC): The principle behind the book is wrong.

Frank Mintz (I UC): I would feel no pride in seeing my name in it.

Ira Gluskin (IV UC): It's an atrocious symbol of today's society.

Paul King (IV UC): I am not in favor of the book, but I don't think The Varsity should have printed the edi-

Sharon Mandel (I FdSc): I believe it is a form of extortion but I would like to think that they could get money some other way.

Judy Silver (I UC): I am in favor of it because it defeats the spirit of charity.

Rhoda Albaum (I PHE): I don't think it is the best idea, but at the moment there is no better way.

Darkroom space is running short as photographers across campus get ready for the annual Hart House exhibition of photographs, by members opening Feb. 17.

Deadline is 6 p.m., Feb. 14. Entries are to be submitted to the hall porter.

Color prints are so far just for exhibition purposes. No award has been assigned as yet this year.

Black and white prints, color slides, campus photos and photographic essays will compete for prizes at the exhibition.

obstacles to action

Events on two levels of student government during the past week have indicated a lack of satisfaction with existing student government activities and a widespread desire to move into new spheres.

During the university committee hearings now being conducted by the Students' Administrative Council, proposals have been submitted that include student representation on the board of governors and Senate, student financed housing, a credit union with banking facilities, a psychiatric service and a medical service.

At the Canadian Union of Students' conference in Hamilton last weekend, the structure of the Ontario region of the union was vastly altered to facilitate student action on the provincial level.

The ideas and proposals which have appeared on this campus are not unique; they are cropping up on campuses all across the country. In total, they represent a general decline in the frivolous activities so long associated with university students, and an ascendancy of responsible actions on the part of responsible persons.

But at most universities, and in the country as a whole, there exist two main obstacles to the implementation of this type of student action.

The first is the lack of people in student government with ideas, initiative and the will to work. The second is the type of system in which most student governments are forced to operate.

The first problem can be relieved with the recognition by student bodies that student government need not be an object of derision and beneath their notice.

Until the persons with ideas and the willingness to implement them discover that their best channel of action lies with student government, and until other students support these persons, students in this country and at this university will not be full citizens of the community to which they belong.

The problem of overcoming or changing the system in which student governments operate is a more complicated question. Most student governments, including the one on this campus, work within a framework best suited to the administration of tea dances.

The system frustrates the implementation of such plans as credit unions and student-run housing projects. But the University of Toronto student government structure is largely controlled by the board of governors, just as it is at other universities.

Before students can assume their roles of responsible citizens in an academic community, they will need to have this structure changed.

At the U of T, as elsewhere, there are a few students on the SAC who realize the problems and the obstacles which frustrate the actions they wish to carry out. But there is a need for more students of this type on the SAC; and there is a need for support for these students from the entire student population in order that the changes can be made and the ideas carried out.

an unfortunate move

The students' council of Waterloo Lutheran University has resigned from the Canadian Union of Students.

The council's stated reasons were that it felt it was not getting its money's worth from the CUS. It also felt the union was acting on matters in a method it did not agree with.

The Waterloo council sent only one person to the CUS conference at Edmonton in September. It was at this conference where CUS policy was determined. In addition, there were no Waterloo delegates at the Ontario region conference last weekend.

It would appear that the Waterloo council's criticism may be based on a lack of knowledge of CUS aims and activities.

It is unfortunate that the Waterloo council should withdraw from CUS on what appears to be such scanty knowledge.

THE PROBLEMS OF UNIVERSITY GOVERNMENT

By KEN DRUSHKA

The creation last week of the provincial department of university affairs represents the latest step in the series of delicate negotiations which have been going on behind closed doors on the question of university-government relations in Ontario.

The full implications of this development are not yet clear, and they will only become clear as the department takes form and begins its actual operations.

But an indication of what might happen, and the importance of the department can be found in events which have led to the creation of the new ministry.

The University of Toronto Act of 1966 made provision for a board of governors, which was invested as the supreme governing body of the university. However, the act did not establish the precise relationship of the board with the government.

The purpose of the board was to provide a buffer between the government and the university. Until recent years it apparently served this function well.

VAGUE ARRANGEMENT

From that time until 1961 the working relationship of the university with the government was a vague arrangement between the university and the government as a whole. A clear channel of responsibility and communication was never evident.

Because of the increased problems which appeared with the expansion crisis, an advisory committee on university affairs was established by Queen's Park in 1961. But this committee was not responsible to any particular department; and its secretary, John McCarthy, was a civil servant in the department of education.

Since 1961 the financial requirements of the universities have continued to increase. While the conflicts created by the requirements of the individual Ontario universities were somewhat alleviated by the advisory committee, it soon became evident that the committee was not enough.

With the increased government spending on university education, the precise role of the government in this field came under close scrutiny, and the question of university autonomy assumed more importance. If the government was going to be financing the universities, how much of a voice should it have in the general administration of the universities?

Last summer Dr. Claude Bissell, U of T President, termed this problem one of the biggest facing the academic community today.

Just before Christmas Dr. Bissell said that while the board of governors had once served a buffer role between the university and the government, today's problems had placed the situation in a different context.

EXTERNAL PRESSURES

Last summer Dr. Bissell said he did not know how long a government could resist pressures to exert control over the universities, and he questioned whether a university president was an adequate safeguard in protecting the university from external pressures.

But Dr. Bissell then expressed his belief that the universities would survive, not so much by political means, as by their own inner cohesiveness. He pointed out that the highly influential and powerful alumnus body of more than 90,000 graduates offered some degree of protection.

He also said that a partnership basis of operation between faculty, administration and students would lead eventually to the creation of a greater sense of community within the university, and that this cohesive community would be able to protect itself.

But as has been pointed out in previous articles this sense of community and the cohesiveness does not exist.

Recently the fear of university administrators was that they would come under department of education control, as was never quoted so, Dr. Bissell himself said to say on more than this was his great fear.

The fear was of education, staff, school-trained civil servants not be able to cope with the problems of the universities. There was also the operation through which would be more of a street, leaving the more closely controlled.

But last week the throne, the government's intention to control the university.

Details of the new government, and one released was that probably be Education Minister, a former minister of the throne speech proposals for the crown corporation universities in their programs.

Snick leads fight for votes

By TONY BOND

'One man—one vote' is the African cry. It is ours too. It must be ours.

This was the theme of a speech at the massive summer civil rights march on Washington. The speaker was John Lewis, chairman of the Students' Non-violent Co-ordinating Committee affectionately known as Snick, and he was expounding his organization's aims in the civil rights movement.

The Washington march was the climax to the historic events of summer 1963 in the deep south. In the peaceful interval since the march, followers for the civil rights cause have been sought far from the area of the south itself.

A cause in point is Tom Wakayama, 22, a University of Western Ontario student, who has interrupted his studies to crusade for Snick in Canada. Aside from working at Atlanta headquarters, Wakayama is in the process of setting up a Friends of Snick organization at Western.

Their aim, says Wakayama, is to "support southern students in their struggle." At a University of Toronto meeting of the Temporary Committee on Student Action just before Christmas, Wakayama outlined Snick's work and aims in the south, with the purpose of drumming up enough financial and moral support to form a

Snick is a student-run civil rights organization which was founded in October, 1960, following the historic lunch counter sit-ins of that spring. Since 1962, Snick has worked solely in the field of voter-registration in the deep south's Black Belt (Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, Arkansas and Virginia).

There are 137 counties in the Black Belt where the Negro has a numerical majority but merely a token political representation.

The Negro voter, by being allowed to vote in these white-dominated areas, would oust the white southern Democrats who currently wield a vastly disproportionate amount of influence in Congress and in so doing effect a fundamental political change in United States politics. For this reason the south is fighting Negro voter-registration with everything in its power, both legally and illegally.

According to James Forman, Snick's executive secretary, their greatest task is in persuading the Negro that he in fact has the right to vote.

"Negroes throughout the south have been brainwashed into thinking that voting is none of their business."

Snick is not a membership organization but "an agency attempting to stimulate and foster the growth of local protest movements. Workers are taught nonviolence as the combat violence. If they do not answer, they are attacked, they are jailed, they are possible, and if they appeal.

A prospective Negro has still to pass several tests designed to illiterate southern pi, for example, who made virtually no

For example: In a statement on the creation of the new department, New Democratic Party leader Donald MacDonald said: "... the establishment of a more full-time personnel in the department of education to provide the necessary leadership, liaison and coordination would be preferable."

In the last provincial election campaign, Liberal leader John Wintermeyer said that if the Liberals were elected, every high school graduate with a 50 per cent average or higher would be admitted to university.

In a speech of the University of Ottawa in November Mr. McCarthy suggested that the universities must work toward ending the conflict created by the public's expectation of what the universities should do in this changing period, and the universities own view of their functions in society.

In effect, Mr. McCarthy warned the universities that unless they shape up they will have some of their freedom curtailed by the government.

These sentiments were echoed by Premier Robarts in his university policy statement last March. He also took the occasion to rap the knuckles of some university faculties.

"The government does not look with approval on any university requiring unreasonably high standards of admission," he said.

"It is our view that the admission standards should be such as to enable the average student to proceed to a degree," the premier stated.

The same day the premier said that the Ontario government had granted $70,000,000 to the universities for 1963. Mr. Wintermeyer retorted by stating that the universities had requested $97,000,000.

In October at York University, Premier Robarts said it was his belief that "our people have the right to ask our universities to spend their money with the greatest discretion so that they might feel that the sacrifices are not all one-sided."

It is with these statements in mind that the relations between the universities and the government must be considered. This is also the view the U of T administration and Dr. Bissell have — in addition to the knowledge that there is a slight schism within the university — when they try to determine the position of the universities.

An integral part of the Snick organization and its best propagandists are the Freedom Singers, a folk-singing quartet, who have given more than 100 fund raising concerts and who now rank among the best folk singers in the United States.

Occupational hazards of Snick field workers include nervous breakdowns which are the inevitable result of police hounding and brutality as well as the constant fear of possible attack by white "hops." In one instance of blatant violence involving a local sheriff, executive secretary Forman, in desperation, filed suits against the Attorney-General and the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in this case the only possible means of obtaining protection.

Martin Luther King, the universally recognized leader of the civil rights movement, recently forecast the role of the student in the civil rights movements to come: "I'm thinking now in terms of thousands and thousands of people. They would have to be students, mainly because, for financial reasons, working adults find it difficult to remain in jail."

departmental control and is composed chiefly of persons with intimate knowledge of universities and their conventions.

Whether the Ontario crown corporation will be set up along these lines remains to be seen. The membership of both the corporation and the department are obviously of great importance to the universities.

Negotiations between the committee of presidents of the provincial universities, which is headed by Dr. Bissell, and the provincial government were carried out since mid-fall until just before the throne speech.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

However, the tone of these negotiations is an unknown factor. Because all participants are reluctant to talk, it is hard to determine precisely what each side wants. Dr. Bissell declined to comment on the situation on Dec. 20, and would only say that negotiations were being conducted.

But it has since been revealed that the creation of the new department and corporation was not necessarily the reaching of an amiable agreement.

It is reported that Dr. Bissell and another prominent university president were called in by Premier Robarts a few days before the throne speech and presented with the department and crown corporation on a take-it-or-leave-it basis.

What are the areas in which the government could interfere in university autonomy? In a report prepared by the Robbins committee on higher education in Britain, six general areas were outlined: staff appointments; the setting of curricula and standards; the admission of students; the balance between teaching and research; the freedom of development; and the salaries and staffing ratios.

The reality of these dangers in the Ontario context are evident in the statements of provincial politicians, many of whom appear to mean well.

state voter registration law requires that the applicant be able to read and write and interpret any part of the 285 clauses of the state constitution. Finally the registrar has arbitrary power to decline any applicant. Snick holds classes for prospective voter-registrants.

Known Snick key workers, when arrested, are sometimes held on huge bail which on occasion may run to $10,000 or more.

Snick field workers are mainly students who have either permanently or temporarily interrupted their studies to work for civil rights. They are paid subsistence wages (while there are funds) and live with Negro families in the neighborhood they are canvassing. About 10 per cent of the workers are white and this proportion swells to 50 per cent during summer vacation.

A typical Snick operation consists of a student going into a Negro neighborhood "cold turkey" and without funds to put himself into the hands of the local inhabitants. After, a while, when the deep-seated suspicion of "foreigners" has been overcome — there are harsh reprisals such as the loss of a job or beatings for harboring "political agitators from the north" — a Negro family will take him in.

This becomes his local base of operations. He then seeks to establish contact with the different organizations in the neighborhood, including the church. Paradoxically, it is the

UC Redmen drop behind Victoria

by AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Victoria College Scarlet and Gold moved into a one-point lead over University College Redmen in Group I interfaculty hockey yesterday as they defeated St. Mike's A, 3-1 UC still has a game in hand.

Phil Rimmington, Jeff Maybee and Mike Jones hit for Vic. Barry MacDougall counted for the Irish.

Vic II played to a 3-3 tie with Meds A in Group II. Rick Wardell tallied two for Vic. Al Major added the third. Bob Bear, Dave Ewing and Bob Smith scored for the docters.

Group III action saw PHE II move into first place with a 4-2 win over Jr. Skule, while Pharmacy A edged UC II, 3-2.

INTERMEDIATE DOINGS:
SPS VIII 5, Vic VI 2; SPS X 5, SPS IX 5; Vic IV 1, Vic V 0; SPS I 3, Dent B 2; Trin E 4, SPS XI 2.

College cage scorers do a repeat

As far as the senior inter-collegiate basketball scoring race is concerned, it's 1963 all over again. The players who filled the top three spots on the scoring ladder last season, Tom Williamson, Dave West and Jerry Raphael, are once again dominating the league.

Williamson, the six-foot guard for Western Mustangs, is leading the league with a 25.7-point average through three games. Williamson won the title last season, averaging 22.4 points.

Varsity Blues' guard Dave West is second to Williamson once again, averaging 25 points per game through two contests. And Raphael, Waterloo Warriors' centre, is back in third place with a 23.5-point average through four games.

Windsor Lancers, defending champions who are undefeated in four league games, once again are showing balance and scoring depth although they don't have one exceptional marksman. Four Lancers are in the top 10 scorers, Bob Horvath, Bernie Friesmuth, Bill Brown and Joe Green.

The only rookie in the top 10 is forward Jim Daly of McMaster Marauders, averaging 15.3. Daly, from Hamilton, played for McMaster's intermediate team last season.

Varsity centre Ed Bordas is eighth in scoring with a 13.5 average. Bordas averaged 13.2 points last season.

	GP	Pts.	Avg.
Tom Williamson, West	3	77	25.7

BASKETBALL

St. Mike's A moved into a three-way tie for top spot in Group I, edging Sr. Skule, 47-44.

Tony MacGinnis and Ray Schaedler paced the Double Blue with 12 and 11 points respectively. Jim Metcalfe was high man in the game, pumping in 20 points for the losers. Grant Leishman had 12 for SPS.

Viido Worang continues to be a one-man wrecking crew for Jr. Skule. Worang hit for 17 points to lead SPS to a 38-26 win over St. Mike's B. Jr. SPS has now won three straight games during which span Worang has counted 52 of his team's 103 points.

BASKETBALL BUMB-LINGS: UC V over SMC E (default); Vic III 30, Gull Surveyors 22; Wycliffe 31, Forestry A 24; Vic IV 36, UC IV 23.

WATER POLO

New College edged Trinity A, 5-4, as Bob Kellerman counted four goals for the winners and Dave Beatty got two for Trinity.

Architecture A got by Knox, 3-2, in another close battle while Pharmacy topped Forestry, 6-5.

Pre-Meds II slaughtered SPS III, 14-0. Jurgen Kontor outdid his teammates, scoring six times, while Kurt Zander and Ron Puley each hit for four.

INDOOR TRACK

To date the Junior 100 yds., the junior and senior 600 yds. and the 600 yds. relay have been held in this series of Wednesday contests, marked by poor participation.

Bill Conklin (I Vic) took the Junior 100 yds. in 11.6 secs. Bill Shambrook (III Vic) was second.

The Junior 600 yds. went to Doug Wiggins (II UC) in 1:21.5. Bob Manning (II UC) and Roger Sumner (IV Dents) followed.

A time of 1:20.0 was good enough to earn Rod Chintu (II Meds) a win in the Senior 600 yds.

Victoria College won the 600 yd. Relay ahead of Meds and UC.

BENSON REPORT: THE INTERFACULTY QUESTION

Women's interfaculty volleyball has come upon hard and controversial times. It is the innocent victim of a well-meaning theoretically-sound Women's Athletic Association rule. The rule states that players can only participate in one team sport a term.

The object, supposedly, is to increase participation for the many and eliminate over-participation by the few. This is a worthy objective. However its consequences at U of T have been to overpopulate one sport and completely write "finis" to another. This was illustrated in the fall when field hockey narrowed the softball league down to four teams.

Smaller faculties and colleges just don't have enough women to produce two or three complete major teams with different players on each. This same situation is evident this term as basketball and ice hockey teams have driven volleyball representatives wild trying to find enough eligible girls to play.

St. Hilda's was forced to drop out of volleyball for this reason and St. Mike's is on the verge of a similar breakdown.

This ruling then, can lead to only two alternatives: either we must have only one team sport each term or we must realize that some faculties will only be able to enter one sport a term and thus be poor contenders for the Marie Parkes Trophy.

This brings up another point. Unfortunately the people who designed this rule overlooked one small but important factor.

Although players are prevented from over-indulgence in two teams, they are not excluded from coaching or managing in some other team sport during the term. This seems to defeat the original purpose of the rule.

In essence, it is saying, "Sally you're much too busy both to wash the dishes and iron the clothes; but come around tomorrow and your can teach Joan how to iron the clothes after you've finished the dishes."

There is, as one might say, a general flavor of mild decay. It is hoped that the Women's Athletic Directorate, which is now in the process of making a long-needed revision on the old W.A.A. constitution, will seriously consider this ruling.

Duelling may be a relic of the past but fencing is here to stay.

On Saturday, Varsity fencers took foil in hand and showed two teams from McMaster and McGill how the sport should be played. Using electrical judging equipment the fencers repeated their 1963 performance by defeating McMaster, 14-2, and McGill, 11-5.

Veterans Donna Atkinson and Jean Mackworth came through undefeated while Debbie Webster and Carolyn Hale won nine of their 16 bouts.

The girls will be venturing to McGill for the Intercol finals, February 8.

First college indoor track meet

More than 140 athletes entered create problems for Hal Brown

By UNCLE HARRY

While Toronto track fans are scurrying down to Maple Leaf Gardens to purchase ducats for Friday evening's Tely-MLG Games, more than 140 college athletes are preparing for the afternoon show — the first annual university indoor track meet.

And college meet promoter Hal Brown claims he's been swamped with entries. To date he has received entry blanks from 10 Canadian universities and four American colleges, and competitors are coming from as far as Acadia University in Nova Scotia.

The avalanche of eager performers ensures a successful and highly-contested meet for Brown, but it also presents the 1960 Canadian Olympic coach with a heats headache.

Brown has received a whopping 27 entries for the 300-yard run, 19 for the 600, and 18 for both the 1,000 and 50-yard runs. And the tightly-banked cedar circuit at the Gardens has but four lanes. Competitors for the 300 may have to run as many as three sudden-death sounds.

The meet is loaded with quality too. OQAA sprint champ and Hec Phillips Trophy winner Frank Baines of McMaster in the 50 yards, and Western's internationalist Hylke Van der Wal in the mile run are but two of the meet's potential stars.

Leading the Blues and White contingent is twice OQAA high jump champ Craig Cook. Cook faces his toughest opposition in Al Sturkey of Buffalo State. Another jumping duel pits Blue's Matty Raudoja against Wayne State's Kari Kilpelainen in the vault.

Blues have also entered Jarma Saalovara and Tim Purves in the shot put, Bill Conklin and Roger Veale in the 300 yards, Veale and Doug Wiggins in the 600 yards, and Gurstin Dacks and Bob Richards in the 1,000 yards.

The college meet commences at 1:30 p.m. Friday at the Gardens. Admission is 50c.

On the Infield: Cactus Jack McManus yesterday gave Games invitational 3-mile performer Albie Thomas a tour of Hart House. Said Australian Albie of Toronto's record 46 degree temperature: "This weather doesn't feel as cold as I expected it would be."

Blues' coach Fred Foot has entered his U of T mile relay quartet in the open college mile relay in the evening Games. As a result, neither Mike Baird nor Rod Chintu will compete in the afternoon.

HYLKE VAN DER WAL
Western track ace.

LOSS OF PASSI FORCES LINE SHUFFLING

Mop Line gone--'Triple M' Line here

By GORD BELLMORE

A wholesale shuffle of Varsity Blues' forward lines has been coach Joe Kane's reaction to the events of the past weekend.

Worried over his team's scoring slump, Kane had been contemplating changes, but the loss of all-star left winger Ward Passi for the remainder of the season made the moves necessary. Passi suffered a broken leg in the game against Montreal Saturday.

The loss of Passi, however, means more than just the loss of one very talented player. It also signals the end of Blues' "Mop Line." This trio, Steve Monteith, Sonny Osborne and Passi, was regarded as the best forward combination in Canadian college hockey.

To help soften the blow of Passi's loss, veteran Stu McNeil has volunteered to rejoin Blues, despite his heavy study load in his final year of Medicine. McNeil, the former pro who was an all-star defenceman last season, will return to his familiar centre spot on a line with Steve and Hank Monteith. This will be Kane's new "Three M" line.

Kane feels that the Monteith brothers are the right mates for McNeil who is a smooth playmaker, but who will require a game or two to regain his best form. Hank Monteith will be shifted from centre to left wing, where he can utilize his boisterous checking to advantage.

Osborne, the remaining member of the Mop line, will take over Hank Monteith's centre spot between veteran George Olah and rookie Don Fuller, who are having scoring troubles.

Kane recalled last year when he shifted Osborne between Jesse Weller and Gord Cunningham, who were also in a scoring slump. With Osborne at centre, the "Cow" line scored 16 goals in four games. Osborne has been having his own troubles this year and the change may result in more goals from all three.

The third line is once again up in the air. There are six players available for the three spots and Kane will decide on the starters before Friday's game here against Waterloo Warriors.

Stray Shots — Rookie forward Austin MacKay is nursing a sore shoulder picked up on the weekend. It is not known if he'll be ready for Friday's game. . . Kane is looking at two more chatters from the interfaculty league. One is St. Mike's forward Pat Monahan. . . Defence-men Ken Thompson and Doug Peacock of Waterloo appear to be the Howie Young-Reg Fleming combination of the intercollegiate league. Each has picked up a game misconduct and Peacock has 37 minutes in penalties in five games. Peacock was involved in a fight with McGill's Dave Kerr last week which erupted into a brawl. The fight started while Peacock was heading for the dressing room after being given a major penalty for high-sticking, a 10-minute misconduct and a game misconduct. Most of the McGill players left their bench to take part in the donnybrook. . . Bobby Apps of McMaster maintained his three-point lead in the scoring race.

SCM ponders 'blue' film showing

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

A film being considered for showing on the University of Toronto campus has been banned at McMaster University.

Produced by University of British Columbia students, the film called The Bitter Ash has been called obscene because of a scene showing an act of sexual intercourse.

It was to have been presented by the McMaster Film Society.

Dr. H. G. Thode, president of the university, forbade the showing on the grounds that it is an illegal movie, since it has not been passed by the board of censors.

The film was screened at U of T Wednesday evening by members of the executive of the Student Christian Movement to decide whether they should sponsor its presentation on this campus.

As not all members were in attendance no final decision will be reached until a general council meeting next Tuesday.

Most of those who saw the film were in favor of sponsoring it, but no definitive statement will be available until next week.

The film is good for a first attempt at movie making. The photography improves in quality as the movie progresses.

It deals, as do so many other films these days, with young people living their life with no meaning, no purpose. But a great work of art it is not.

It was produced on a budget of $5,000 by Larry Kent (III Arts — UBC) and about 60 other UBC students.

The actors are semi-professionals from the UBC drama school.

By the Theatres Act of Ontario, the board of censors has the power to censor any film shown in the province, no matter to whom or where, said Mr. G. Belcher, office manager of the board of censors.

When asked if the board would exercise its powers in this case he stated, "You're asking a hypothetical question. I can't say."

Odd voting at SAC

By DON SMITH
Varsity SAC Reporter

The Students' Administrative Council used its extraordinary voting procedure for the first time this year Wednesday night.

The procedure was called for during voting on a resolution to send $25 for the legal defence of three University of Indiana students charged after they attended a meeting at which a Negro officer of the Young Socialist Alliance supported the Negroes' right of self-defence in their struggle for equality. The resolution was passed overwhelmingly.

Under the special procedure, each college for faculty rep casts as many votes as there are students registered in his college. Where a college has two reps the votes are split between them.

The vote came after council had passed a motion to sponsor a meeting at which one of the students will explain the issues of the case, but a motion by Stan Adelman (II New) that council deplore the infringement of academic freedom involved was withdrawn.

Len Shore (III Law) said that to him it did not seem a pure case of academic freedom, and that council was only getting one side of the case.

Judy Scolnik (III UC), proxy for absent UC rep Diana Bennett, took the council members to task for their caution. "I had always believed that SAC was the place where something like this could or should be decided," she said. "This is pussycatism."

Another matter of SAC involvement in international affairs elicited caution from council.

Shore, chairman of the national affairs committee, raised the question of SAC support of the student government at the University of Tanganyika, Dar Es Salaam. Two years ago $1,500 was sent to the student council, while last year a like amount was budgeted but was never sent.

Varsity editor Ken Drushka (III UC) advised the council to move with caution, citing the "touchy situation" between international student groups as a reason.

Dave Beatty successfully moved to table any action on the matter until the present political situation in Tanganyika clears up and council knows in fact if the university is still functioning.

Small sums of money were dispensed to various sources. Two hundred dollars was allotted to The Varsity for Administrative expenses of sponsoring a conference of student journalists in Toronto next fall.

Another $40 went to pay for a sampling of graduate interest in The Varsity, with an eye to subscription sales as a source of revenue, and a $30 honorarium was voted to Chris Guernsey for direction of the One-Act Play Festival.

Honoraria for the staff of the All-Varsity Revue were narrowly defeated 15-14.

Committee report on SAC constitution not given

The board of governors' special committee on the Students' Administrative Council did not report yesterday.

But the reasons why it did not given were not clear.

C. A. Wright, dean of the faculty of law and chairman of the committee, said last night the committee had finished the report before Christmas.

He said he had expected the two board members on the committee, Sydney Hermant and the Hon. Mr. Justice Arthur Kelly, to present the report at the board's monthly meeting yesterday.

Neither of the two board members were available for comment.

Frank Stone, administrative vice-president who sits on the board, said the report was still in the committee stage. He said it was not on the agenda for the meeting.

The special committee was established last March to consider requests for SAC constitutional changes made in April. The changes involved the granting of financial autonomy to the SAC and giving the SAC the right to hire its own staff.

In March it was charged by several of last year's council members that proceedings were delayed until students were involved in exams and The Varsity ceased publishing.

The board holds meetings once a month, so the earliest the report can be presented is on the fourth Thursday in February.

Tuesday Mr. Justice Kelly said the committee had completed its meetings. At that time no one knew if the report would be presented.

When the committee was set up the SAC was refused a seat, and only allowed to make one presentation.

Also on the committee are academic vice-president, Dr. Moffat St. Andrew Woodside, President Claude Bissell, J. H. Sword, assistant to the president, and Robin Ross, registrar.

SAC hedges on possibility of credit union

By BOOT

The Students' Administrative Council refused Wednesday to commit themselves either to setting up a council-sponsored credit union or asking the Campus Co-operative credit union to extend its membership privileges to all students.

SAC set up a committee to study the proposals and report back to council as soon as possible.

Council President Doug Ward (III Emu) proposed that council investigate the feasibility of setting up their own union, and meanwhile asking the Co-op to extend its credit union privileges to other students.

Rare unanimity for campus politicians was displayed as Model Parliament ground into its third day Wednesday at Hart House.

The afternoon session saw resolutions on economics and education whisked through, as backroom deals were concluded by the three major parties to withdraw parts of resolutions and amendment and to accept their opponents suggestions.

The Confederation resolution passed as the house ran out of time by a 50-41 vote. It was an amalgam of the original Liberal Government resolution and three New Democrat amendments.

NDP leader Mary Brewin (II Trin.) had attempted to barter her group's support of the Confederation resolution as a whole for Government support of an NDP amendment guaranteeing equal status of French and English in all legislatures, courts, and activities of the Government in every sphere. The amendment was defeated.

Politicians in smoke-filled rooms

During the evening session much was made of the imminent, much hoped-for disappearance of Ed Roberts (III Law) from campus political life. His swan song was followed by a prolonged demonstration of enthusiasm for his return to his native Newfoundland.

'Spring' may melt palace

What's threatening the Quebec Winter Carnival is also worrying Engineers in Toronto-balm weather.

Unless the thermometer gets back down into the 20s, the ice palace for the carnival may never appear on the front campus. And a lot of dogs may drown in the St. Lawrence River.

Deny RCMP recruited spies

REGINA (CUP)—Reports that an unidentified Regina university student was asked to spy for the RCMP in December have been denied by two other people present at a meeting between the student and an RCMP officer.

He said he felt it had been a chance meeting and that the officer had made no attempt to recruit a spy.

A second observer agreed that the student had blown the matter out of all proportion. He had previously known all parties involved.

But the student refused to change his story. "Non-sense," he said. "The persons who made those statements were not present for the majority of the conversation and therefore can't make any valid judgment."

Last weekend in Hamilton, CUS President Dave Jenkins said the alleged RCMP action in Regina was being investigated by CUS, and "documented proof" was expected.

Jenkins said, if the allegation were true, it would be a direct breach of a promise made to a student delegation by Prime Minister Lester Pearson and RCMP Commissioner George McClellan on Nov. 15.

At that time, the delegation had been told the RCMP would stop enlisting students or professors as contact men to report on the political leanings of fellow students or professors, Jenkins said.

Elizabethan acting style in Hart House

By CAROL THRELFALL

"Contemporary spectators thought Elizabethan acting an absolutely realistic style," said Professor Daniel Seltzer yesterday, "but the perception of the audience was different then."

Prof. Seltzer, acting head of the Loeb Drama Centre of Harvard, spoke on styles of Elizabethan acting from his experience as critic, scholar, and actor in this field.

"The art of acting developed too quickly to be codified," he said. "The texts themselves are the only source we have of their acting style, and they must be used with both caution and imagination."

Rare printed stage directions and some implicit in the text are the only indications we have of gesture, facial expression, voice pitch and volume, dramatic pacing of speeches, and other details of style, he said.

One character may describe what another is doing or where he is in relation to others. Description of off-stage action suggests action that could take place on stage in such circumstances.

The texts suggest an enormous range of small detailed actions at once expressive and yet part of a vocabulary of external characterization, he said.

Many large gestures, considerable movement across the stage and a variety of facial expressions express character and emotion. We select different things to produce reality.

But Prof Seltzer stressed the great mixture of styles found at this time. "We should be prepared for the caprice as well as for the conservation of genius."

He ended with a warning to modern directors of Elizabethan plays: Don't necessarily feel it's a good idea to force actors to act in the Elizabethan style.

Such direction would be "archaeological" and hence "dull."

NEWS SNAPS

College leaves CUS

WATERLOO, Ont. (CUP)—The Canadian Union of Students was shaken recently by the resignation of the Waterloo University College student council.

But the resignation was not accepted by the CUS executive.

During a visit to Waterloo Monday CUS National President Dave Jenkins said, CUS is waiting for "more light to be shed on the issue".

He made a two-hour speech to council explaining the benefit of participating in CUS and the activities which CUS undertakes.

There were many complaints from Waterloo about the structure of the CUS, especially about the all-powerful and non-representative board of directors and the dual Franch and English organization.

of the international affairs committee of NFCUS, and monitor of the current SAC hearings), and SAC veteran Larry Ward.

Fare hope fades

Hopes for reduced TTC fares for U of T students have dimmed.

North York Township Councillor Gordon Hurlburt, who initiated a proposal last week to reduce fares, said last night a meeting with the TTC would probably not take place within the next two months.

A committee from the North York council was to have approached the TTC yesterday. Mr. Hurlburt said the committee had to settle details in its recommendation before it could meet the TTC.

Will play Queen

The Queen will be played in Hart House Theatre at tonight's opening of Look Back in Anger, SAC rep Don Rogers (III UC) said last night.

Rogers received notice Wednesday from Hart House Theatre's board of directors which said the board would not force either The Queen or O Canada to be played at a performance in the theatre. The choice of anthem will be left up to the producers of the individual presentations.

The board has chosen to play The Queen as its presentations in the theatre, in keeping with a quarter-century House tradition.

Extend campaign

The fund campaign of the Student Non-violent Co-ordinating Committee which was to run only on Wednesday has been extended to tonight, because of poor results.

By yesterday afternoon, only $223 had been collected by students who had volunteered to man three booths and sell SNCC buttons at $1 apiece.

Liz at Vic?

The world's most publicised modern lovers will probably be arriving in town this weekend and they may be staying on campus property.

Liz Taylor and Richard Burton are expected in town sometime before Wednesday, when Burton begins rehearsals for Hamlet at the O'Keefe Centre. No one seems to know where they will stay.

Newspapermen are keeping watch on a few city hotels and The Colonnade on Bloor St., built on property belonging to Victoria College. This property is a long term lease to the builders of the Colonnade.

Contest winners may advance to national quiz

A Canadian Inter-University Quiz Tournament is being tentatively planned, according to Don Snider (II Meds), one of the chief organizers of the university's interfaculties quiz tournament.

Winners of our own tournament could go on to wider competition," Snider said.

The tournament is starting its first match Monday. Contestants are on teams from Medicine and St. Michael's College. The contest will take place in University College, Room 106, at 1 p.m.

Spectators will be admitted until seats run out.

Team members were chosen on the basis of their scores in a written qualification quiz held last week. The five highest scores from each faculty or college formed the team, with the next several highest kept as alternatives.

Ten teams are competing in a double loss elimination for the championship.

The winning team will receive a plaque or trophy, and has the chance to compete in the as-yet-uncertain Canadian Inter-University Quiz Tournament.

The next matches will be on Thursday between Trinity and Emmanuel, and on Friday between Victoria and University College.

Watch the Varsity for schedules of future matches.

CUS conference shifts to Toronto from Windsor

The 28th national congress of the Canadian Union of Students has been shifted to Toronto, CUS chairman Kevin Keough (III SMC) told the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday.

The conference, originally planned for the University of Windsor, in the fall had to be shifted because of administrative difficulties between the U of W administration and students' council, he explained.

It will be jointly sponsored by the CUS committees of U of T, Ryerson and York, and is tentatively scheduled for Ryerson over the Thanksgiving weekend.

"The necessity of holding a congress this year is vital," said Council Vice-President Mary Pat McMahon (III SMC), "because of the structural changes voted at the last congress in Edmonton."

She explained that it had to be held in the east this year because of high travelling expenses for delegates from the Maritimes, and that Toronto was a particularly good location both because of its accessibility and accommodations, and because the resources of three separate committees could be mobilized to handle the organization and administration.

The series of articles in recent issues of The Varsity dealing with the problems of university government, and the Students' Administrative Council constitutional hearings have revealed a desire on the part of all university groups for increased autonomy and more participation in the governing process.

The administration wishes to have more control over decisions affecting the university, and a position in the governmental decision-making process.

The SAC wants financial autonomy over student funds. Others are suggesting that students have a role in the formation of academic policies; and some believe the students should have a voice on the provincial government level.

The faculty members are hopeful of obtaining a say in the appointment of their administrators, and are also asking for a position in the administrative structure of the university.

But each of these bodies is reluctant to grant any more autonomy or responsibility to those beneath them in the power structure.

The administration wants increased powers, but is unwilling to grant the same thing to students and faculty members. The teachers want more power, but many are afraid to allow students a say in academic matters. The SAC wants autonomy, but many members question the idea of granting independence to council-affiliated bodies such as The Varsity and the Blue and White society.

Much of this problem is of an institutional nature. While there are individuals in each group who realize that autonomy is a two-way street, there are many who do not. The net impression left by the group is one of reaction and conservatism.

The problems of the entire government structure are further complicated by lack of communication. Few decisions are made in the open, and the methods of the smoke-filled rooms generally prevail.

The government does not openly negotiate with the university; the administration does not openly discuss problems with faculty and students; and there is little communication between teachers and students.

All persons involved in the university governmental structure have admitted there are many problems. But until these persons are willing to admit they are not the only ones who can be counted to act in a responsible manner, and until they are willing to come out from behind their closed doors, there is very little chance the problems will be solved in a manner beneficial to the university.

Honesty and frankness also have a place in the academic community. We hope to see more of it in the future.

the sac in action

We have often criticized the Students' Administrative Council for its inaction and predilection for lengthy debates on trivial matters.

Wednesday night council spent more than five hours on a few important matters. While we do not agree with all the decisions reached, we are encouraged to see that many council members are capable of considering questions of import.

We hope the experience was not too traumatic, but would advise those who found it so to get off council and leave the way clear for those willing and able to cope with such problems.

Students need rep by pop

By BRUCE LEWIS

All hell broke loose at the SAC meeting Wednesday night!

It had been the custom for the Executive Commission to discuss all important issues before they went to Council. They would then present their own recommendations with the reasons for them. Their well thought out position, added to their great prestige and influence with the members (especially that of President Douglas Ward), almost invariably convinced Council.

This is quite natural since the members have a great deal of respect for Ward. Also, most of them had not usually heard about the issue beforehand, and thus were unable to adequately present opposing points of view. Therefore, most members kept silent. Opposing arguments were usually presented by the same few people at every meeting. These people got the reputation of being troublemakers and so their opinions were hardly likely to prevail against Ward's.

The results were twofold. Council began to rely too heavily on Executive judgments, so that important and normally controversial motions were often passed almost unanimously with little or no debate. And seemingly unimportant matters which the Executive had not carefully considered were discussed at great length in the full Council meeting, and reported in The Varsity, giving the impression that all the SAC's work was trivial.

This was changed on Wednesday. Several important policy matters were referred directly to Council. Fervent and heated debate ensued. Great principles were declaimed by some and shunted away in favour of "practical considerations" by others. Money was spent and money was saved. Tempers were frayed. In short, business pertaining to the students of the University was given the treatment and consideration it deserved, and would have gotten it had it been possible to have a meeting of all the students in person.

It is clear that the practice will continue and that the SAC and the students, will be far better off.

But though this meeting showed that the SAC as presently constituted has a great potential, it also demonstrated inherent structural weaknesses.

One example came when someone proposed to congratulate the organisers of the Friends of SNCC fund raising campaign. Someone else pointed out that the Constitution said that such campus-wide fundraising campaigns were illegal without Council's prior approval. Clearly something is wrong when the prestige of the student government is so low that no-one is sure whether Council has power to make a law, and when a law once made is completely ignored with impunity by those to whom it should apply.

An other example occurred when doubt was expressed as to whether Council was able to undertake or join in a credit union. Similarly, there was uncertainty as to whether it was Council's role to support American students involved in alleged abridgement of academic freedom.

Many students will dispute what course of action the SAC should have taken on any of the above issues. But most will agree that the student government should have the moral and actual authority to take some course of action on them. This has been repeatedly expressed in briefs to the SAC hearings which are now going on. The SAC's weakness in these areas may be traced to its weakness in another category representation and voting.

It is a truism in government that power tends to gravitate to the body most able to exercise it. Thus, in the recent Dominion-provincial conferences when the central government was relatively weak in its position and the provinces relatively strong, concessions had to be made to the provinces. But during and after the War, when the federal government was the stronger, it received the concessions and additional power. The same is true of the SAC.

If that body were a truly representative organ of all the students, with the most capable people in the University as members, all the areas which are now in dispute would naturally fall under its sway and it would be better able to exercise its power fairly.

But this is not the case. At present, each college, faculty, or school has one representative. Those with over 500 students have two reps. Thus, the Faculty of Food Sciences, which has 22 students (and pays $176. in SAC fees) has one member, while Victoria College or University College, with about 2000 members each (and $16,000 in SAC fees) have only two members each. Or to put it another way, a student in Food Sciences has 91 times as much representation as a student in UC or Vic.

These are extreme examples. But there is no doubt that small faculties, schools, and divinity schools have a great deal more weight than numbers would justify.

This system seems to be clearly inequitable and unjust. In fact, no-one ever defends it as being either just or equitable but merely as being convenient.

But it is not simply a matter of justice that is at stake here. The fact is that there are many capable people in the under-represented faculties who could contribute a great deal to the SAC. Its main deficiency is not its lack of fair representation, but its failure to take advantage of this tremendous pool of ability.

It would seem, then, that a system of proportional representation is demanded. By such a system each division of the University with under 200 students would have one representative, and the other divisions would have one representative for each 200 students. The total membership would be about 60.

The main justification for the present representation appears to be the "extraordinary" voting system. Its proponents claim that it brings justice to SAC proceedings. By this system each representative casts a number of votes equal to the number of people he represents. Thus the member for food Sciences casts 22 votes and each member for Vic casts 1000 votes.

The only trouble with this system, is that it is almost never used. It was used for the first time this year last Wednesday and a vote which normally takes 2 or 3 minutes took more than half an hour. There were four different disputes with the Speaker involving nine members of Council casting about 5000 votes. It is not likely to be used again soon. And it doesn't answer the basic objection that the present system leaves the larger schools with less of a voice in debate and doesn't get all the most capable people onto Council.

The other objection to rep by pop is that a necessarily larger Council would be "unwieldy". This contention is insupportable. There are many governing groups and organisations which operate very well with far more than 60 members. Council members are mature enough to debate in an orderly fashion and not to repeat the same arguments over and over. Only the atmosphere of Council would change. It would no longer be the friendly, warm, informal, little club it is today. We might very well be better off.

It is time we shucked off the old idea that Council, like the United Nations, should be made up of representatives from constituent sub-governments. Council's relations with the other bodies is a federal one. The colleges, schools, and faculties act on matters pertaining to their own students. The SAC acts on matters pertaining to all the students. Therefore, the SAC ought to be constituted, like the Parliament of Canada, on the basis of representatives each elected by a relatively equal number of people and in sum representing all the students, and not on the basis of delegates from the separate colleges, faculties, and schools.

Only with such a system can the Students Administrative Council ensure justice in its present activities and secure more ability in order to take on new duties and better serve the students—all the students.

Sends volunteers to north to aid Eskimo self-improvement

By PETER S. JULL

Before university students were rushing overseas to do their bit for the Africans, Asians, and assorted other unfortunate peoples, a small but ambitious Canadian organization was working on casting the mote out of our own eye.

The Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada sends from 20 to 30 volunteers to Indian and Eskimo communities in the more remote areas of the country every summer. These volunteers, university students, work without pay (all living and travel expenses are paid) for approximately three and a half months, keeping certain projects in mind but more often resorting to their own ingenuity for their cues.

Their work may include running a day-camp, helping to build roads or houses, or setting up community groups to serve recreational, social, or economic needs. The aim of the work is to encourage our native peoples to actively pursue community and individual development by means of community action. In short, the volunteers try to leave behind them the spirit, habits and framework of self-improvement organizations.

But the less tangible fruits of the volunteer program are more important. The volunteers are required to write detailed reports of the conditions and reactions they encounter. From these the Association gathers material for its information service, a free service available to anyone who cares to use it. And considerable use is made of it, because the north is still little known, despite the recent upsurge of interest.

Further, these reports are studied in Ottawa by the federal government departments concerned with the Indians and Eskimos. In the past the government has dabbled inefficiently and ineffectively with Indian affairs and hasn't even attempted a coherent program for the Eskimo. Now they are being provided with detailed first-hand material from which, let it be hoped, they will formulate policy.

The whole volunteer program is an encouraging sign of official interest — it is entirely paid for by the federal government, but administered by the Association.

The Association is quite explicit in its aims for the individual volunteer—that he will gain knowledge which he will transmit to his more sedentary compatriots, that he will continue to work for the betterment of our native peoples, that he may become interested in this work as a career.

Since the conditions amid which the volunteers work are so unpredictable, the Association is extremely rigorous in its screening of applicants. Mr. Isaac Beaulieu, Executive Secretary, told me that he looks for adaptability, ingenuity, initiative, and courage in his interviews with the applicants.

He said that rarely has there been a case of antipathy by the natives to the volunteers but often indifference and unwillingness to cooperate on the part of the local authorities make for difficulty. Here the courage and initiative of the volunteers is required to carry out their work.

Often the volunteer finds unusual circumstances and has to resort to some ingenuity to get his work done. One volunteer found that his would-be charges had all taken off into the bush for a number of weeks to pick blueberries. But his following after in a canoe instead of waiting in the village, eventually got an organized social program going literally in the middle of nowhere.

In the course of the summer the volunteers move from place to place, thus achieving a great deal with limited numbers and little time. Adventures of various kinds (eg. participating in a seal hunt, getting lost on the barren lands) are almost a certainty. The exuberance of the reports I read seem a good indication that the project is not only useful, but a hell of a good summer.

The summer volunteer project is, however, only one part of the work of the Indian-

Discrimination in U of T fraternities?

By MARY FLETCHER

As a result of a survey done last week of fraternities within walking distance of Bloor and St. George (surely as arbitrary a way as possible if picking them), interspersed with enlightening conversations in the JCR, certain facts about Toronto fraternities and discrimination became clear.

There are two possible types of discrimination which could be exercised in Toronto Fraternities: constitutional discrimination, and its more subtle companion, Blackballing. Of the Fraternities interviewed, one, Sigma Nu, has a discriminatory clause in its constitution; one, Delta Upsilon has a non-discrimination clause in its constitution; and one, Phi Delta Theta, refused to discuss matters relating to Fraternity business. All others interviewed do not mention discrimination in their constitutions. Sigma Chi got rid of its discrimination clause last year. And Pi Lambda Phi had a negro national president two years ago.

Sigma Nu is a fraternity set up by the Confederate Army boys of Lexington Virginia in 1867. Most of its chapters are south of the Mason Dixon line. It has both an anti-oriental and an anti-negro clause, and the Toronto Chapter is fighting both of these. Unfortunately the clause can only be removed by a 2/3 majority of the 136 chapters. The members interviewed said, "our chapter is going to stay with the National Convention because if we leave and all the other chapters that feel the same as we do leave too, the discrimination clause will never be removed. At least now we can exercise our vote in the matter." When asked why they joined Sigma Nu, when they did not agree with its policy they replied, "You don't join a fraternity for

Way back when, mother wondered

There's nothing wrong in being a "doubting Thomasina" about Tampax. You may feel that since you can "get along" with pads—why change?

Millions of present-day Tampax users once shared your doubts. But once they changed, it became clear to them that Tampax really does make an enormous difference. You feel so secure when odor doesn't bother you... when there can be no tell-tale outlines... when disposal isn't difficult any more... when you can't even feel your protection, once it's in place.

Tampax internal sanitary protection was invented by a doctor for the benefit of all women, married or single, active or not. We know how many of them we have sold, and we can assure you that millions of women have used billions of Tampax.

as well as aid in marketing their products.

Scholarship schemes are administered. Native organizations large and small are encouraged by moral and financial support. All sorts of economic and social problems are researched. But above all, the Association works to disseminate information and understanding.

Perhaps some may think that the work of the Association has no immediate value, that it is just a seat of empty idealism. I was assured that this is not so, and the feverish activity of the office staff was a further assurance.

While I was talking to Mr. Beaulieu, an Indian sculptor, in Toronto on business was made welcome in the office, and bantered with the secretaries over a mug of coffee. The Association is very highly regarded among those it serves, and has a continual flow of native visitors at its headquarters.

When I expressed doubt as to the value of the volunteer work, Mr. Beaulieu countered with one small example. Two girls working on a re-its policy, you join it because you like the people who are there." A block and a half earlier a Delta Upsilon member had said as we left, "I would not be a member of this fraternity if it had a discriminatory clause."

Delta Upsilon inserted a serve near Kenora found the local teachers uncooperative and totally unconcerned with the Indians' welfare. After their reports were received in Ottawa in the fall the teachers were dismissed.

Perhaps the words of a volunteer best sum up the spirit of the Association. Writing from Inuvik on the Mackenzie Delta, Patricia Kneen says: "He (the Eskimo) does not need altruism; he needs self-respect, and that does not come wrapped in charity and kind words. It comes from being useful, and only the person who understands the whole problem of the North can make him so. The South must be adapted to the North before the reverse can occur."

non-discrimination clause in its constitution in 1946; it pledged its first negro member ten years later. Yet the Toronto chapter has never had a negro member. Why not? It seems to hinge on the method of bringing members into the fraternity. "If any of us had a good friend who was a negro we would not hesitate to bring him around."

Other fraternities gave other reasons for not having negro members; there are very few negroes at the U of T; those that are here are mostly here on scholarship and they have not the money to join; many of them are doing post-graduate work and have not the time to devote to fraternity functions.

When Delta Delta Delta was asked why there were no Jewish members in the house, the president replied, "I don't know; it isn't that we don't rush them if they want to be rushed, but they don't seem to pick us." Why does Kappa Alpha have only two Jewish members, why does Pi Lambda Phi have only two Gentile members? Why are there two dentistry frats completely 'segregated' with respect to Jews and Gentiles?

To charges concerning 'hidden persuaders' or reminiscences about the effect that the memory of the Barbara Arlington incident might have on any negro girl thinking about going through rushing, the boys of Sigma Nu quote from the Wall Street Journal "In the name of Civil Rights people are being criticized for choosing their own friends."

And this brings us to the second possible way of discriminating; choosing whom to bring home in the first place, and then blackballing those who seem on somewhat longer acquaintance to be unsuitable.

Naturally no fraternity member would bring home for initiation purposes someone he did not like, but more than that the prospect has to be someone that the others will like. As one chapter president said, 'I know guys, where I used to be in residence, fabulous guys, but I wouldn't bring them here.' Why not? Any number of reasons: he would not be willing to work for the fraternity; he does not like fraternities; he does not have the right sort of character.

Well what is the proper sort of character? It seems to be a combination of intelligence, friendliness, and a desire to be cooperative. Above all it must not be 'grey'. The greys are discriminated against.

P, P & M need no intro

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

They stepped out on the Massey Hall stage last Monday without so much as an introduction. But they don't need one — everyone knows who Peter, Paul and Mary are.

Hand in hand the three young folk-singers pranced up to the mike and immediately began their first number, the rousing "Settle Down."

What followed that effective opening was a two hour folk concert of both traditional and modern songs, of humour and of tremendous rapport with the audience.

Peter (Yarrow) even attempted and succeeded in leading the sold out crowd in a round. The audience was divided into the "in" and the "out" group each singing a different part of "Rock my Soul in the Bosom of Abraham."

What surprised most people was the comic ability of Paul (Stookey). The tall, odd-looking (in college he was voted ugliest man), member of the trio entertained in a long routine with his ability to produce sound effects with his mouth.

When I heard that Stookey would attempt that I had a few qualms about it. I had heard Wes Harrison's record album in which that comedian did the same but that album consisted only of a few tired old jokes told to show off his sounds.

In contrast, Stookey's performance put humor first with sounds added only to enhance the stories. Most travelling folk-groups today take a comedian along; Peter and Mary have a fine comic in Paul.

In general the concert was a tremendous success — both financially and artistically.

The program was greatly varied: consisting of everything from Bob Dylan's moving "Don't Think Twice" to the exciting spiritual "Go Tell It On The Mountain".

It was a flaw in the concert that most of the selections were from P, P & M records. I counted only 4 new songs out of 20. And, of course, the trio's big hit parade successes were also featured. I'll admit that I like these songs but we've all heard them an infinite number of times.

Mary (Allin Travis) was in her usual good form. During the faster numbers her head flung her long blond tresses about with rhythmic abandon. During her solo of "500 Miles" the lonely spotlight on her face illuminated those same tresses until they almost sparkled.

I'm saying all this merely to prove that Mary adds a considerable amount of visual as well as musical appeal to the trio's performances. Actually to really show off her vocal talents, they should have chosen the dramatic and deeply feeling "Cruel War".

But these are merely small finicky points. An overall picture of the concert shows a varied, highly-enjoyable performance by three of the best singers in the folk-singing business today.

Blue smoke curled luxuriantly from the stone fireplace and choked the four-man audience which had flooded (I suppose it was really just a dribble) into St. Michael's College for this week's exciting Students' Administrative Council meeting.

The politicians rubbed their eyes between inconsistencies and absurdities. But they plunged recklessly on rescinding some motions, tabling others and ignoring still more.

From time to time Bruce (Torquemada) Lewis, that inquisitive enemy of the SAC, sadistically jammed another immense log on to the fire, heedless of the clogged chimney.

Clogged chimneys, clogged minds and . . .

But wait. Perhaps we are being unfair. The SAC persists in self-praise. There must be something worthwhile in student politicians. Let us examine them more closely and more sympathetically.

Indeed, by their words ye shall know them.

For instance, how could one fail to be moved by the tenderness and truly deep understanding that Richard Tan, the debating chairman, showed towards the mainly non-Arts students of Devonshire House when he arranged a debate for them with the UTDU last term.

Listen to the genuine concern Tan has for the sensitive feelings of much-maligned Devonshire people:

"Many topics have crossed my mind. After careful consideration, I believe that the following two will most suit the occasion and cater to the unique, specific 'Devonshire taste':

"1. That Devonshire House should be made officially co-educational.

"2. That the U of T should have a pub on campus."

Yes, there's sincerity in every whisper. But our ever-vigilant SAC types have other merits. Decisiveness for example.

Nancy Caldecott, music chairman, bringing to bear all the keenness of mind and independent thinking for which her native Victoria College is noted, once took this bold stroke:

"I wish to speak both for and against the motion."

(She also defined "well-known graduate students" Wednesday as "those who we know are keen.")

Don Rogers, UC male rep, also showed vivid and fearless imagination when he courageously took this stand Wednesday:

"Next year when everybody has time, we're going to have to thrash this thing out once and for all . . . because I'm sick and tired of sort of vacillating around."

The other half of the UC SAC representation, the glamorous and well-groomed (into the bargain) Diana Bennett, week-end chairman, is, in part, not totally without merit.

Hearken to the sheer poetry of her joyously optimistic initial report of the year. In these flowing sentences and well-wrought images, you will surely agree that here is another muse-blessed bard to rival Edna St. Vincent Millay or Edgar Guest:

"This year's weekend committee has mounted a charger to joust with the public image of exchange weekends. Our enemy is a many-headed monster, each head envisaged as slightly hung over, but quite devoid of the fiery tongues of truth which are supposed to motivate the tourney."

Her place in Westminster Abbey's poets' corner is undoubtedly assured.

And while on the subject of culture, who can forget Len Shore's contributions to the English language? Linguists the world over will heartily applaud his "latitudinewise" and heaven knows what else.

Turning to another SAC good point, we must delve into history to recall the bitter battle last year when the SAC begrudgingly voted $120 to Larry Ward, incoming finance commissioner, so that he could spend part of the summer without a job, using the time allegedly learning the ropes of his new job as custodian of your money.

Honesty is the best policy, is Ward's favorite joke. (His second-favorite joke is "opportunity never knocks twice" and he repeats this joke at every opportunity.)

His candor as revealed in a letter to council members which he wrote at the start of his SAC-salaried existence is remarkable and gratifying.

"During the next 2½ weeks I shall be spending my time in the SAC office under the 'Summer Salary' program for needy Wards."

The end of innocence

This gruesome little youth staring from the page could be one of the blonde, blue-eyed monsters from Village of the Damned. But he's not, just a sweet, untrained British public-school boy in the best Kipling tradition, who casts terror into the hearts of school-teachers everywhere. See this wonderful little fellow and 29 of his ilk hunt each other on a desert island and worship a pig's head in Lord Of The Flies.

"Evil is inherent in the human mind, whatever innocence may cloak it..." William Golding, one of Britain's angriest middle-aged men, strips away the veneer of civilized man, and exposes the bestiality which lies close to the surface.

Lord of the Flies is a grim tale of thirty public-school boys who are marooned on a tropical island, and in this state of nature, quickly degenerate into a pack of savages. Presumably, there is an atomic war and the boys are being evacuated from London when their plane crashes. How the boys get there is quite irrelevant; the story is concerned with their activities on the island.

The boys crawl out of the forest and assemble on the beach. Realizing the need for organization and leadership, they proceed to elect a leader. Ralph, the serious dark haired boy who called the meeting by blowing a conch, is elected Chief. He defeats Jack, the leader of a school choir, who announces his support of Ralph.

A quick survey of the island reveals that the boys are alone, but they are confident that they can take care of themselves. "After all," announces Jack, "We're not savages — we're English and the English are best at everything." They build a huge signal fire to attract passing planes and ignite it with Piggy's specs. "Piggy" is an overstuffed youngster with "ass-mar" and thick glasses, who has always been ostracized because of his physical defects. This has given him a maturity and sobriety which place him above his contemporaries.

Some of the "young 'uns" are afraid of a Beastie which they have seen on the Island. Simon, a sensitive withdrawn boy, tries to convince the others that the Beast is simply the evil within their own minds, but his suggestion is laughed off by the others.

By DAVID SECTER

Jack turns his choir into a hunting gang to kill wild pigs. They return from a safari with a fresh carcass, chanting "Kill the pig, spill her blood, bash it in". When Ralph castigates Jack for letting the signal fire go out Jack stalks away to form his own gang of hunters. They slap war paint on their faces, hunt down a wild pig, and grin with pleasure at the squeals of the tortured animal.

The pig's head is mounted on top of a high pole as a sacrifice to The Beast. A flock of insects infest the bloody head of the Lord of the Flies.

That night Jack's gang celebrates their kill with a primitive feast. In drunken frenzy, Jack identifies a moving shadow as The Beast, and Simon is massacred by his schoolmates. The following afternoon Piggy is crushed to death in sober daylight.

Ralph, alone, flees for his life. They smoke him out of his hiding place in the forest and pursue him to the beach.

He is crawling for life along the shore when he stumbles on the looming limbs of an adult. At the sight of a British naval commander, the pack of cannibals turns back into a group of homesick boys.

The film follows the novel quite faithfully until the end, where it leaves out one of the most pungent scenes. The commander assumes, naturally enough, that the boys are playing a game. "Having a war, hey? How many killed?" When Ralph responds, "Two Sir," the officer realizes instantly that these boys are playing for keeps. The film skips this scene, and loses the impact which closes the book.

The cast is composed of untrained public-school boys selected for their natural talent. This gives the film naturalness and credibility that would not have been attained had prococious child-stars been used. Ultraextreme close-ups are used most effectively. The screen is filled with a pair of brooding eyes or a wisp of unruly hair. This creates a mood of intimacy and poignancy which compels our involvement.

Director Peter Brook manages to conjure up the same haunting horror which pervades Golding's novel. There is nothing exceptional about this group of kids. Their microcosmic island represents the entire civilized world. The morality of the marooned schoolboys is symbolic of the ethics of modern adult society. This fact makes Lord of the Flies one of the most crucial books and movies of our time.

A true Canadian saga

By SALLY NESS

The Drylanders, is a landmark in Canadian film-making. It is significant, not only because it is Canada's first feature-length film, but because it sets a standard of quality and a direction for the future.

The National Film Board relied on honesty, simplicity and realism, and succeeded in making the film infinitely more Canadian in atmosphere than totem poles, beavers and Mounties all together ever could. It is a western that the West believes (more than a million have seen the film west of the Lakehead).

Devoid of glamor, it is sharply photographed in black and white (a true indication that the N. F. B., so proficient in color panorama intend this as drama). Camerawork is keyed to the emotion of the film, not overwhelmed by the wonder of the Canadian landscape.

Historically authentic, the film traces the evolution of a family in Saskatchewan, from the time of settlement through thirty years until rain brings an end to the tragic dust-bowl years of the Depression.

The settler (James Douglas), his wife (Frances Hyland), and two small sons arrive in the middle of an endless grassy plain, with only a cart and oxen. Helped by distant neighbours, the father, inexperienced, but hopeful, builds a sod hut and begins to work his land. The mother, homesick, depressed, sustained only by her love for her husband, rebels against the hardship and loneliness. As the years pass, she learns to love the land and becomes strong in adversity, holding the whole family together. The farm grows, prospers, in spite of hail, blizzards, and drying winds, until the dust storms—black blizzards—devastate the area for nine years. They watch a son leave, the farm become useless, and dust cover even the food.

Miss Hyland stands out among the excellent cast. She subtly conveys her changing outlook and growing insight. James Douglas is very good, although perhaps more at ease as the older man. Especially notable are Lester Nixon and Mary Savage as the neighbours. The whole cast, including William Fruete, Don Francks and Irene Mayeska is Canadian.

The film is short, apparently cut from 95 minutes to 70; it would be nice to see more. As it is now, it is not a documentary, yet the story is not as deeply developed as it could be.

There are inserts of Depression film as one son travels jobless across Canada; this is well done but inadequate. The return of rain gives no idea of the backbreaking years necessary to restore cultivation.

It is well worth seeing because of and in spite of its special significance. It is professional, convincing, and, most exciting, Canadian.

Strippers become Electra

By BARBARA KIRSHENBLATT

Burlesque has given way to Greek drama at the new Electra theatre (formerly The Lux), located on College Street, west of Spadina. The present offering is a film of the same name, Electra. It is based upon Euripides' tragedy, Electra (first produced in 415 B.C.).

The story is a well-known one, appearing in the works of Homer, Aeschylus and Sophocles. It is the old revenge-in-the-royal-house theme, with Electra as the central figure.

The Queen, Clytemnestra and her lover, Aegisthus kill Agamemnon, the King. Orestes and Electra must avenge their father's murder. Euripides limits his play to the return of Orestes and the punishment of the murderers. The preceding incidents are related in the opening speech. The film opens with these incidents, enacted in dramatic silence.

The major interest of both the play and the film lies in the murder of Clytemnestra. Orestes, protesting against the horror of the deed, is forced to kill his mother through the insistence of Electra. Euripides believes that this deed is inevitable and sinful. He uses the situation to expose & develop the characters. The final rejection of Orestes and Electra by the people of Argos, and their necessary exile, foreshadow the torment which the soul is doomed to suffer.

The film bears a marked feeling of theatrical staging, which is combined with the advantages of the medium. The stony, expansive mountains of Argos set the stage. The scene shifts at crucial moments to include in a dramatic enactment, what was related in a messenger's speech in the play.

The film can capture subtleties of facial expression and gesture, which would have been lost in the Greek amphitheatre. Instead of huge gestures of breast-beating and a long tirade expressing grief, the camera closes in on the face of the afflicted person. We watch a monumental tear form in the corner of one eye, or see the twitching of a muscle, which conveys with moving realism, the internal storm.

The chorus in the film is expressive and integral. Mysterious figures, draped in black, move with flowing grace into choreographic blockings. A subtle, pulsating rhythm is set up through their movements and speech.

Dialogue is kept to a minimum. The eye of the camera makes its eloquent statement in silence. The acting is good and the characters convincing, except for Orestes. He is too reminiscent of a film idol and too weak in his characterisation to be satisfying.

Electra is a well-knit, satisfying film, restating a tense, emotion-wracked theme in a compelling way.

Tales from the quarter

By LARRY GARBER

Three destructive incidents decided us to leave Paris for a while. The cumulative effects of these minor violence, coupled with the quick tediums of the Quarter, made us long for the cool green frenchscapes of blue rivers and great chateaux, fat french peasants sweating into their evening meal, Balzacian women scratching themselves as red suns set, then dropping litters by the light of the moon. "That's the way it is," said Bobby E. Lee, sucking on his marijuana. "they're mad in the Provinces; they have black masses in barns." It sounded tempting. Our days were dying as planned, but they were dying hard and it hurt; the routine of the cafes and the parties was deadening, with an alarming sameness that was now impossible to bear. "We'll feel better if we go," said Cheryl, whose new leotards were so tight she looked as if she were trying to swallow her pants. And what happened the week before we left, convinced us.

First, it was the soccer game near St. Cloud. I'm not sure who was playing, I was too high to care, but it drew well and after the game we tried to work our way through ten thousand people. The OAS was still very much alive in Paris, and the french police smelling a mob, sent out four trucks. They parked in front of the narrow exits and dropped their tail gates; in the back of each truck were several gendarmes stooped behind riot guns raised on tripods. The crowds quickened and began to teem towards the parks surrounding the stadium. "Oh my god," said Bonnie, "they're going to kill us." "Mommie!" screamed Bobby E. Lee, clutching his Huck Finn. Cheryl threw back her head defiantly and received a well-placed knee in the groin. I immediately apologized, and we tried to move along the walls of the stadium. The crowds moved faster now. Somebody threw a rock, a coat tore, legs moved quickly towards the open areas ahead. But the trucks moved with the crowds, and all the guns seemed trained on the crook of our spines. The french began to swear and pout; a few of them approached the trucks and were pushed back with clubs. Some fights broke out near the exits where the shuffling and fear were greatest; then the violence spread to the parks. In the thick of it, someone tried to remove Cheryl's left breast, Bonnie got a crack on the face which opened parts of her nose, Bobby E. Lee closed his hands, clutched his hat and whimpered, and I felt a slow gob of phlegm stream down my neck. But worse things were happening. In the parks, several open fights had begun. The police leapt gleefully from their trucks and began to swing their clubs. The mobs scattered down the boulevards towards the Seine and the Avenue De Versailles; loud speakers uttered final warnings. Meanwhile we hid in the bushes and discussed sex; Cheryl said it was the diarrhoea of the soul.

Then, that same week, there was the mad ride towards a party near Les Halles. It was Stephen U.'s car, wanted by the Paris police for some time, and he was being particularly careful. There were eight of us in the car; we had pot, hashish and morphine in our pockets and under the back seat. The Scots, Brynning and Gilchrist, had no papers. Stephen U. passed happily over the petit pont and turned into Rue Rivoli at fifty miles an hour. "Whats that dear little red and white sign?" asked Yvonne, "it looks sexy." "Oh my dear God!" screamed Stephen U., "we're on a one way street!" "You're on a one way street," said Bobby E. Lee loyally, "if the police come I dont know you." Stephen U. panicked marvellously. He drove onto the sidewalk, then off again, and slipped into the hollows of the curb; in a blind attempt at calmness, he tried to pick his nose. Ahead of us, tiny lights appeared, grew larger, then ominous. "Police!" screamed Stephen U., "Help me, oh God." There were a row of perhaps eight motorcycles the width of the road and moving swiftly west towards Concorde. At the last moment, they opened up a frenzied hole for us and we sped through them; then they turned as one man and began the pursuit. Stephen U. charged the motor to seventy, and the Scots began to pray. "We've got too many people in the car," Nate the Accordion shouted above the little screams, "Quick, somebody jump out!" Stephen U. slowed to forty miles per hour and swerved diagonally on two wheels. The back door of the old vedette opened and I felt myself along with Bonnie being shoved out into the fast air. I struggled for a few terrifying moments, clutched blindly at a car strap and worked myself back onto the edge of the seat. "Garber!" screamed Stephen U., "Jump!" I refused, I was sorry, but I had most of the pot on me. "Oh," shouted Jules the Seducer, "Cheryl you jump!" Bonnie clung to the rear fender for dear life, her behind fanning the wind; Nate was trying to kick her free. The car grazed a pissor, where the smoke of many absolutions floated heavenward. Bobby E. Lee began to plead and said if it was alright with them he would take a Metro. Then Stephen broke down completely and began to weep; he stopped the car, got out and put up his hands in surrender. The Scots attempted to escape through the back door; I prepared a speech about the heroism of the Canadians at Normandy. But we were neither searched nor arrested. Dear reader, one of the major strategies when talking to officials in the Quarter is to speak a rapid Brooklynesque while grinning like a toothy ape. After half an hour of great agony and frustration, the police wrote up a simple ticket for speeding, evading the law, inciting a riot, putting them in danger of their lives, and going down a one way street. Stephen U., smiling bravely through his tears, put the ticket in the glove compartment where he kept all his summonses. "Rather a beautiful display of control," he said.

The day before we left, an odd, final thing happened. It seemed that a very depressed frenchwoman living in a small room on the Quai Voltaire decided to kill herself. She did it very conscientiously. She plugged up all the doors and windows, then turned on the gas. So well did she prepare her tomb, that no gas seeped out for two weeks. Finally, someone smelt something. The french police are really wonderful. One of them rushed up to the room, broke through the door, lit a match and blew off the side of the building. Fingers and ears were seen floating in the Seine for months.

Well, this was too much. One morning we packed our bags, still high in the stupor of the evening before, walked to Stephen U.'s car which was hidden in the Rue Git-le-Coeur, and began our excursion into the valley of the Loire. We were three couples, inseparable but tired. As we were leaving Paris, our fingers crossed against any further violence, hoping to make it safely into the clean french country where rebirth was imminent. Bobby E. Lee lit a cigarette and dropped the lighted match on his jeans. He began to burn. The little glow on his pant leg spread in a circle and began eating up his skin. Bonnie tried to smother it with her finger; I slapped at it a few times with the New York Times International; all in vain. Bobby rolled on the front seat in agony while Cheryl stared with unbearable envy; she asked him several times if it hurt, but he could only scream in her face. Finally, Yvonne leaned far over and put the fire out with her spit. "The phoenix, the phoenix," said Emmanuel the Spanish, "that is a very good sign."

The Persian art world reaches back 7000 years

By PAUL RUSSELL

In the last hundred years, the term 'art' has been constantly adapted to include new objects and images of which the previous generation was aesthetically ignorant. Objects of Egyptian art, before 1850, were generally considered to be of interest only for their novelty. Sumerian Sculpture had not been discovered; it now occupies an important gallery in the Louvre. In our present century we have found the peculiar sensibility of ancient art more akin to our modern spirit than the sophisticated intellectual art of the last three centuries.

AMLACHE SCULPTURE presents a new aesthetic experience in the field of Ancient art. The first clays in this style were found near the village of Amlache in Persia about ten years ago. Since then professional archaeologists have thoroughly studied the site and excavated some remarkable pieces. The exhibition ('Seven Thousand Years of Persian Art') which opened in Paris in 1961, introduced the Amalche style to Europe. In October 1963, a commercial New York gallery opened the show which is currently at the Jerrold Morris Gallery, here in Toronto.

The exhibition consists of bronze figurines and clay vessels, probably for ceremonial use, of the period 1000-800 B.C.:

The Bull Form Pouring Vessels, such as the one illustrated here, were, for this writer, the highlights of the exhibition. As the gallery catalogue points out, the silhouette of such a work calls to mind the prehistoric cave paintings of Lascaux. In each case the artist shows a pronounced linear sensibility. But the Amlache pieces display a further sculptural sensitivity - a consciousness of pure form - which is surprisingly strong in such an early civilization. They are refined, certainly not primitive, and have the same purity of form that we find in a contemporary Henry Moore sculpture.

Such works are primarily artistic. Their aesthetic value is their greatest value. Utilitarianism is incidental. Amlache Sculpture thoroughly fits the maxim 'Beautiful and if need be useful!' The clays in this exhibition are the earliest work of art to which this phrase can be so convincingly applied.

AMLACHE SCULPTURE continues at the Jerrold Morris Gallery until February 5.

The sound of surprise

by DAVID JACKEL

This week's jazz scene was compounded of many things, not all of them good, at least in a musical sense. Among the disappointments is Terry Gibbs' quartet at the Friars, which provides entertainment but not much jazz of a high order.

Gibbs is a technically proficient vibraharpist who generates a certain amount of in-person excitement because of his flair for showmanship. But the showmanship and the technique only momentarily conceal in live performance the faults which are obvious on most of Gibbs' records.

The fact is, most of his solos sound very much the same, and his work is at times overly reminiscent of that of Milt Jackson and Lionel Hampton, the two musicians who dominate to an unfortunate degree the style of almost all vibes players. The rhythmic qualities of Hampton's playing and the modern ideas of Jackson (late 1940s version) have been synthesized by Gibbs into a style which is as personal as a synthesis can be, but is at the same time monotonous when absorbed in large doses.

Gibbs does have his moments, especially on ballads (a form he attempts much too infrequently), but generally churns out one chorus of uptempo, single-note lines after another. All is effortlessly played, but most is easily forgettable.

Pianist Walter Bishop Jr. has occasional moments too. The rest of the time he joins Gibbs in producing a seemingly endless tinkle-tinkle which is broken only by the drummer's solos, which aren't much of a break. This group is recommended only to staunch fans of Terry Gibbs, seekers after entertainment, or serious drinkers who need a background.

MEMORIES OF BOP

The listener searching for good jazz should proceed in a southerly direction to the Colonial, where Buck Clayton and his group are playing on, or to the Town, where the parade of vocalists has finally stopped and bop veteran Howard McGhee has taken over the stand.

McGhee was among the first trumpeters to be influenced in the 1940s by Dizzy Gillespie. But it was an influence with a difference. Like his late associates Fats Navarro and Clifford Brown, McGhee proved that bop ideas could be played on the trumpet without employing Gillespie's tone and upper-register exhibitionism. As a result, he made a reputation for himself in the late 40s and early 50s as a trumpeter with a beautiful middle-register sound, and ideas that could be played without resort to double-timing on every number.

After some years in obscurity, McGhee is working again and his tone is as impressive as ever. His execution and ideas are still good as well, although there are occasional moments when he gets hung up during a solo. McGhee's manner of playing is fast becoming extinct, but his style is and was his own, and is well worth hearing today.

Support for the trumpeter is provided by the Norm Amadio trio (Amadio on piano, bassist Peter Thompson, drummer Archie Alleyne), which performs in its customary fashion.

COLLACOTT AND CONFUSION

Jazz presentations for the spring term at Hart House got off to an erratic start on Tuesday, with pianist Tony Collacott featured as leader of a group (actually the Fred Duligal sextet) which seemed reluctant to assemble together in the same room. A quintet finally appeared and stomped its way through Benny Golson's Blues March, which produced excellent solos by Collacott and trombonist Bob Angus.

The next number was Charles Mingus' Fables of Faubus, which led to another good solo by Angus (who was in very good form for most numbers) and then fell apart with the appearance in the room of tenor saxist Duligal himself. Duligal's presence at this particular moment seemed to surprise the musicians as much as the audience, and in the confusion Faubus faded.

At this point the concert seemed to change direction, and everybody began having a good time although not much serious jazz was played for the duration. An uptempo number, probably entitled Cliche Blues or something of similar meaning, turned out to be a parody of that style of playing often associated with Jazz at the Philharmonic. Each of the soloists played his favorite phrases, the audience recognized most of them, and almost everyone got the point of the joke.

Proceedings came to a conclusion with a solo on Watermelon Man by drummer Don Vickery; who spent the concert concealed behind the piano. It was a fitting conclusion, since Vickery's solo was perhaps the afternoon's most successful attempt to combine humor with musicianship.

Out in the land of the four-legged wolves

By SUE LYONS

Between the Red and the Rockies by Grant MacEwan, University of Toronto Press; 300 pp; $2.25; paperback.

Many Trails By R. D. Symons, Longmans Canada Ltd., 202 pp; $5.50.

Never Cry Wolf By Farley Mowat, McClelland and Stewart; 247 pp; $4.95.

If post-holiday depression, coupled with the spectre of more essays than there are weeks left in the term, have you longing for the wide open spaces where men are men and women are women and book-learning is for them what don't got better things to do with their time, two new publications and one re-publication, all concerning the Canadian frontier past and present, might provide some relaxation and help restore a sense of proportion to your tortured vision.

In a new edition of Between the Red and the Rockies, originally published in 1952, Grant MacEwan, former dean of agriculture at the University of Manitoba, traces the development of agriculture in the western provinces. The accent is on the utility of history: by relating the ups and downs of the wheat and cattle industries to contemporary social and economic conditions, MacEwan underlines his conviction that "the best plans for agriculture's future in this land will not be dawn without an understanding of its brief but romantic past, the mistakes and the triumphs."

However, the style is relaxed and anecdotal, and the excursions into historical background are kept at the outline level, which necessitates a certain amount of oversimplification. Despite the fact that he is writing about a central economic phenomenon in Canadian history, he concentrates on delineating the personal aspect of what he sees as an intensely human struggle against the elements in a particularly recalcitrant area of the North American frontier. His approach makes the educative process a remarkably painless one, even for an effete Easterner.

MacEwan, a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College, never loses his sense of how much an unknown factor this huge area of Canada is to the urban resident of Upper Canada; he gives the welcome impression of being a sympathetic and knowledgeable observer rather than apologist, polemicist or prophet.

And, in the line of miscellaneous information, did you know that the first organized, lucrative industry on the prairies for incoming settlers was the bone business? The bleached remains of slaughtered buffalo were shipped south by the carload for use in the chemical industry, until in the financial panic of 1893 the bone boom burst, leaving the migratory pickers to turn to farming for a living. And so began the search for a cash crop that quickly grew to be the main staple of Canadian agricultural produce.

On a more personal level is R.D. Symons series of essays on the Canadian west between 1914 and 1945, Many Trails. A keen naturalist, Symons gives loving attention to the flora and fauna of an area still unspoiled by the coming of the rancher and the disruption of settled communities. One would have to share both his interest and his age-bracket, I think, to find other than irksome his recurrent nostalgia for the good old days before Freud and the rest of those social-workers ruined people's sense of values.

However, his sincerity is unquestionable, and many of the anecdotes impart some of the flavour of a fast-disappearing way of life. The value of this kind of book is not that it makes any startling revelations in itself; but that it records, for the interest and information of future generations, a first-hand account of a changing scene.

Of far greater general interest than either of these two is Farley Mowat's Never Cry Wolf, a skilful combination of the best of informed scientific reporter and sensitive naturalist, infused with Mowat's unerring sense of the ludicrous. Mowat is one of those writers who is consistently good and sometimes better, and at any time a delight to a weary mind. In Never Cry Wolf he treads lighter, and cuts deeper, than either the subject matter — the habits of the Canis lupus — or the apparently irresponsible approach would at first seem to allow. The book is a high-spirited description of Mowat's expedition, on behalf of the Dominion Wildlife Service, into that last frontier of the naturalist, the Great Canadian North. And if you think that sounds vague, consider the wording of the operation order he was instructed to follow to the letter:

"You will, immediately upon reaching Churchill, proceed by chartered air transport in a suitable direction for the requisite distance and thereupon establish a Base . . ."

What happens is that Mowat's pilot flies roughly north-west until he has used half his gas, puts his passenger down, and this, perforce, is where "conditions generally are optimal to the furtherance of your operations."

Life among the wolves turns out to be a far less hazardous experiment than Mowat at first feared, but it takes several heart-stopping encounters for him to realise that his presence is a matter of supreme indifference, and on occasion of condescending amusement, to the subjects of his study.

Perhaps Mowat's greatest appeal as a writer is his ability to laugh at himself, and so he has little difficulty in detecting an underlying sense of humour which counterbalances the reputation of the wolf as a beast of unalloyed savagery.

But for all the moments of flippancy and of sheer hilarity—and there are several memorable ones—Mowat is writing a slashing censure of government policy towards wolf control which the humorous treatment only barely manages to blunt. As has happened in countless cases of unthinking intervention in game control, government game laws take recognition of one half of a natural balance in asserting the necessity of preserving the herds of caribou for the food supply of the Eskimos, without enquiring into the role of wolves in ensuring rather than hindering this preservation.

Mowat's governmental supervisors seem convinced before he starts out that the wolves are killing off disastrous numbers of healthy caribou; he is instructed to go up and prove their contention. He finds that it is in fact the trappers and commercial hunters who do the greatest damage to the herds, while the wolves, by killing off only the weak and maimed in each herd, ensure the hardness of the surviving stock. His report is ignored.

Mowat doesn't sentimentalize: this is no Beautiful Joe of the North. Nevertheless, the careful, sympathetic description of a year and a half's observation, and one might almost say acquaintanceship, of one wolf family in particular produces a note of controlled poignancy at the conclusion of the book. In a brief epilogue, he reports:

"During the winter of 1958-59 the Canadian Wildlife Service, in pursuance of its continuing policy of wolf control, employed several Predator Control officers . . . One of these officers placed a number of cyanide 'wolf-getters' in appropriate places near the den (of the wolf family Mowat had come to know so well). . . . It is not known what results were obtained."

Oistrakh's Beethoven unmatched

By PAUL ENNIS

"Just as in the life of an individual a single experience may have the effect of bringing brightness and warmth to whole periods of daily humdrum, so in artistic life do we regard a period as rich when a single imposing personality relieves the monotony of mediocrity. He stands out like a flag of victory planted on a pile of stones."

—Eduard Hanslick, 1854

Listening to David Oistrakh this week produced such profound joy and wonder that the possibility of any performance surpassing his seems remote. "Listening to Vieuxtemps," Hanslick wrote, "is one of the greatest, most unqualified pleasures music has to offer." Tuesday one found an echo of this in Oistrakh's Beethoven.

That he is an infallible technician with extraordinary bowing technique was demonstrated in his solo recital. That he is sensitive and his tone warm and exquisitely fashioned was shown in the perfection of the concerto. Never has the serenity and beauty of the slow movement been sustained as in that performance.

Outwardly he seems relaxed and he plays effortlessly. But from the power of his bow one believes that an inner tension exists which drives his performance. It is a controlled but basic strength that gives his sound depth and character.

How he uses his tools! In the voicing of the first movement cadenza and the unbelievable quality of the pianissimo which follows; in the superb phrasing of the third movement theme, playful, but with the resolution of a sense of longing which transcends mere frivolity; and unforgettably in the unaccompanied passages of the second movement where the splendour of the single violin filled the entire building.

Mr. Susskind is an acknowledged master at accompanying, and the orchestra rarely failed him. Their playing was always suited to that of the soloist. Precision and sensitivity were exercised and balance maintained. The bassoon accompaniment throughout the last movement was superb.

This was a performance which allowed the composer's music to really speak. And with such diction how one can marvel at Beethoven's powers.

The greatness of the Beethoven almost makes comment on the first half of the program superfluous. It is enough to note that Igor Oistrakh's performance of the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto was adequate. His tone has more volume than his father's but lacks depth and control, sometimes becoming rough and unpleasant. Whereas David's intonation is virtually flawless, Igor's was uncertain, particularly at the peak of a run. Often clarity was sacrificed for speed in the final movement. Phrasing was not really polished and notes occasionally were hacked.

The Bach Double Concerto was better. Much improvement resulted from an early adjustment in their playing—the beginning was insecure and Igor was too loud for David. The balance overall was fine, timing excellent and the interchange of the themes great. The intonation at the end of the slow movement made it truly impressive. The orchestra, particularly the woodwinds, approached sublimity. But the Beethoven had undisputed sublimity. One left in ecstatic awe.

Kuerti a gas at HH

By DWIGHT WALDO

The young American pianist Anton Kuerti was guest soloist at last Sunday's evening concert. Though not advertised as such the evening became practically an all-Beethoven one with the inclusion of the Sonata Opus 10 Number 2 as an encore. Earlier Mr. Kuerti performed the Sonata in E Flat Major, Opus 81a (Les Adieux), and the Sonata in A Major, Opus 101.

Despite obvious missed notes in both pieces he performed them with considerable poetic feeling and dramatic flair. The former had the sort of nobility its programmatic writing demands; the latter had an exciting masculine energy.

Also included was the vigorous Bloch Sonata (1935), sandwiched between the Beethovens. It suffered from too heavy pedalling in the first movement which tended to obscure the melodic line. Mr. Kuerti, however, redeemed himself in the next two with greater attention to detail.

The hoarse "Bravo's" at the program's end were ample evidence that Mr. Kuerti certainly had been boss that night. Toronto audiences will get another chance to hear this brilliant young artist in a performance of Beethoven's Emperor Concerto with the York Concert Society on April 30.

The Toronto Chamber Orchestra was founded in 1962 by Conductor Jacob Groob. Their concert at the Royal Alex Sunday proved that Toronto has a unique musical group of which it can be justly proud. It was highlighted by the Concertant For Flute and String Orchestra, a new work by Dutch-Canadian composer Rudy van Dijk.

The haunting passages for flute and harp, and flute and violin were played with bewitching charm. The strange combination of cymbals, flute, and strings made the initial slow development mysterious and dramatic. The different moods of the piece are subtly integrated and the transition from section to section was easily realized. Soloist Robert Aitken's remarkable technique, pure tone and wonderful sense of rhythm dominated his playing throughout.

In the opening piece, Handel's Twelfth Concerto Grosso, one was immediately aware of the advantages of such an ensemble as the Chamber Orchestra: being so small (fourteen musicians), it naturally imparts a much more intimate feeling than does a large symphony orchestra. There seemed to be tremendous rapport between conductor and musicians—entrances were precise, melody lines were clearly differentiated, and the expression was imaginative especially in the final two movements.

The Serenade by Suk detracted somewhat from the enjoyment of the first half of the program. Here the playing was certainly competent (especially the cellos'), but the music itself seemed too pleasant. There were neverending Romantic strains heaped sweetly on one another. The muted string conclusion of the third movement was just too much.

Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik highlighted the second half of the program. The Allegro first movement was played with all the robustness and vigour demanded by the music. The Andante movement, based on one simple melody, was done with a lovely gentleness and innocent feeling. Although parts of the third and fourth movements dragged, in general the playing had the graceful lightness characteristic of such divertimenti music.

The Mozart Piano Concerto in A Major played by seven-year-old "child prodigy" Hilda Irek was the program's weakest part. It is amazing to think that a child of this age can play correctly most of the notes of such a difficult work. No intelligent person however, could be excited about her performance per se. Her playing was sometimes musical, especially in the simple thematic passages, but she lacked the depth of feeling which comes only with age. She didn't have the strength to make the runs or arpeggios sound controlled or confident. The performance was further hindered by the fact that Mr. Groob used no woodwinds or horns as indicated in the score.

Concert branded obscene

By PAUL ENNIS

Hornopayne (HPP) — A select group of twelve impartial simplemen today declared the Toronto Chamber Orchestra concert of January 19 to be obscene. Acting on their verdict, County Court Judge J. Leiper Freeman ruled that the January 24 segment of the CBC television series On The Scene be forbidden to include any anatomical portion of seven-year-old Hilda Irek.

"Not even her bare little knees," he coldly emphasized.

On this final note ended one of the shortest court cases in Ontario history. And with it vanished the hope of millions of prurient Canadians to hear the controversial Croatian pianist. Rumours of an appeal and possible re-trial were scotched only minutes later by J. Pickersgill. The federal cabinet member, who will be succeeded February 3 by M. Lamontagne, stated that the problem of a new foreign-born TV star could only damage the image of "my honourable successor. Furthermore it would not help the CJBC issue one whit."

"Deportation is no longer in my hands," he nostalgically confided to a hinting reporter.

The case thus seems closed for the moment. There is little doubt of its impact however, for the alacrity of the whole affair has made its mark on all Canadians.

The trial was necessitated by circumstances arising out of Sunday's TCO concert. It was alleged by Otto Butz, the prosecuting attorney, that the exploitation of the "wee lassie" by the overlords of the TCO organization was undertaken solely with an eye on excessive profits. It was this "unscrupulous advertising trick," he went on, that was responsible for procuring the large unruly audience. Placing the charge of obscenity squarely on society's shoulders, he declaimed that "by their unreasonable, exuberant support of tiny Hilda," after they had heard her performance "they left no doubt as to the illegality of their actions." He concluded his opening address by pointing out that the "hapless minikin's performance was utterly without redeeming social importance."

R. C. Bone Jr. Q. C. stated that the defense would be based entirely upon the parable "Obscenity is Bliss" as exemplified in the Tierra del Fuego kinship system.

The prosecution's first witness was Heinrich Gekrummt, Doctor of Music (University of Danzig). He opined that the single pianistic triumph of the performance lay in the unflinching memory of the child. He stated that the number of notes missed in the runs was "scandalous," that phrasing in the first movement was non-existent, that notes were banged out, noticeably at the end of phrases, and that furthermore runs were rushed and uneven. He pointed out that the slow movement lacked a sensitive touch and that the finale was plagued with an absence of coincidence between soloist and orchestra. He called the performance totally unnecessary and more ludicrous than musical.

The defense, basking in anthropological poesy declined questioning.

J. L. Blotner, clinical psychologist, was called to the stand. Citing the case of W. A. Mozart he testified that the psychological effects on a child, even had Miss Irek been a proven prodigy and genius, were severe. When children are deprived of the experience of "normal upbringing" premature neurosis results. He warned that the "enforced narrowing of a child's horizons" would be anything but beneficial.

The defense having again declined questioning, Bess Donovan, sociological researcher, took the stand. Wildly academic in her mannerisms, she said that Henry Miller was right about society in 1931 and he still is. Remarking that the brazen-domed naturalist had repeatedly been put on trial for talking about cancer, "a thing one must never discuss," she continued arms flailing, "When we put Mr. Miller on trial, we put ourselves on trial too."

She likened the Irek controversy to a Miller trial. As a debate over a bidet brings all the hidden creatures of the libido dancing nakedly forth permitting those creatures of fear, of prejudice, of shame, and of unfilled desire to be exposed, so the performance of Hilda Irek has stimulated a similar experience. "It is the aggregate of the exploited child and the audience of sensationalists that point up the basic obscenity of the concert," the witness enthused.

Otto Butz rested the prosecution's case by deploring the public's apparent craving for glorification of youthful spectacle at the expense of necessary talent development. "She should have stayed home and practised for seven more years," he scolded.

The jury of simplemen failed to comprehend the intrinsic innocent quality of "Obscenity is Bliss." J. L. Blotner Q. C. repeated the phrase again and again, varying his dynamic level and elocution considerably. The effect was slight. Insincerity finds twelve men too tough an obstacle to thwart by word repetition.

It is clear from the TCO judgement that child prodigies are relics of the past. Antidote to modern pretenders is years of technical and emotional development at home. On the other hand, society remains unchained, its craving for obscenity always close to the surface.

A sub-titled flop

By DAN CALINESCU

The theatre attraction of the 1963-64 season, that was supposed to make CAMELOT look like an amateur production and that would, as its importer Alexander H. Cohen predicted, take North America by storm, landed with a big thud at the O'Keefe Centre.

RUGANTINO is anything but a successful new idea in live entertainment. Granted the sets are colourful, the costumes eyecatching and the Italian cast tries very hard to please, but these things cannot make up for some of the basic faults. The first, and most annoying fact, is that the show is presented in Italian. It was argued that a translation could not possibly do justice to the book and lyrics of the original production. This may well be, but it is too much to ask a Canadian audience to sit through a three hour play and be satisfied with a total of 560 odd lines of translation projected on to a screen like movie subtitles.

When I observed three Italians in front of me having the time of their lives while I was desperately looking at the subtitle board so I could see what they were laughing about, I felt a grudge against the producer.

And then there were the subtitles! The bill from my ophthalmologist has not arrived yet but I know what it will read: Item: 1 pair of crossed eyes straightened, Fee $25.00.

Subtitles are disturbing enough in movies but in live theatre they don't work at all. In addition to the general distraction, the subtitles for RUGANTINO were projected on a screen above the stage. Which makes for a very stiff neck, on top of the crossed eyes. How can anyone get into the required romantic mood while the hero and the heroine whisper sweet nothings into each other's ears, when one's eyes have to work as if following a tennis match?

And then of course there are the times when there is a line of dialogue on the screen and dead silence on the stage and one feels that the actors are just not co-operating. As I said, it just doesn't work.

The other major fault is the production itself. North American audiences have grown up with a tradition of slick, fast-moving musical comedy. Compared to American musicals, RUGANTINO is slow moving, almost sluggish, and drawn out. The chorus numbers have little spark and the choreography appears laboured and outdated.

There is quite a bit of risqué dialogue and business in RUGANTINO that gets a lot of laughs. But somehow I felt it was not laughter of enjoyment but laughter of embarrassment. Lampooning of the church and off-colour sex jokes belong in a review like the ESTABLISHMENT, but they don't do a thing for a musical comedy.

The performers did as well as could be expected with a somewhat frosty audience and there was one performance that almost made the whole thing worthwhile. Aldo Fabrizi, Italy's best-known character-actor, portraying a lovesick innkeeper, is a joy to watch anytime.

This enormously big man, a mixture of Charles Laughton and Peter Lorre, has such an expressive face that he almost needs no lines to communicate with the audience.

Somehow I feel that everybody would have been better off if RUGANTINO had continued its record breaking run in Rome and not ventured across the sea only to fall flat on its face.

Comin' through the Scotch

The bagpipes were whining and the lassies were dancing Wednesday night as the new Ryerson Theatre opened with a production of Lerner and Loewe's BRIGADOON. This addition to the Toronto theatre market, located on the campus of Ryerson, makes again very clear that it is fatal to try and build a theatre that will serve in the double capacity of auditorium and theatre. Unfortunately, a building like that will always be an auditorium with a stage and not much more.

Looking at the performance itself, I am obliged to ask, why BRIGADOON? This musical has a number of disadvantages that could easily ruin the efforts of any group attempting to produce it. It is definitely not Lerner and Lowe at their best. With the very restricted locale of the Scottish highlands, the music is often repetitious and, on the whole not very inspiring.

The score very difficult and requires a high degree of professionalism which is hard to achieve by an amateur group. The cast of Ryerson's show make a very good attempt at perfection but unfortunately they have a long way to go.

Still, what director Jack McAllister did achieve is well worth looking at. His leading actors are, in general, well selected.

Two performers particularly endeared themselves to the audience. Gail Armstrong in the very demanding role of Meg Brockie almost ran away with the show. Her feeling, for comedy is marvelous, to say the least.

John Torrington as Jeff Douglas and Meg's counter part has not yet achieved this

The supporting roles are played well but not excitingly so. The chorus shows a tremendous amount of spirit and enthusiasm, especially in the showstopper 'Down on MacConnachy Square'. Lots of life makes up for perfection quite well in this case. Walter Burgess' choreography leaves a lot to be desired. Instead of staying with traditional Scottish folk dances, he injects some interpretative dancing which looks completely out of place.

The orchestra is doing a fine job, with the vote for the best arranged number going to 'The Heather On the Hill'. One question though, why so much brass? It does make it a bit noisy at times.

Mr. McAllister has done a fine job in staging the show and his staging is complemented by a very fetching set and quite colourful costumes.

The injection of some topical references is very clever indeed and makes for some well-deserved laughs. Mr. McAllister and his cast have provided musical comedy fans with an engaging bit of entertainment.

By DAN CALINESCU

degree of perfection, but he is well on his way to become a first class comedian.

Mary McLaughlin in the female lead of Fiona has the perfect voice for the part but I'm afraid her dramatic portrayal is not quite convincing. In the male lead of Tommy Albright, Dave Nichols succeeds only partly. His voice control is not what it should be and this fact makes him difficult to understand in most of the musical numbers. Though generally competent, in his speeches he appears at times almost wooden.

Kane gunnery takes aim at lowly Warriors

By GORD BELLMORE

Coach Joe Kane of the hockey Blues held gunnery practice for his platoon last night in an attempt to get his shooters back on target.

Blues, who showed strong firepower in the early part of the season, have seemingly run low on ammunition. In their last two outings (a win and a loss), Blues have only managed two direct hits.

If things stick to the script, however, Blues should fatten their scoring averages against Waterloo Warriors tonight at Varsity Arena. Warriors, who have lost all five of their league games, have given up 46 goals in that span. Goaltender Mike Durnan hasn't been following in the footsteps of a former NHL great with the same surname as his goals-against average is 9.20.

Although Warriors have been giving up goals in droves, they do possess two of the highest scorers in the league. Centre Don Mervyn is second in scoring with 11 points and left winger Stan Sharman is right behind with nine points. The third member of Warriors' top line, Terry Cooke, is also among the league's top 20 marksmen.

One of Warriors' few other distinctions is that they are far and away the most penalized club in the college circuit and have developed a reputation in some circles as "hatchetmen." They have amassed a total of 105 minutes in penalties, including three major penalties, one 10-minute misconduct and two game misconducts.

Defencemen Doug Peacock and Ken Thompson have been the main culprits. Peacock has 37 minutes in penalties to his credit, 27 of these picked up against McGill last week. Even goalie Durnan has a major and two minor penalties against him.

Tonight's game marks the halfway point in the season for Blues and every contest from here on is important. Blues lost sole possession of second place when Montreal Carabins tied Laval Rouge et Or, 4-4, Wednesday night in Montreal. Carabins are tied with Varsity, two points behind leagueleading McMaster Marliners, and have one game in hand over both Blues and Marliners.

Carabins, who were not rated highly before the season started, are the only undefeated team in the league besides Marliners. Against three of the top four teams, Toronto, Laval and McMaster, they have earned five of a possible six points.

Montreal will be in Toronto next Friday to kick off the Winter Carnival. Carabins shut out Blues, 1-0, in Montreal last weekend.

Blues were unanimous pre-season picks for the Queen's Cup. But now they can only be rated as even money choices with McMaster and the upstart Carabins.

Stray Shots — Kane has a new power-play combination, Stu McNeil at centre, Hank and Steve Monteith on the wings, and Sonny Osborne and Ian Sinclair at the points. . . . Kane is still uncertain about his choice of an extra forward for tonight. He has three to choose from. . . . Dentistry goalie Fred Warren has been working with Blues this week. . . . Andre Boucher of Carabins scored two goals against Laval to move into third-place in league scoring.

Varsity track ace Bruce Kidd should have more trouble in tonight's 3-mile run at the Gardens than he did in last year's event when he set the Canadian record. Kidd is shown here about to lap Brian Craig of England en route to his 3:34.6 record in the 1963 Gardens meet.

Bruce Kidd joins other 'has beens' in three-mile run at Gardens meet

By UNCLE HARRY

While one of the greatest galaxies of stars ever to be assembled under one roof will be on hand for tonight's Tely-Maple Leaf Indoor Games, a trio of has-beens is expected to provide the evening's major excitement.

The most fiercely-contested event will be the three-mile run, which pits University of Toronto's Bruce Kidd against Albie Thomas of Australia and Bob Schul of United States. Speculation on the outcome of this race has reached such proportions that Bay Street bookies yesterday refused to quote odds.

None of these men can be strictly classed as "has beens", but each has experienced a relative decline in recent months.

Varsity's Kidd has yet to elude a troublesome injury in his achilles heel which forced him to curtail his racing periodically during the past eight months. But both Kidd and his coach Fred Foot are confident the 20-year old veteran will defend his meet championship.

Before the advent of New Zealand's Murray Halberg, Albie Thomas was king of the world's two- and three-milers. During 1958, for example, 105-pound Albie sped to two world records, clocking 8:32.0 and 13:10.6 in the two and three-mile runs respectively.

But since then Thomas has fallen to leaner days, and the rabbit for most of Herb Elliot's magic miles went unplaced in both the 1960 Olympics and the 1962 British Empire Games.

The lure of another Olympics this year has brought out some of Thomas' former brilliance, however, and already this winter he was recorded on 8:33.0 two-miles, and a 13:51.2 5,000 meters victory over 10,000-meter world record holder Ron Clarke.

Schul was the States' fastest steeple-chaser two years ago, but an attack of mononucleosis forced him into semi-retirement. Schul now has regained his old form, as evidenced by a 13:31.4 three-mile win in Boston two weeks ago.

Kidd has a career record of two wins over Thomas, and has split with Schul in four races.

If the outcome of the three-miles is uncertain, an easy triumph for "Scatman" Bill Crothers in the 1,000-yard run is a sure thing.

Opposing the Varsity graduate are Pan-American Games 800-meter champion Don Bertioia, Missouri's Ralph Lingle, Chicago's Dave Mellady, and John Dunkleberry of North Carolina.

The feature event on the sprint track should be the men's 60-yard hurdles, where Detroit's Hayes Jones should chalk up another monotonous, but pretty-to-watch victory. Jones has chalked up so many consecutive indoor wins, the count is confused somewhere between 49 and 53.

Fibre-glass fans have a treat in store for them—six 16-foot vaulters are on hand to spike the Garden's sky. Competing are John Pennel, Dave Tork, John Uelses, Rolando Cruz, Jeff Chase, and C. K. Yang—better take along some liniment for your neck.

Blues have entered a mile relay in the evening meet, hoping to successfully defend their meet title against Western, McMaster, Queen's, and Wayne State. Anchoring for Blues is Rod Chintu.

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

PHE edges Irish 50-47, takes over b-ball lead

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Physical and Health Education I moved into sole possession of first place in Group I interfaculty basketball, Wednesday, edging St. Mike's A, 50-47.

Andy Klimas hooped 18 points to pace the winners, while Ray Schaedler shot 12 for the Irish.

Group II is in a three-way tie for the lead as a result of St. Mike's B's 48-38 win over Law A, combined with UC II's 30-29 upset over previously unbeaten Meds A and Jr. Skule's 30-28 loss to Dents A. SMC B, Meds A, and Jr. SPS all have six points.

Meds B's 32-16 victory over Trinity A and Pharmacy A's close 42-40 win against Architecture A has resulted in a three-way tie for top spot in Group III, involving the doctors, the druggists and Vic. I.

The minor leagues continue to provide entertaining names and results: Fungi, 57, Vic Bay-Bis 8; 69'ers 52, Anions 12; Christians 83, Cavaliers 15; Dents B 52, Cavaliers 10; Christians 80, III Chem 48; Dunkies 86, Beatles 26; Gigolos 56, Taylor House 4; Fizz III 60, Meds III yr. 10, Vic Spastics 35, 69'ers 19.

RUBBY RESULTS: UC Uti-ca Clubs 7, Vic IX 2; For B 2, Pharm C 2; Dents C 3, SPS IX 1; SPS VI 5, Vic VII 2.

WATER POLO
Defending champion, Meds IV yr., hit the win column with a 13-6 trouncing of Sr. SPS. George Watkin popped in six for Meds and Dean Chamberlain added five.

PHE scraped by Meds I yr., 8-7, for its second win. Larry Bell hit for five tallies for the winners, John Maki and Pete Richardson counted three apiece for the doctors.

Other encounters saw New swamp Meds II yr. 11-0, Vic I double the score on Law, 8-4, and Pre-Meds I take SPS IV, 4-2.

First U. S. opponent since Florida

Cagers on the limp for Rochester game

By PAUL HENDERSON

Toronto Varsity cagers come up against American opposition again Saturday, when they encounter Rochester Institute of Technology Tigers in an 8:30 p.m. Athletic Night game.

Blues, still remembering their 88-79 defeat at the hands of University of Windsor Lancers, hope to return to the form they displayed in their last contest against a club from below the border. In that game, Blues took a thrilling 91-82 victory from Florida Southern.

Blues will have several players on the injury list for Saturday's game. John O'Neill and Dave Ouchterlony are suffering from leg ailments and are doubtful starters. Varsity coach John McManus is not taking any chances with his wounded charges because Blues play Western Mustangs here next Tuesday.

Tigers are led by guard Doug Gustin, six-foot, four-inch centre Ron Sinack and forward Eric Schneider. These three compiled respective averages of 11.8, 8.6 and 7.6 points per game last season when Tigers won only two of 21 games.

Blues have registered one triumph in the seven games played against Tigers since 1956. They routed Tigers 103-64 at home in 1960-61 but dropped a 63-60 overtime decision at Rochester in 1961-62.

Under the Basket: Blues played two exhibition games against YMHA Blues this week. Sunday the teams fought to a 86-86 draw as Varsity finished the game with only three men. Ed Bordas scored 28 points in leading Blues to a 86-64 win Wednesday night. . . . Nolan Kane's injured leg has forced him out of the lineup for the remainder of the season. . . . Barry Anthony left the team in favor of a part-time job. . . . Exams have prevented Arvo Neidre from attending practices this week. . . . In Inter-collegiate action Wednesday, Western slipped past McMaster, 63-58 at London. . . . Tom Williamson of Western netted 23 points and dropped back into a tie for the league lead in scoring. He has 100 points in four outings for an average of 25.0, the same as Varsity's Dave West, who has played two less games.

	GP	Pts.	Avg.
Tom Williamson, West	4	100	25.0
Dave West, Tor	2	50	25.0
Jerry Raphael, Wat	4	94	23.5
Bob Horvath, Wnd	4	67	16.8
Bernie Friesmuth, Wind	4	64	16.0

PHE alumni stage big night

Once every year the alumni association of Varsity's school of Physical and Health Education stages an athletic night at Hart House to raise money for a student emergency loan fund. This event is always the biggest athletic night of the year and Saturday night will be no exception.

In addition to the Varsity Rochester Institute of Technology basketball game, the program will include high school basketball, swimming and wrestling and intercollegiate fencing, boxing and swimming.

Varsity's boxers, intercollegiate champions of last season, oppose pugilists from the Harmonie Club and Spadina YMHA. Leading the U of T squad are Ron McGregor and Mike Rapsey, each of whom won college titles in 1963.

Three playground bouts, featuring youngster from McCormick Playground and Mooredale House, complete the boxing program.

Five Toronto high schools compete in a swimming meet and following this Varsity's 400-yard free style relay team will try to better its own Canadian record, opposing only the clock. U of T set the record of 3:26.8 last year. Members of the team are Tom Verth, Pete Richardson, Graeme Barber and Robin Campbell. Campbell is the only newcomer, replacing Marv Chappelle, who has graduated.

A dual fencing meet between Varsity and Rochester completes the intercollegiate program. Blues defeated Rochester in an earlier meet at Rochester.

Oakwood Collegiate, defending TSSAA champs, and Rynnymede, defending TDIAA champs, meet in an exhibition basketball game. Both teams are undefeated. And Kipling and Kennedy Collegiate grapple in a high school wrestling meet.

The high school events begin at 6:30 p.m. with the intercollegiate sports to follow.

...Of Cabbages and bells

A tale of sealing wax and bells designed to curb immorality trickled out of Massey College last night.

Dr. Robertson Davies, the male resident college's Master, started his war on women visitors about a month ago.

He made it known that all women were to be out of the residence by 11:30 p.m.

To encourage the timely exodus, he had the college bell rung 11 times at 11:30 each night. And he dubbed the bell "St. Catharine, protectress of virgins."

But students who liked to go to bed early, and alone, complained about the loud bell.

So Dr. Davies had a smaller bell installed. Now the large one is rung twice only and the small one once at 11:30 p.m.

The fellows of the college still weren't content. They organized a meeting last Thursday and invited Dr. Davies.

Dr. Davies told the fellows he felt the bells were necessary because students had been smuggling female friends out by the fire escapes.

He said if the residents behaved themselves for a month, he would consider stopping the bells.

Bright and early Saturday a uniformed member of the Massey College custodial staff was seen affixing threads with sealing wax across the bottoms of the college's six fire doors.

Fellows said last night they were sure Dr. Davies had ordered the move as a check on the clandestine use of the fire escapes.

The threads were soon broken. Massey College maids shake their mops from the fire escapes daily.

Dr. Davies told The Varsity last night he had not ordered the threads attached.

He also commented on the so-called "rule" forcing females out by 11:30 p.m.

"It is not a rule. We have no rules at Massey College. The bells are a reminder that they (the fellows) have been requested to have women out of the residence by a particular time."

(One junior fellow told The Varsity that if a Massey College fellow ignored such "requests" he might be given eight hours to leave the residence.)

Dr. Davies said he was concerned about use of the fire doors "because our insurance is based in part on the assumption that they won't be used except in cases of emergency."

After he was asked by The Varsity for comment last night, Dr. Davies phoned back and said:

"I have just been around and there are no threads at the bottoms of the doors now. There has been some sealing wax there, though."

"We have had some practical jokers here in the college. One pretends that he is a ghost."

"But I certainly never ordered the threads put there."

Urges independent Varsity

by SUSAN STUMPF

"I believe The Varsity should be made independent," David Beatty publications' commissioner of the Students' Administrative Council, said at the university committee hearings Friday.

"I believe a varsity newspaper as an independent organ of campus life, could more effectively criticize the SAC," he said.

He suggested that the section of the constitution which deals with editor of The Varsity be amended to read "The council may, at any time, dismiss the editor if it deems his work unsatisfactory." In this way the council would have control over the editor by hiring and firing him.

He also suggested that The Varsity would be granted a sum of approximately $15,000 and would submit a budget to the publications commission and the finance commission and thence to council for approval.

John Coburn (III Vic)

suggested that an appeal committee be established for students who have failed an examination or their year.

Though it is not generally known, an appeal committee does exist. It is not mentioned in the calendar, and the mark slips state definitely that no appeals will be considered. Apparently this is to prevent the committee from being swamped by appeals.

Ian Thompson, chairman of the Model Parliament committee, said that he was pleased with the reforms made at this year's session.

He suggested that private members' bills be brought to a vote since this created an incentive for the opposition to bring in its own bills.

Gary Gottlieb (II UC) asked that a students' suggestion council be set up to receive, evaluate and put into effect students' suggestions.

The council, he said, would consist of President Claude Bissell and the heads of the departments. Each suggestion would have to be signed by 100 students.

Board's report delayed for lawyer's check

The report of the special board of governors' committee on the Students' Administrative Council is currently being checked by lawyers, it was learned Friday.

Sydney Hermant, one of the two board members on the committee, said because some of the proposals included in the report involved changes in the board's by-laws, the report was sent to lawyers for checking.

Two members of the legal profession, Dean C.A. Wright of the faculty of law and Mr. Justice Arthur Kelly, are on the committee.

"It's just a matter of putting the changes in a language everyone can understand," Mr. Hermant said.

He said he did not know if the report would be ready to present to the next board meeting, Feb. 28.

Question earnings of officials

Two officials of the University of Montreal have been named in a Quebec provincial government inquiry into the textbook business.

Msgr. Irene Lussier, rector of U of M, and Pierre Dagenais, dean of the faculty of Arts of the same university, are implicated in an alleged conflict of public and private interests in the sale of textbooks.

Lussier is reported to have received $10,435 for serving as pedagogical adviser to a school magazine from 1951 to 1963.

Dagenais allegedly earned $199,781 royalties on books chosen by a committee of which he was a member.

The report prepared by Prof. Maurice Bouchard of the Political Science Department of U of M, a one-man royal commission, was tabled in the legislature Friday.

Dealing strictly with the French-language trade, the report attacks authors, publishers, religious institutions and school officials for having schemed to keep textbook prices up and pay huge royalties to the authors, many of whom were on the same committees that chose their books.

Nineteen authors were named as having received $1,416,565 in royalties in such a conflict of interests.

The main reason for the high cost of text-books, states the report, is the high royalties paid to authors—averaging 25 to 42 per cent of the store price.

Another author mentioned was Paul Leblanc who as official buyer for the Montreal Catholic School Commission bought 12 of his own books.

Can-kickers beware

Don't kick garbage pails into the street. This was the lesson a student at Victoria learned Friday afternoon.

Wes McLean (III Vic) appeared in magistrate's court on a charge of putting unwrapped garbage into the street. He kicked over a garbage pail one evening several months ago. A garbage man observed him, and summoned a policeman.

Despite the efforts of a friend in the U of T Law School, he was convicted, sentenced $25 or 10 days, plus $13 costs. A collection is being taken up in Wymilwood.

Students could unite and be powerful

By CAROL PATTERSON

"Canadian university students have little idea of the power they could wield."

Paul Becker, University of Western Ontario graduate and a foremost expert on international student politics, speaking at Victoria College's all-day conference on student leadership urged Canadian students to strive for as much voice in their country's government as their counterparts in Europe and Latin America have.

The student has an immediate responsibility to the university as a community of learning, but, Mr. Becker added, "he should be an active skeptic to a certain degree because he is a member of a class with no vested interests."

Unfortunately students here have a tendency to be too timid. "They're careful not to jeopardize their future," he said, "and they think of student government as a play-game."

Canadian students are reluctant to take a stand, he asserted, because "they are too subjective—they have no set of static principles by which to judge every question."

Dr. Northrop Frye, principal of Victoria College, posited students in a "Temple of Jerusalem" when he introduced the conference.

Students who are in the "outer temple" attend lectures, memorize notes and frolic about the outer edges of knowledge.

But he said persons totally involved in their university careers are in the "inner temple" and are really learning to think.

Vernon Trott, head of psychological services at Forest

Hill Collegiate, emphasizing the learning-by-doing theme at the seminar, showed a movie titled The Chairman and led student discussions on group organization and leadership.

Larry Ward (IV Vic), SAC representative, spoke on the different positions constituting student government. This was followed by a panel discussion on the influence of student government on University of Toronto policy. Panel member Nancy Caldecott (III Vic) said the faculty representatives who determine U of T administrative policy "tend to be cynical and of disinterested in student leaders." She added that most faculty groups are concerned mainly with retirement and salaries, which is "much the same" as the Blue and White's concern for park-link facilities.

If you hit a man with a baseball bat...

By JOAN FERGUSON

"If you hit a man over the head with a baseball bat, he will pass out, but otherwise you can never really tell what an individual's responses will be."

So Dr. Huston Smith, professor of philosophy at Massachusetts Institute of Technology convinced a fascinated audience in a lecture last night, "The Nature of Man".

As a professor of humanities at a scientific institution, a periodic resident of various religious meditation centres, and author of the book The Religions of Man, Dr. Smith is in an excellent position to examine both sides of the human picture. The experiments he outlined in his lecture indicated many inter-relations between the two.

He discussed Dr. Wilder Penfield's discovery that the human brain keeps a complete record of every experience, and that this record is subject to recall, should the appropriate stimulus be applied.

He also touched on findings of scientists at the University of Michigan regarding the uncanny ability of flat worms to pass on knowledge through chemical means

And, he explained, laboratory instructors at Harvard have taught rats to run mazes more quickly and more easily when the instructors believed the rats to be of exceptional intelligence.

Dr. Smith went on to say that, to survive, the mind must perceive constant motion. If stripped of these shifting variations, the mind loses all sense of how to function.

Yet in his travels Dr. Smith found that various religious sects show dramatic evidence that the mind is capable of meeting such experiences without panic. A profound religious sensation will be thrown up in the place of the usual hallucination.

The results of the vast range of experiments performed in the last decade on all forms of life are not clear. Indeed, Dr. Smith believes that we know no more about the contact of the brain with the mind than did Aristotle and his contemporaries.

NEWS IN BRIEF

University spoils writers. This will be the theme of a Hart House guest lecture Tuesday by Peter Gzowski, Managing editor of Maclean's Magazine and former Varsity editor. The talk, open to House members only, begins at 7:30 p.m. in the library.

Classical folk dancing, national folk songs, poetry reading and drama were performed Saturday night before a capacity audience in the Ontario College of Education auditorium by the University of Toronto Friends of India Association to celebrate the 14th anniversary of the republic of India. Guest of honor Professor C. B. Macpherson, joked that he was "rather alarmed at the number of non-Indians present," but was encouraged by the large number of Indian students at U of T, whose number had increased appreciably even in the last two years.

Professor James Watson Bain, department head of Chemical Engineering, University of Toronto, died Jan. 23 at his home in Forest Hill. He was 89.

A graduate of the old School of Practical Science at this university, Prof. Bain joined the Chemical Engineering staff in 1916.

An international students' week has been declared by the Students' Administrative Council for the week of Feb. 3-8. During the week an international students festival will be sponsored by the International Students Council. The members of different ethnic clubs and groups around campus have combined their ideas for the week.

Marvin Gelber, Liberal MP for York South, last night stressed the need for Canadian support in removing obstacles to world peace and restoring the rule of law.

Mr. Gelber spoke at the campus Hillel Foundation on "Canada—Ally for Peace"

Students blast governors threat of fees increase

VANCOUVER (CUP) — A statement released by the board of governors of the University of British Columbia concerning financial prospects has drawn angry censure from the students' Alma Mater Society.

The board's statement emphasized the challenge of growth faced by UBC and implied that the next three years would witness substantial increases in student fees.

In a press release issued Wednesday, AMS President Malcolm Scott attacked the hinted fee increase and accused the board of entering into a "sweetheart deal" with the provincial government.

Scott claimed that after increasing the operating grant to UBC this year, the provincial government would revert to its previous contribution of 36 per cent of the board's budget; as a result, fees would continue to rise.

Blustering that UBC was in danger of becoming "a private preserve for rich students", the president outlined AMS plans to fight an increase. These include the drafting of a formal protest to be sent to the board of governors, a request of the provincial government to explain its policies toward the university, and an appeal to the federal government for an increase in its per capita grant.

To hold seminar on mental health February 22

A seminar on student mental health will be held Feb. 22 as a project of student-staff symposium.

Established three years ago to discuss problems of mutual concern to both students and staff, the symposium has previously emphasized topics of academic concern.

In their new approach to students' problems the delegates, students and staff representing the various colleges and faculties, will discuss who the student should see when his problems seem to become overwhelming.

Should he take pills, stay up all night, go to the University Health Service, or ask for an aegrotat?

Students will be encouraged to go to a counsellor at the beginning of the year. While doctors cannot help with the academic problems, they can help ease personal and emotional problems.

The pattern of the conference of student mental health held last May at Queen's will be followed at the symposium.

the credit union

The Students' Administrative Council refused to commit itself Wednesday night on a motion requesting the Campus Co-operative to extend its credit union membership facilities to all students.

It is hoped that the committee set up to investigate the proposals returns with a favorable report.

The value of a student credit union lies in the ways it would serve students both as individuals and as a group.

It would establish a bank on campus which could provide chequing privileges, higher interest rates than chartered banks, low interest loan privileges, dividends and other supplementary benefits.

On the campus-wide level, a credit union could provide investment funds for housing accommodation, co-operative stores, a student centre and other student services.

But perhaps most important, a credit union would put the control of student resources in student hands. Instead of profits going to holding companies, speculators and trust companies, they would be returned to students for use in other areas of student need.

Two of the greatest problems of student action are a lack of funds and a lack of organization. A credit union would provide both of these—the funds by deposits and the organization through the democratic structure of the union.

Nor is a credit union to be feared as a risky venture. By provincial law, credit unions are subject to regular government inspection and must operate under strict bylaws. In addition, all loans are insured.

The SAC, the Co-op and the student body could only benefit from the establishment of a credit union on a campus-wide basis. We hope the persons responsible for deciding the question are capable of seeing this.

squeak, squeak

Well, the boys over at Mickey Mouse College on the corner of Devonshire Place and Hoskin are at it again.

Last fall they moved into their cloistered residence and turned their rose-decked backs on the world.

But then disaster struck when the Master Mousketeer, Dr. Robertson Davies, suggested that such mundane topics as horses and women did not make suitable dinner table conversation.

The fellows were exhorted to dwell on higher things. But the evils of the cross world outside managed to penetrate the barricaded walls, and it was discovered that the virile young men of Mickey Mouse College were actually keeping women in their rooms after 11:30 p.m.

The shame of it all. First they talk about horses and women, and then they consort with women.

If Dr. Davies doesn't stop this sort of thing from happening now, the next thing we know the fellows will be smoking in the washroom; and from there it is only a short step to the outside world, where sin and debauchery rule.

We mourn, with Dr. Davies, the lost virtues of the Mickey Mouse College fellows.

MPs disagree on lowering voting age

By ROBERT COCKRELL

OTTAWA (CUP SPECIAL)—Last session the House Committee on Privileges and Elections agreed unanimously in adopting a motion to extend the franchise to all persons 18 years of age and over. It does not appear likely, however, that all parties will be in harmony when and if the motion comes before the House of Commons this session.

In a pre-Christmas survey House members were asked what position their parties were likely to take on the floor.

Richard Cashin (L-St. John's West) commented that the Prime Minister supported lowering the voting age to 18 on the floor of the House a few years back, and "I fully expect that this matter will be supported by the Liberal Party."

Paul Martineau (PC—Pontiac-Temiskamingue) admitted that his party "has not formulated publicly its policy," and then his remarks would be "entirely personal."

David Orlikow (NDP—Winnipeg N.) said that his party "will support the revision of the Elections Act to permit persons 18 years of age and over to vote."

Robert Thompson (SC—Red Deer) remarked that it was a Social Credit policy decision to drop the voting age to 18 years at the last National Convention.

Real Caouette (Creditiste—Villeneuve) answered: "Nous endosserons la mesure pour le droit de vote à 18 ans, si elle est proposée aux Communes."

To this point there appeared to be no dissent, but when asked whether "all 18 years old should vote, and not just those in Armed Service" there was some contention.

Mr. Cashin advocated lowering the voting age entirely. It did not matter to the Liberal Party whether these people should be in school or University students, or members of the Armed Forces.

Mr. Martineau disagreed. He stated that all 18 year olds should vote, it was necessary

A brief look at the US political scene

By MURRAY SOUPCOFF

Despite the attraction of truly Canadian celebrities like Roy Thomson, Gordie Howe, and Bob Goulet, Canadians are again turning their interest to the United States where the presidential nominating race is once more getting under way.

Most speculation at this time centres around the Republican Party nomination. The Republicans are in a slap-happy mood. Governor Rockefeller got a divorce and now the Republicans want to divorce him. As a result, one of the leading contenders for the Republican nomination is right-minded Barry Goldwater. Goldwater is a conservative. He is also an American. According to him the two are inseparable. Goldwater is so deep and forthright that he employs a computer machine to go over his past statements and determine what he believes. This is surprising since he usually distrusts innovations such as electricity.

Such measures, however, are necessary to decide policy on problems such as the civil rights question. It seems that such problems, for unaccountable reasons, are more complicated than piloting a plane. Nevertheless, Goldwater would really like the United States to ignore such irksome and unimportant issues as civil rights and concentrate on her role as a buttress of freedom. Whatever the case, he has passed the test of a good American and a good politician. He appeared on the Jack Paar T.V. show.

SEX ON CAMPUS

I should like to correct certain particulars which appeared in your article of Jan. 13, Sex is better in college but sometimes it's difficult. The fact that the article was done with an air of flippancy, rather than with the seriousness which the subject deserves, is your business. However, your misinformation, especially as it concerns the Humanist and Unitarian Society, and particularly the Caledon week-end you mention, is mine. I happened to be the moderator of the seminar on Sex and Morality. Not only did you fail to call the group by its correct name — it is not the "Humanitarian Society" — but you also referred to it as the "20-member Humanitarian Society". The membership is more than double that number with only 25 present on that particular weekend. Further, only two of the participants were philosophy lecturers, the third being one of Toronto's specialists in the field of criminal sexuality.

Now to the heart of the matter. You wrote: "students had voted unanimously that they would have pre-marital intercourse, if presented with the opportunity." This is wrong to the point of being malicious. The basic concern of the faculty present was with the gap which exists between our culture's professed sexual morality, and that which is actually practised. Kinsey was painstaking and perhaps shock-

Our text was the Quaker booklet on sexual morality which seriously attempts to point out that we are in an age of moral transition regarding both pre-marital and extramarital relations. After hours of careful discussion, scholarly lectures and reading, a vote was taken asking the question: "Providing you were deeply in love, aware of the problems involved, and confident that neither you nor your partner were bound by traditional morality to the point that feelings of guilt would ensue, would it be wrong to have pre-marital sexual intercourse?" The answer came back unanimously "NO". Throughout the seminar all present stressed the responsibilities which one member of society has for all others.

SUPPORTS UJA

I have read your recent editorial on the UJA, and the letter which supports its stand, with dismay. They display such faulty reasoning and attitudes that it is difficult to believe that they are prompted by their professed causes.

It seems to me sufficient only to put in juxtaposition the two causes they compare for it to be realized that a comparison of this sort is inapplicable. Can the evil of applying social pressure in order to raise funds for admittedly worthwhile

CATHOLIC

I am so viewer, Al by the pa gade Cath Loughlin In the Cath has made tion of a To quot man Cath who quite to consider another question; that is, "whether or not the age of majority should be lowered to 18 years?" He felt that if this was the case the he "should consider that voting privileges should likewise be extended." He further commented that most 18 year olds are "still in attendance in school in University, and therefore not generally fully assuming all duties and prerogatives of citizens having reached their majority." This was contrary to Mr. Cashin's viewpoint: "many young people go into industry immediately upon graduation from high school at an average age of 18, and, therefore pay taxes without representation until the age of 21.

Mr. Martineau went further in saying that because "it is a period of life particularly suited for training, observation, formation of character and the acquiring of skills or training for a career, and not because of any lack of intelligence or incapacity of comprehending the issues", he was of the opinion that the voting age should correspond to the legal age of majority, that is, 21 years of age.

The new Democrats, although no reasons were given, thought "all 18 year olds should be permitted to vote."

Mr. Thompson quoted a policy decision passed at the last Social Credit National Convention "that the voting age be lowered to 18 years of age; furthermore, Social Credit Governments in Alberta and British Columbia have taken the lead in this a number of years ago by lowering the voting age to 19 years."

Mr. Caouette agreed with Mr. Cashin that all young people should be given the vote, "sans discrimination aevraient avoir le droit de vote a 18 ans."

Did the members feel that their Party's reasoning was the correct position to take?

Mr. Cashin, Mr. Orlikow and Mr. Caouette emphatically stated they thought it was. Mr. Thompson felt that the principle was correct but felt "19 years of age would be more generally acceptable." Mr. Martineau further pointed out "this is not strictly a party matter but should be decided upon by individual members according to their conscience and belief."

A variety of answers were received to the following question. "Would you vote for an 18 year old in your constituency?"

Mr. Cashin: "If he was a Liberal I would. If I was asked to support an 18 year old I would do it on the basis of his qualifications without regard to his age."

Mr. Martineau: "Age is not a primary consideration. I would support a candidate which, in my opinion, because of his experience, maturity of judgment, ability, knowledge of public affairs, energy and integrity, is likely to become the best representative. I would not dogmatically reject an 18 year old candidate simply because of his age if his other qualifications made him a better candidate. I would also consider the programme and achievements of the Party which he represents."

Mr. Orlikow: "I would vote for any candidate regardless of age, who supported the ideals in which I believe."

Mr. Thompson: "In my opinion, there should be requirements, and one of the requirements of a candidate should be that he is 21 years of age."

Mr. Caouette: "Tout depend de la personnalite du candidate, du programme qu'il defend, de la qualite de ses adversaires et de leur programme"

It is presently estimated that there are over 100,000 high-school and university students between the ages of 18 and 21. Added to this figure is some one million or more young people who would possibly receive the vote. The effect of such an extended franchise is completely unpredictable and political pundits hesitate to say what results such new voters would have on a national election scene.

When the House reconvenes this February, the parties will give a great deal of careful thought to extending the franchise to 18 years, for it could decrease their present House standings or increase them handsomely in the next federal election and no one knows which.

as an authority on Ro- lic doctrine an outsider obviously has an ax to tes. In that case, Richard Nixon may be looked on as a moderate candidate for the Republican nomination.

Many critics insist that Nixon stands for anything and everything depending on who he's speaking to. This is not true. He has stood for specific things. He has stood for the office of Vice-President, the office of President and the office of Governor of California. And it was Nixon who won the "Kitchen debate" with Khrushchev in Moscow in 1959. He called the Russian Premier a Communist. Mr. Nixon's further efforts at debate in the United States were less successful.

Nevertheless, Nixon on more than one occasion has indicated that he believes that this is the twentieth century, and this in itself may be a glimmer of hope.

... at last

grind is a risky business. McLoughlin's theology ranks with the worst I have ever seen. If the interpretations quoted by Mr. Walker are typical of McLoughlin's work in the seminary, I am surprised that he qualified for Holy Orders.

On the question of immorality among the clergy, few will agree with McLoughlin. Life magazine in a recent article on Catholicism (Oct. 18, 1963) had this to say: "...the religious of today are, without question, men and women of good quality—clerical scandal, for example, is so rare now as to rate newspaper headlines when it happens."

In an age in which Christians all over the world are trying valiantly to unite in that spirit of love which animates all of their teachings, books like McLoughlin's and reviews like Mr. Walker's are most regrettable. Fortunately they will be ignored by those whose wisdom can rise above crass sensationalism.

Look Back: Varsity's finest

By BILL CAMERON

Jimmy Porter is angry; he rages and whines around his Midlands attic, looking for a 'worthy enemy', a human scratching-post, a comrade-in-arms in the guerrilla campaign against soft, sticky respectability. His wife Alison is a hostage from the posh front, passive and almost timorous—hit her, and she rebounds like a silent and senseless punching-bag. His friend Cliff is a warm, responsive, goodhearted boy without the ability to take the war seriously; his mistress, Helena, abdicates from the war in a kind of moral amnesia; his enemy, Colonel Redfern, Alison's father, covertly admires him and is too broken a soldier to oppose him.

David Gardner's Hart House production of Osborne's Look Back in Anger takes the whole situation and tips it over into your lap. His direction is flawless, because it is invisible; he has taken powerful and intelligent student actors and has released them into a banshee world of brawl and turmoil, in the best university production for some time.

The problems of the production rise out of the occasional imbalances of the book. Osborne, in his first play, has identified so completely with his articulate, incandescent lead that the secondary characters, especially the two women, take shape in the first two acts as mere backboards for Jimmy's rages. Osborne has given his women all the work and none of the gravity—Alison and Helena, in the second act especially, are forced to carry long and slightly over-written "information" scenes.

These problems, however, disappear completely in the third act, one of the finest of the modern English theatre. The Hart House production is completely engrossing when it gets rolling. Richard P. Saul is powerful and versatile as Jimmy Porter—his nagging, biting Jimmy of the first act is a little lost in overprecise diction and overpacing, but when Jimmy's real emotions and angers are aroused, Saul comes into his own. From his second entrance on, he demonstrates precisely the savagery and intelligence the part demands.

It is difficult to pick 'best performance' of the evening, but certainly John Labow's Cliff is most consistent. Right from the beginning of the play, Labow is entirely convincing as the randy little Welshman who plays no-man's-land between Jimmy and the rest of the world.

Marita Ensio plays a badgered, oppressed Alison; part of the responsibility for her overtimidity in the first act must go to the playwright, who is generally less successful with his women than his male leads. Not until the third act is Miss Ensio allowed to display any real depth of performance, but in that third act she turns in a beautifully turned and sensitive portrayal of a crushed and abused woman.

Sheila MacDonald, as Helena, has got hold of the most difficult part of the play. Not only does she arrive almost out of nowhere and say very little of consequence in Act Two, but her character remains unidimensional until Act Three. At that point she must assert a believable personality against a strong and articulate Jimmy, who has already been swinging for two acts. Miss MacDonald manages it in a competent and self-possessed manner, and her last scene (in that phenomenal third act) demonstrates a fine and professional facility for controlled emotional dialogue. Miss Ensio and Miss MacDonald together fill out and make believable Osborne's idea of the female as a passive, descriptive being; this is, I think, the one absolute essential for the success of the play.

Colonel Redfern is shortchanged. He is a broken representative of a society to which the audience is prepared in advance to be hostile; but Peter Aston does a good job by the Colonel, attempting to balance the play without being obtrusive about it.

The play's effect is due in great part to Donald Acaster's set design. Acaster has raised the Hart House stage two feet, and raked it back, rising from the pit, so that the jumbled attic seems to be collapsing right into the audience—as, in one way or another, it does. His avoidance of right angles and chaotic arrangement of furniture and props becomes an expression in the design of the characters' confusion and aimless anger. As far as production goes, I have few niggles; lighting and sound cue troubles should be cleared up by Monday, and I suppose there's nothing to be done about the bloody anthem.

Look Back in Anger has everything going for it; an excellent director, a small and professional cast, an imaginative and effective production. It is probably the most worthwhile production in Hart House, or anywhere else in the university, in some years. It runs until Saturday.

Varsity may have a boxer in the 1964 Olympics

When the Tokyo Olympics and University of Toronto are used in the same sentence the name of Bruce Kidd usually is included in the conversation. But Varsity may have another athlete competing for Canada in the 1964 Olympic Games.

Varsity boxing coach Tony Canzano was so pleased with the performance of sophomore Mike Rapsey at Hart House Saturday night that he announced he may train Rapsey for the Tokyo games.

Rapsey, who won the intercollegiate 130-pound title last year, was impressive in his three-round exhibition bout with Julie Mandell of Spadina YMHA, the former Canadian amateur lightweight champion. Although no decisions were made during the exhibition program, it was felt that Rapsey had the better of Mandell in at least two of the three rounds.

Canzano feels that Rapsey has yet to reach top form and with more training and competition might win a berth on the Canadian Olymp-pic team. Canzano plans to line up bouts for Rapsey after the unofficial intercollegiate championships against Royal Military College next month.

Rapsey began boxing at
in his freshman year at U of

Canzano was pleased with his entire team Saturday night, especially defending college titlists Ron Brooks and Ron McGregor. Both have shown improvement over last year. Also impressive were veterans Tom Mann and Frank McArdle and rookie Jim Rock.

String extended to seven

Fencers pressed for win

Undeclared Varsity Fencing Blues battled to a dramatic 15-12 victory over Rochester Institute of Technology at Hart House Saturday to extend their flawless record this season to seven.

In each of the foil, sabre, and epee competitions Blues squeaked out 5-4 round wins, but not before the score in each weapon was deadlocked at 4-4.

Helmut Microys captured the decisive bout in foil after a hair-raising duel with RIT's top fencer Bob Lambert, and repeated the trick in epee with Mike Gessinger suffering the loss. Dependable Vladimir Hatschinski won the tie-breaking bout in sabre.

Another outstanding Blue at the tournament was Nan-sing Ho who took 4 of 6 bouts. Microys captured all but one of his six bouts, while Hatschinski split six bouts.

Blues remain idle until the OQAA Championships in Montreal February 8. Although the squad's exhibition record makes them league favorites, Imre Hennyey's boys have not faced all the schools which will compete in the championships.

McCarthy adds another title

Trinity sophomore Leighton McCarthy, a member of Varsity's intercollegiate squash team, won the Ontario Junior squash championship yesterday by upsetting Andy Mulzer of the Hamilton Thistle Club, 3-2.
Mulzer was the defending champion and a former runner-up for the Canadian junior title.

Scores of the match, which took place at the Toronto
Lawn Tennis Club were, 13-15, 15-12, 15-10, 3-15, 15-8.

Both McCarthy and Mulzer were eliminated earlier in the weekend in the men's senior playdowns. McCarthy advanced to the second round before losing to Gord Duckworth of the Toronto
Cricket Club, 3-2.

In winning the junior title,
McCarthy eliminated Ian Brooker of Toronto Cricket Club, 3-0, Mike Usatis of Western, 3-1, and Steve Noyes of Toronto Lawn Tennis Club, 3-1, in the first three rounds.

McCarthy is also the Toronto and District "C" champion, having won that title last fall.

Cagers cage Tigers in poor show

If Toronto Varsity basketball Blues anticipated that Saturday's game would be a good preliminary workout for their important Tuesday night encounter here with Western, they were mistaken.

Blues spent a great part of the evening travelling with the ball, throwing it away, colliding with the opposition and doing up shoelaces—but they still went away from Hart House with an easy 85-60 victory over Rochester Institute of Technology Tigers.

The game may have succeeded in getting most of the bad moves out of Blues' systems, or it may prove to be detrimental to their play, which will have to be sharp against Western.

Despite Blues' poor performance, they completely outclassed the inept Tigers whose lack of ability conducted to sloppiness. Only guard Doug Gustin was able to penetrate Varsity's defence.

Gustin gained the approval of the crowd with several spectacular drives culminated by underhand scoring shots. These drives helped him total 18 points to top Rochester. Gustin netted all his points in the first half before fouling out in the final minute of the half.

Varsity centre Ed Bordas emerged from the scrappy contest as high scorer. He hooped 23-points on 11 field goals and a single foul shot and was the chief reason why Tigers failed to grab an offensive rebound in the first half.

Toronto guards Dave West and Bill Woloshyn added 20 and 15 points respectively. John O'Neill netted 12 points, 10 in the first half when Blues went ahead 49-34.

The game began slowly with the score only 11-6 after seven minutes. O'Neill then replaced Arvo Neidre and Blues moved to a 30-16 lead at the end of the first quarter. They increased the margin to 37-21 in the 13th minute and stayed ahead for the 43-28 advantage at the half.

After the intermission, play became worse as the prevalent confusion became comedy. The climax occurred when five-foot, eight-inch Bob Przewlocki was sent in to the fray for Rochester. He was assigned to cover six-foot, six-inch Ed Bordas.

Blues mounted their greatest margin at the end of the third quarter with the score 70-43. They never lost the lead in handing Tigers their 11th loss in 12 starts this season.

While Rochester provided little competition, Western promises to be tough. Mustangs are again led by all-star Tom Williamson who won the scoring title last year. His partner at the other guard position, Leo Innocente, did not play last year but was an all-star in 1961-62. Forwards Barry Mitchelson, Wally Dick and Doug Brown round out the starting squad.

Mustangs lost their first game of the year after running up four straight victories when Windsor Lancers defeated them, 107-64, in Windsor Saturday night.

Under the Basket—Blues should have everyone ready for Tuesday night's game. Dave Ouchterlony and John O'Neill, both suffering from injured legs, played against Rochester... When asked for a one-word capsule comment to describe the game, Ouchterlony retorted "hockey".

Tigers scored 24 of their points on free throws as Blues incurred frequent fouls in the latter stages... Blues shot about 30 per cent in the game.

Blues: — Bordas (23), West (20), Woloshyn (15), O'Neill (12), Ouchterlony (6), Andrew (5), Kimel (2), McKenzie (2), Sheldon (1), Baranowicz, Neidre.
Rochester: — Gustin (18), Sinack (13), Dubos (9), Dungey (9), Vance (5), Albertine (2), Przewlocki (2), Schneider (2), Ash, Roe, Nash.

COLLEGE PUCK & CAGE ROUNDUP

Lancers hand 'Stangs worst defeat in history

Windsor Lancers just about eliminated all doubt that they will successfully defend their senior intercollegiate basketball championship when they trounced Western Mustangs, 107-64, Saturday night in Windsor. It was the worst defeat suffered by Western in the history of competition between the two teams.

Lancers have a 5-0 record and only have to defeat Waterloo Warriors to dispel all challenges for the Wilson Cup. Warriors, who also won their fifth game in a row, defeating McMaster Marauders, 70-50, Saturday night at Waterloo, play at Windsor Saturday.

Joe Green paced Lancers, scoring 25 points, followed by Bob Horvath, 21, Ed Petryshyn, 15, Bill Hassett 14, and Bill Brown, 10. Windsor has scored more than 100 points in three of their wins and has averaged 99.2 points per game.

Barry Mitchelson was high scorer for Western with 19 points. Doug Brown hooped 12 and Leo Innocente 11. Guard Tom Williamson, who went into the game tied with Toronto's Dave West for the league scoring lead, was held to only seven points. He had been averaging 25 points per game.

Jim Hann led Warriors over Marauders, hooping 17. Jerry Raphael had 16 and Dick Aldridge 14. Court Heinbecker topped Mac with 11. Pete Ewing had 10.

Queen's Golden Gaels picked up their first two wins after four defeats. They defeated McGill Redmen, 73-34, Friday in Kingston and 60-46 Saturday in Montreal. Bob Howes scored 19 for Gaels Friday and Doug Evans had 22 Saturday. Bruce Randall scored 14 for McGill Saturday.

HOCKEY

McMaster Marlins remained two points ahead in the Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League, defeating Queen's, 6-3, Friday in Dundas, Ont. while Toronto Blues edged Waterloo, 5-4, in Toronto.

Warriors won their first game of the season, defeating Queen's, 7-5, Saturday in Waterloo. Laval bombed McGill, 8-2, in Montreal in Saturday's other game.

Pete Randle scored three goals for Marlins against Queen's. Jim McLellan, John Savage and Bob Pond netted the others. John Van Brunt, with two, and Pete Weston scored for Queen's.

Waterloo counted three goals within 61 seconds in the third period to break open a 3-3 tie with Queen's. Don Mervyn scored three goals and Dave Passmore two to pace Warriors. Stan Sharman and Jerry Lawless counted the others. Weston, two goals, Larry Dinsmore, Larry Jones and Van Brunt scored for Gaels.

Andre Hebert, Michel Roy and Harold Martel each scored twice to lead Laval over McGill. Paul Doucet and Marcelin Tremblay were the other Laval scorers. Bert Halliwell and Doug Carr scored for McGill.

Old Varsity swim record still intact

Varsity's four-man 400-yard free style relay swim team failed in an attempt to break its own Canadian record at Hart House Saturday night.

The Varsity team swam the 400 yards in 3:27.9, 1.1 seconds slower than the record set at Hart House last year. Members of the team were Tom Verth, Graeme Barber, Pete Richardson and Rob Campbell.

Failure to break the record was blamed on three of the swimmers being clocked in slower times than they had anticipated. Only rookie Campbell turned in a faster time in his 100 yards than had been expected, 52 seconds flat. Verth's 51.0 was the fastest of the four but slower than the 49.6 he was timed in last year.

Varsity still holds five Canadian relay records. University of Western Ontario holds the only other relay record in the books.

Blues' entire team will oppose Bowling Green in a dual meet at Hart House Saturday.

North American reputation is damaged

By UNCLE HARRY

Are North American distance runners too soft? This question was posed Friday night at Maple Leaf Gardens by Australia's Albie Thomas. For while delighting patrons to the Tely-Maple Leaf Indoor Games by tying the world indoor record for three miles, little Albie embarrassed two of this continent's top three-milers.

Distance runners here have always been held in contempt by their counterparts in the rest of the athletic world because in international competitions the North Americans usually finish up the track.

Although North Americans have placed high on world rankings in recent years, Thomas won his Gardens race so handily, one might wonder if recent progress has been grossly overrated. The visitor from down under assumed the lead from the gun, broke contact with rivals Bruce Kidd and Bob Schul before the 11-mile mark, and breasted the tape with a good 80-yard lead.

But according to Albie, the victory was merely a tactical one. He planned to run the first two miles of the race unusually fast, break contact early, and thus discourage his rivals. And the strategy succeeded.

Said Kidd: "I was prepared to go through two miles about nine minutes, not 8:49."

The quick early pace was paid for by the agony of the last mile, but encouraged by the sellout 14,183 crowd, Albie finished with a smile on his face. As Schul later admitted to Kidd: "Bruce, we've been taken to the cleaners."

In the race for second place, Schul nipped Kidd in 13:36.9.

Thomas' 13:26.4 three-miles was quite similar to the board debut of Murray Halberg three years ago. Then the grizzled kiwi raced through the first mile of a two-mile race in 4:12 and held on to a then world's best of 8:34.5. Both south sea visitors were reluctant to trade elbows on the unfamiliar tight turns, and overcame this shyness by leading the whole race.

The aussie's time was one of five indoor bests recorded at the meet. The Detroit airport was fogged in so Hayes Jones drove to Toronto, and despite the resulting fatigue, he streaked to a world record-breaking 5.9 win in the 50-yard hurdles. Jones, whose string of hurdles wins has been reckoned anywhere from 50 to 54, modestly admits the figure only stands at 49.

Three home-town teenagers gave their fans plenty to cheer about. Abbie Hoffman soloed an 880-yard run in 2:11.9, Nancy McCredie pushed the women's shot 52' 11 3/4", and Cathy Chapman outprinted Tammy Davis in the 50-yard hurdles in 6.7. Although all performances are the best ever recorded indoors, these events are seldom staged at indoor meets elsewhere.

Big kicker Bill Crothers resorted to rare lead-all-the-way tactics before his home crowd, and the phantom pharmacist was given his toughest test of this season by Missouri's Ralph Lingle. But although Lingle was never more than four yards behind, 1,000-yard king Crothers was in complete command and notched up his 16th consecutive win in 2:08.3.

Varsity's mile relay quartet of Mike Baird, Gurston Dacks, Nelles van Loon, and Rod Chintu gave the crowd one of the evening's tightest races. Anchorman Chintu received the baton 10 yards behind McMaster's Paul Hoffman and Western's Don McCarten. He overcame the deficit with less than a lap to go, but couldn't sustain his drive and the other two runners strained by. All three teams were given identical clockings of 3:32.2.

In the afternoon college show, Blues collected one silver and three bronze medals. Gurston Dacks placed second to John Heller of Wayne State in the 1,000-yard run, while Dave Cook, Matti Raudoja, and Craig Cook took thirds in the hurdles, pole vault, and high jump respectively.

In the Infield: Most athletes were pleased with the Gardens new $25,000 track. There had been fear the spruce boards would be too thick. . .

"What am I doing here?", Varsity's Bruce Kidd (left) seems to be asking himself at the start of the feature three-mile race at the Tely-MLG Games Friday. Albie Thomas (right) of Australia looks somewhat more assured of the outcome.

The little aussie won the race in a record-tying 13:26.4.

The evening vault took its toll. Perennial 16 footers Dave Turk, C. K. Yang, and Rolando Cruz were unable to clear 15'6", while John Uelses pulled a hamstring at tempting that height. John Pennel was on the limp all night, and while he did go over 16', he lost on the fewer misses rule to California's Jeff Chase.

Blues fail again to break loose

Aitken saves the day in 5-4 win

By GORD BELLMORE

Waterloo Warriors used the same tactics that University of Montreal used one week before to beat Varsity Blues, and just missed pulling off the biggest upset of the season Friday night at Varsity Arena.

Only a spectacular save by Varsity goalie Gary Aitken on Warriors' Terry Cooke saved the 5-4 victory for Blues. The visitors had pulled netminder Mike Durnan for an extra attacker in the final minute, although they had a man in the penalty box, and a near-fatal lapse by Blues' defence allowed Cooke to go uncovered in front of Aitken.

The goalie caught Cooke's shot from point-blank range as he lunged out at the Warrior forward.

As against Montreal, Warriors were forced into a defensive game and they performed their checking duties with frustrating efficiency. For the final two periods Blues pressed continually but Waterloo tied them up.

On the other hand, Warriors gave Blues a lesson in how to capitalize on scoring opportunities. The visitors had precious few chances, but cashed in on most of them.

In the second period Warriors had but three shots on Aitken, and they scored on two. The other was a clearing shot from centre.

Sloppiness on the part of Blues' usually solid defence gave both Dave Passmore and Jerry Lawless of Warriors clear chances on goal, and they both promptly scored. Aitken had little chance on the goals that beat him. Stan Sharman counted the other two Waterloo goals.

Blues were lucky to escape with the win. For the third time in a row they dominated play, but inability to score cost them the Montreal game, and almost cost them the embarrassment of a tie with Warriors.

The five goals Blues scored was the lowest number any team has netted against Warriors this year. Their opposition had scored 46 goals in five games before Friday.

The only bright spot for Blues was the play of the newly formed line of Stu McNeil and the Monteith brothers, Hank and Steve. They were in on all five Toronto goals.

This line, combined with Sonny Osborne and Ian Sinclair to form Blues new power play, clicked for two goals.

Sinclair and Hank Monteith scored with Warriors a man short. Monteith's goal came on a beautifully executed three-way passing play, a manoeuvre coach Joe Kane had introduced in practice the night before.

McNeil, Steve Monteith, and Bob Awrey scored the other Varsity goals. Hank Monteith got three assists besides his goal.

STRAY SHOTS: The three stars were Hank Monteith, Jerry Lawless of Waterloo and Ian Sinclair. . . . The win put Blues back in sole possession of second place, two points behind McMaster. . . .

Announce plans for new college

Innis College, named after Toronto's renowned social scientist Harold Innis, will open this fall as U of T's newest federated college.

Announcement of the multi-faculty college's opening was made Monday by President Claude Bissell. Dr. Robin Harris, acting principal of University College, was named Innis' first principal.

The new college will be a sister institution to adjacent New College. Of similar architectural lines, Innis will rise on the site of a parking lot presently located along Willcocks St. and Spadina Ave. It will also front on Classic Ave.

Both Innis and New Colleges are expected to ultimately have 900 students each, with residence accommodation for 300 men in each. Dr. Harris indicated yesterday that another college being planned will have considerable accommodations for women students, graduate and undergraduate.

Innis is expected to open with over 200 students in September. They will have their common and meeting rooms in temporary quarters, where the college's administrative offices will also be located until space in the new building will be available.

New College administrative offices are expected to be finished in time for registration this fall, while living and dining quarters are planned for completion by Christmas. Innis will permanently share dining facilities located in the New College building.

"The new college is opening in September because the expected enrolment in the faculty of Arts will be more than the present five colleges can accommodate," Dr. Harris said yesterday.

There were 6,852 full-time arts and science students registered in November. Present freshman enrolment (2,500) is expected to rise to 2,700 next year. The other colleges have reached the saturation point.

He said U of T will reach its maximum arts enrolment in 1965. Scarborough College (500), Brock University (500) and relocated York will all not open until 1965. "Until then, Toronto has to accommodate more entering students," Dr. Harris said.

Dr. Harris indicated that many freshmen applying for admission to the other five colleges might have to enter Innis College, simply because the other colleges would not have enough room. "This does not at all mean that Innis students will be those with low marks — just those who could not find room elsewhere." Last year, some students were referred to other colleges.

Specific details regarding type of "temporary" quarters to be used and accommodation facilities for women at the new College were not finalized, Dr. Harris said.

"Portables are being investigated—but we will probably not be using the type many public schools are using. There is room available in a number of campus buildings."

Lampy says U of T bilks city of taxes

Controller Alan Lampport charged the University of Toronto last week of defrauding the city out of millions of dollars in taxable property. "It's a serious inequity," said Mr. Lampport when questioned in an interview. "They have taken over two million dollars of taxpaying property in some expansion program and make it taxfree" (The expansion mentioned is the one west of St. George St.)

He said the University gets services from the city for which even the parliament buildings have to pay, "yet the university is the only organization which doesn't pay."

As an educational institution the university is tax-exempt under provincial law.

"It's completely unfair that the stroke of a political pen should wipe out the rights of the people. All the little people of Toronto have to pay their Hydro and their other bills," Mr. Lampport, told The Varsity.

Mr. Lampport said the solution was for the university to be maintained by the federal and provincial Government out of the taxes of the people of Ontario and Canada.

Waterloo to remain in CUS

WATERLOO (CUP) The Waterloo University College student council voted 6-4 to remain in the Canadian Union of Students at a special meeting last night.

The council voted in favor of leaving CUS two weeks ago. They submitted a letter of resignation, but it was not accepted by CUS national president, Dave Jenkins.

Jenkins went to Waterloo shortly after the first motion passed, and returned again Monday. A motion to remain was made Monday, but was tabled until last night's meeting.

Speaking in favor of remaining, council vice-president, Gordon Rich, said that about 40 per cent of the fault lay with the CUS office, while the rest could be laid at the feet of the council.

Waterloo originally decided to leave because they felt CUS was not providing enough benefits for the $768 fees.

The council also disagreed with some of the CUS executive decisions, and questioned the equal representation given to the French language universities.

they were responsible for the fall of two great empires: the Roman and, more recently the British.

Chloe Claxton, (III Trin) asserted that women were the driving force behind civilization and the civilizing agent in any society.

Last night, the Skulemen proved decisively that, "Engineers have the right attitude toward campus life."

Mike Kisly (IV APSC) stated that a healthy attitude toward university life involved enthusiasm and sincerity. He cited such engineering feats as the Polycann week-end and March for Canada as examples of Skule's contribution to the university despite the restrictions of a heavy work schedule.

Don Munro (IV APSC) described the arguments of the opposition as being the result of the artisans' misconception of engineers and their activities. He went on to describe the engineers as being better dressed and better looking than their counterparts in other faculties.

Bill Orr (II Vic) chastised the engineers as being a law unto themselves and entirely oblivious to any opinion concerning them.

Claims universities crush natural writing talent

Universities are stultifying any natural talent writers might have, Peter Gzowski, managing editor of Maclean's Magazine, said last night.

"They are failing to do the job they could," he said.

Speaking at a Hart House Library Evening, the former Varsity editor criticized the entire system of teaching literature to undergraduates.

"A lecturer tells the student that a certain book is great," he said, "and then the student goes to the library, reads a few criticisms and finds out why the book is great."

"But he doesn't realize that the whole point of literature is communication."

Mr. Gzowski said students should be encouraged to read more contemporary literature instead of being bogged down by Hawthorne, James and Fielding.

"A better thing to do," he said, "would be to assign him a year in which he would read books written no earlier than 1950."

These books would be concerned with today's issues and a student can be much more moved by these than by the classics.

"I didn't start to enjoy reading till two years after I got out of university," he said.

Mr. Gzowski also criticized the methods of research a student learns at university. True research only begins at the library but "at university research ends at the library," he said.

He also lamented the fact that more writers are not connected with the university, which means that budding writers cannot talk to and learn from them.

"I don't see why the university here doesn't bring back Mordicai Richler from England."

Recalling his own experiences, Mr. Gzowski said much of the copy handed in to magazines in Canada is illiterate.

"Letters to the editor of the Spectator in England are as good as the best articles in Maclean's and better than editorials in the Globe and Mail."

He said in England people have more of a background of reading and discussing books. In Canada there is much less association with contemporary literature on the undergraduate level and too much studying of tradition.

"It would be possible to write Catcher in the Rye without having studied a lot of literary tradition," he said.

"Everything I learned about writing I learned after university."

He said he was desperately looking for good writers because there simply are not enough around.

"I think it's shameful that a person of 28 could become managing editor of such an important magazine as Maclean's," he added.

Government must watch universities

Education Minister William Davis told the third annual conference of Canadian Universities and College Registrars Sunday that the government must accompany its increasing financial aid to universities with an increasing interest in university administration.

The result of this new government action will be an outburst of opinions on matters that have not previously been of public concern, which, Mr. Davis assured his audience, need not be an infringement of the universities' academic freedom.

Skule drops, then wins on debates

The Engineers split two debates this week.

They fell Monday to St. Hilda's on the resolution, Women will be the last animal to be civilized by man. Last night they convinced Victoria debaters that Engineers have healthy campus attitudes.

Thom Beasley (IV APSC) remarked that women ought to be kept from society, since

Drugs can induce religious experience

Drugs can induce religious experience and should be made more available to qualified persons for research purposes, a philosophy professor and expert on comparative religion said Monday night.

"I don't want to come here in the guise of adobe pedler—disguised as a lecturer," Dr. Huston Smith of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology told a large audience in University College's West Hall.

But he pleaded with "the custodians of such drugs as LSD" to allow "qualified persons" to obtain hallucination-producing drugs. He defined qualified persons as those who would not be physically or mentally harmed.

The Canadian Federal health department's food and drugs directorate has allowed the use of LSD for some time, but only by qualified psychiatrists in institutions approved by the health minister.

Dr. Smith said there is no real way of distinguishing between natural religious experience and drug-induced ones.

One-third to one-quarter of any cross section of the population, in a normal atmosphere, is capable of drug-induced religious experience, Dr. Smith said.

"For some it will be terrible.

"For some it will be primarily an experience of kicks—a great lark."

Dr. Smith said skeptics of religion will welcome the news that religious experience can be artificially induced. "This is just what we've been saying all along," they will say. Religion is a flight into fantasy. They will say Karl Marx was literally right when he said religion is the opiate of the people."

Such skeptics will be "hard to answer," he said.

He spoke of possible abuses of LSD (technically known as LSD 25 or lysergic acid diethylamide).

"There are those who would like to succeed in religion without really trying," he said. "The prospects of . . . instant salvation through brain chemistry . . . will dance like sugar plums in their heads."

But persons taking LSD and obtaining religious experience from it "can't stay in these states and meet the demands of practical life. Every experience, however powerful, . . . loses its force."

In an aside, he gave an example of what he meant by a short-lived experience: "Hopeless alcoholics . . . with a single session of LSD can stay off the bottle for an incredible length of time. But the influence does fail."

His explanation of how hallucinogens operate on the human mind was, he admitted, partly assumption. He said persons are constantly being bombarded with impressions but have developed screen out many of the impressions.

If we found ourselves concentrating on the thousands of impressions simultaneously, we couldn't focus on the one or two important things of any moment—"like the car bearing down on us."

Hallucinogens knock out for a while these screening enzymes.

What people see while in a hallucinogen trance "aren't necessarily hallucinations," he said.

Turning to the legal and safety problems surrounding hallucinogens, Dr. Smith said there are many contrary opinions.

"We are speaking here of an area charged with contro-

"The amount of LSD that causes from eight to 11 hours of an extraordinary change of consciousness is a speck so small that one is not sure whether one can see it or not."

So, he said there must be controls. But he pleaded for a middle ground. Some persons classify LSD with opium, hashish and heroin, he said, while there are others who equate it to the eucharist and the sacrament.

Of cabbages and Davies

Massey College fellows met Monday night and pondering their image, decided that the revelation of threads having been stuck across fire doors did the college little good.

Master Robertson Davies said it was unfortunate that his comments about use of the fire escapes had coincidentally been followed by the thread incident.

He said the building superintendent had independently placed the threads to check whether the fire doors were being used.

College fellows, seeing the threads affixed by sealing wax, assumed it was to prevent them from smuggling their girl friends out of the college after the 11:30 p.m. curfew.

Dr. Davies had said last week that if the students stopped using the fire escapes for a month, he would consider stopping having "reminder" bells rung each night at 11:30.

Dr. Davies said he was disturbed about reports in the Toronto Telegram and Daily Star which said college officials had ordered the threads placed to curb girl-smuggling.

The Varsity reported that a junior fellow had seen the threads being placed. The Varsity also reported Dr. Davies' denial that he had ordered the move.

Concerning the curfew, Dr. Davies reiterated his earlier statement that there is only a "recommendation" that girls be out of the residence by 11:30 p.m. But a Massey College fellow told The Varsity such recommendations, if overlooked, might eventually lead to expulsion from the residence.

Monday night, when the smoke had cleared, the "St. Catherines, Protectress of Virgins" bell was rung not its usual three times—but four times.

Who was sweater girl?

Who was the original sweater girl? And who invented evaporated milk?

These were just two of the questions that confronted teams from Medicine and St. Michael's College in the first match of the interfaculty quiz tournament.

Medicine trampled St. Mike's to the tune of 315 to 185.

The questions ranged through a myriad of topics: everything from "What work of literature states there's something rotten in the state of Denmark?" to "Who was the first man to fly over the North Pole?"

As the match directed by Don Snider (II Pre-Meds), progressed it livened up considerably and with a few more sessions promises to become quite exciting and interesting to watch.

As contestants became more sure of themselves, notes of humor added extra life to the proceedings.

When asked the question, "What did the Greek god Hymen represent?", the Meds team suggested virginity.

Moderator Snider expressed hope that from these matches a team would emerge that would be strong enough to compete on the program College Bowl.

Student reaction mixed

Reaction among students at the Federated Colleges in Guelph to the establishment of the University of Guelph is mixed.

Jim Rusk, editor of The Ontario, OAC's student paper, said last night many students had indicated concern over whether they would receive their degree from the University of Toronto (as at present) or from a fledgling college.

OAC President John MacLachlan, in talking with Rusk, said no present fourth-year student would receive a degree from the University of Guelph. He said, however, that present first and second-year students would not receive a degree from the University of Toronto.

Dr. MacLachlan indicated he had no ideas as to the administrative or financial aspects the new university would operate under. OAC is presently controlled by a board of regents, a sub-committee of the department of agriculture. It is ultimately controlled by the U of T board of governors.

The recent Ontario speech from the throne indicated the new university, which will also have an arts college, would be largely financed by the provincial government. The statement was seen by most spokesmen as implying that the university would be similar to American state universities.

Rusk said Dr. MacLachlan had spent time visiting several American state universities and studying their operation last summer.

Dr. MacLachlan has not yet given the year's notice to the U of T Senate, required of all federated colleges planning on changing their relationship with the University of Toronto.

"Student leaders are worried what powers the new department of university affairs will have," Rusk said. "The department of education sets many of our courses now, and we fear they may do the same with the new university, even with the Wellington arts college."

Rusk said OAC students were not too interested in the new university, since most of them are in technical courses. He is writing an editorial calling for student representatives on the new board of governors.

ignorant remarks

Education Minister William Davis Sunday night unburdened his mind for the first time on the question of universities. As could be expected, he fell into line with the ideas that have been flowing from Queen's Park.

While assuring the universities that they need not fear infringements on academic freedom, he warned that the government must take an increasing interest in university administration as public aid to universities increases.

The opinions expressed by Mr. Davis are not original, although they have not been aired by government officials for very long.

John McCarthy, secretary of the Ontario Government university affairs committee, said in November that it was up to the universities to solve the conflict created by what they want to do and what the public expects them to do.

Last March Premier John Roberts made specific points when he said the government disapproves of "unreasonable standards of admission."

He defined reasonable standards as those which would enable the average student to obtain a degree, and said the average student was one who graduated from grade 13 with marks of between 55 and 60 per cent.

On most of these occasions, the Queen's Park emissaries have stated that they have no interest in curtailing the academic freedom of the universities. We have no reason to doubt their words.

But we do have reason to question their views on what constitutes an infringement on academic freedom.

In his statement on admission standards, Premier Roberts made a general statement about reasonable standards, and then continued to define precisely what he meant.

The admission of students was listed in the Robbins Report as one of the constituents of academic freedom. This exhaustive commission report on British higher education took two years to complete, and examined every facet of university administration.

The report pointed out that the forced admission of students could damage a university in two ways. It would increase the size of the university, which might be detrimental; and it could bring about a lowering of academic standards.

The report concluded by suggesting the problem could be resolved by consultation between the universities and secondary schools.

In view of the impending establishment of a Department of University Affairs, the apparent ignorance of the government officials becomes frightening.

The new department could be a good thing for the universities and the public, but only if the people running it have a clear concept of the academic community and the possible dangers to that community.

They must realize that academic freedom means more than allowing freedom of expression within the university. As the Robbins Report demonstrated, academic freedom also involves setting curricula and standards, the balance between teaching and research, staff appointments, the admission of students, the freedom of development, and the staffing and salaries ratios.

The Queen's Park people have already commented on some of these areas; and, as the problems become more acute, can probably be counted on to make further statements of desired policy.

For the sake of public opinion and the future of the universities, these statements must be countered, and the position of the universities made clear.

If this does not happen, the future can only hold more conflicts between the government and the universities. And the only ones which stand to lose under such circumstances are the universities.

WINTER CAR

by LYN OWEN

It's hard to believe that the Winter Carnival has been going on for only three years now. The Carnival has become a tradition on campus, and the winter season wouldn't seem complete without it.

Some of the originators of the Carnival are still around. John Bell (IV APSC) designed and built the first ancestor of the Ice Palace now going up on front campus, with engineers, as now, supplying the manpower. But Architecture has taken over the designing field. Chris Wallace (I Arch) and his 80 tons of ice are finally together, and the Ice Palace should be complete by Thursday afternoon. STEFAN SCHRADER and SOREL REISMAN are in charge of building this year's ice palace.

Mr. J. H. Sword, executive assistant to President Bissell, will officially open the Palace and the Carnival Friday at 1 p.m.

An intercollegiate Hockey game between Varsity Blues and University of Montreal Carabins will be played in Varsity Arena at 3:30 p.m. The Blues, who have really hit their stride this year, will be going for their fifth win. Varsity Sports Editor Rick Kollins commented, "If Jim Trimble's Ti-Cats can waffle 'em, we can pancake 'em."

A huge fireworks display will take place at the Ice Palace Friday at 8 p.m., and Bruce Kidd (III UC) will lead a torchlight parade to Varsity Arena with the Lady Godiva Memorial Band. Kidd will carry his torch right into the Arena to open the Ice Follies on an Olympic theme.

The Ice Frolics show has combined most of the best available amateur talent in Canada for the Carnival. Paulette Doan and Ken Ormsby, North American Champions of the Ice Dance competition, and Valine Jones, last year's Canadian Junior Ladies' Champion, will headline a completely new kind of Ice Frolics show. Besides the individual performances of figures and dances, there will be precision group performances including a fast-moving Cossack number and a Playboy Bunny routine.

A former member of the Hungarian National Speed Skating Team will give a demonstration of speed skating, and a barrel jumping expert will exhibit his art. These two skaters will also compete with a figure skater skating backwards and a Varsity hockey star, Steve Monteith. Another feature is the U of T premiere of stilt-skating three feet above the ice.

Topping off the Ice Show will be the grudge match of the century! A hockey (?) game between the Varsity staff of the "Punch" Kollins and the SAC "Fluffies" (Toughies?) coached by "Toe" Cunningham. This should provide hockey fans with a demonstration of hockey skill as it has never been seen before.

Saturday is covered with a range of activities that should leave people scattered all over campus in various stages of nervous or other prostration. The Ice Sculpture contest at 1 p.m. for the Daily Star trophy starts the day off quietly. The theme this year is Campus Circus, and the Ice Palace is off limits to prospective artists. Sculptures will be judged on quality of construction originality and adherence to theme.

French play represents several firsts

by VOLKMAR RICHTER

Last Friday's performance of Moliere's Le Malade Imaginaire represents several firsts for this university.

This is the first time that the French clubs of all four colleges have collaborated in such a production. The four will probably be moved by the success of this production to work together on more projects in the future boosting the French play to a position of considerable importance at this university.

In addition, this production has done much to enhance the University of Toronto's image at other universities particularly the bilingual University of Ottawa.

Earlier this month, the students in charge of the play hired a truck, transported all of the sets and the $3500 worth of costumes to Queen's University presented a showing there and then went on to play Ottawa.

The audiences at both campuses thoroughly enjoyed the production and marvelled that English-speaking U of T would put on a French play, do it so well and then show it at a bilingual college.

Congratulations are still being received from the French department at Queen's complimenting the students on the excellence of the show.

One hundred French-Canadian students from Royal Military College in Kingston also present at the performance were as enthusiastic as the English students in expressing their delight.

As a result of all this favorable response, the CBC will video-tape the play for televising later in the year.

Director Alan Lenczner (IV UC) feels that "we have really struck a blow for biculturalism."

Lenczner stated that the idea to perform at the other universities was a result of a French play last year. Prof. Melese of Ottawa saw and enjoyed it so much that he asked the producers to perform it in Ottawa. But it was too late in the year for this to be feasible.

This year, the producers wrote to several universities enquiring if they would be interested and received several affirmative answers.

It has already been suggested that a French Dramatic Festival be held next year. All the above-mentioned universities produce French plays every year and they could all bring their productions together for a festival for an entire weekend. A competition has also been suggested.

Such a scheme would enable students to see more plays in the French language and thus would probably do a great deal for the cause of bilingualism in Canada. Many of the plays presented will likely be on the curriculum of French students and therefore it would brighten up their course immensely.

A Night of Crisis last night as Carol Patterson, Isabelle Noradunkon, and Adam Crichton and few others were assured it wasn't as bad as all that. The fearless included Carol Burnham by phone, Wendy Baldwin and Mike Gray by entente. Boot booted; Richter, Dunford, and Don U. Smith hashing over propaganda. # CARNIVAL 1964

The Chariot Race will start things moving around front campus at 1:30 p.m. The new rules promise a fast, exciting but different race with a minimum of bloodshed. The trophy is the Archibald von Heinrich-Schmidt Trophy, presented by the O'Keefe Brewing Company.

At 1:30 the bed-pushing contest in front of Hart House will involve three-legged couples pushing old beds-on-wheels through an obstacle course while the occupants of the beds try to keep their seats. At 2 p.m. would-be lumber-in the faces of these spectators of last year's jacks will attack telephone poles with old cross-cut saws in the Log-sawing contest. At 2:30 p.m. the last of the great Bowl games, the Toilet Bowl, will be played on front campus. This unique game of football on snow has three teams on the field at one time, three goals and no rules to speak of. There will be hot chocolate on the scene to warm up competitors and spectators. All trophies will be presented at the Brothers Four Concert.

After the outdoor activities, a Twist-dance in the main gym of Hart House, featuring Little Caesar and the Consuls will be free to all. During intermission will be the judging of the Beard-Growing and Shaving contests, and the Golden Blade trophies will be awarded. The judging will be in three categories—style, length and shagginess. The shaving competition is optional for those who want to be spared.

The Winter Carnival semi-formal dance will start at Hart House at 9 p.m. Saturday. There will be dancing to fine bands, featuring Ellis McLintock, along with entertainment by the Lady Godiva Memorial Band. Folk singing will go on all night in the Arbor Room with Marg and Jim Kenzie, The Bannermen and Tim Plumptre.

Sunday morning the Winter Carnival Sunday Service at 11 a.m. will have Father Kutz of St. Michael's College as guest speaker. There will be a collection donated to the World University Service.

Two musical presentations, The Varsity Choral Festival and The Brothers Four Concert will share Sunday evening. The Choral Festival will be in the MacMillan Theatre of the Edward Johnson (Music) Building. This free concert will combine the three choirs of McMaster, Western and the Ontario Agricultural Colleges with Toronto's own. Each group will present its own short program with music ranging from West Side Story to the works of Bach. Then their 300 voices will combine in two massed numbers directed by the Toronto chorus conductor, Walter H. Baynes.

The Brothers Four will present a combination of music and humor in their concert at Varsity Arena at 8 p.m. This is their second appearance at the U of T Winter Carnival.

Programs outlining the complete schedule of Winter Carnival events have been designed, and are now on sale in the SAC office.

The Brothers Four are featured in Sunday night's show.

prehension of the role of the students at Varsity.

Included for study are such diverse topics as: the Canadian Separatism problem, the "Ugly American image" in Canada, religion and morality, and the Hon. William Davis, Minister of Education will address the combined group of Canadians and Carolinians.

The Metropolitan Toronto Council, and the Council of the Town of Port Credit will help play host, and our guests will gain an understanding of the complexities of our municipal organizations.

Included in the program are Winter Carnival activities, and the Tarheelers will be given to a chance to try skiing and skating for themselves.

The outcome of the exchange should be a mutual understanding. Through this understanding comes a greater appreciation of the common problems which both students and countries face. But knowledge comes through teaching, as well. For in what we show our guests, we are forced into an introspection which will prove useful in self analysis.

Close rapport has already been established. The return visit will further cement the relationships and we will build on the knowledge we have already gleaned.

The entire campus says "Welcome Friends".

by DAVE GRAYSON

To-morrow afternoon, Dixie strikes back.

The return invasion of 26 Southern belles and gentlemen from the University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill, is scheduled for 1 pm tomorrow. First shots and happy reunion greetings will take place at Wymilwood.

This is the second half of the Toronto-North Carolina Exchange. Toronto students visited the Tarheels in November.

By means of lectures, group discussions and debate, the Tarheels will have the opportunity to get an understanding of the "Canadian". By viewing our campus, our classes, and our Winter Carnival, they will bet a better com-

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

PHE finally wins a game

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Physical and Health Education I won its first hockey game of the season, Wednesday, blanking Sr. Skule, 1-0, in a Group I contest. Wally Stelmach scored the PHE goal in the first half on a deflection of a Don Arthurs passout. The win moved PHE into fourth place ahead of Skule.

Paul Kennedy and Paul Bates scored to give Trinity A a 2-1 win over Meds A in Group II. Pete Rueffer counted for Meds. Trinity now holds a three-point edge over the second-place doctors.

Pharmacy A moved into a first-place tie in Group III with PHE II after a 4-2 win over the men from Hart House. Another game saw UC II edge Jr. Skule, 3-1, while Law ran its Group IV lead to six points with a 7-4 victory over Wycliffe.

Rubby Results: SPS II 3, Vic III 3; Arch 7, Emman 4; Meds B 2, UC III 1; Trin C 3, SPS V 2.

BASKETBALL

Medicine A scored a 48-35 win over PHE II to move back into top spot in Group II. Martin Schiller hooped 18 points for the winners while Gord Whyte scored a dozen for PHE.

University College Redmen snapped a twogame losing streak in Group I as they trounced Sr. Skule, 64-47. The impressive performance moved UC back into a first-place tie with PHE I.

Pint-sized Alby Garbe paced Redmen with 16, while Andy Birrell counted 12 and Gerry Sternberg 10. Jim Metcalfe and Mark Esmit each potted nine for SPS.

UC II handed PHE II its fourth consecutive setback, 29-23. Gerry Wiseberg hit for 13 Redmen points.

In Group III, Meds B and Vic I remained deadlocked in first place as both scored wins in recent action. Ivan Rempel scored 10 points in a 26-21 win for Vic I over Trinity A. Sid Gold and Doug Chenoweth hit for 11 and 10 points respectively to pace Meds B to a 31-27 squeaker over New College.

Basketball Bumlings: Spastics 48, Meds IV yr. 21; Red Caps 84, O.K. Blends 18; Dunkies 86, Beatles 26.

WATER POLO

Water polo action continues to be marked by lopsided scores.

Trinity A plastered SPS II, 14-0, as Julian Patrick contributed five markers. St. Mike's A clobbered Vic II, 12-0, paced by hat tricks from Larry Dare and John Warren. Other action saw St. Mike's B, with three goals by Pete Kidd, defeat Trinity B 6-2.

Hart House track show goes on the road again

By UNCLE HARRY

The Hart House track touring company hits the road again this week with meets in New York and Boston. Kidd, Crothers, and Company perform Thursday at Manhattan's Millrose Games, and two nights later compete in the Boston Athletic Club Games.

In the Millrose three-mile run, University of Toronto's Bruce Kidd will be out to even the score with two opponents who trimmed him last summer in Europe. Pre-race co-favorites are Australia's Pat Clohesy, now studying at University of Texas, and Eire's Tom O'Riordan.

Last year at Millrose, Kidd established a meet record for two-miles with a time of 8:41.0. Immediately following the run, the Varsity student will return to Toronto to fill a commitment to The Varsity-SAC hockey game. He will not compete in Boston.

"Skatman" Bill Crothers runs the 880 yards in Gotham, and in Katie O'Sullivan's home town will enter the 1,000-yard run. A year ago at Millrose, Crothers tried his hand at the mile, and placed fourth in a race in which Tom O'Hara ran 4:07.0.

The reluctance of Blues' Rod Chintu to leave his studies for a weekend on the east coast has forced coach Fred Foot to recruit talent for his mile relay squad from the rest of the OQAA loop.

Foot will strengthen an East York team with McMaster's Frank Baines and Western's Don McCarten, both of whom run for Foot during the summer months.

In the Infield: Pat Clohesy, working for a PhD, in Austin, Texas, and doing some part-time teaching, taught Linda Bird Johnson in a freshman tutorial last year... Ontario Athlete of the Year Bill Crothers has denied that teammate Kidd has written his speech for the Ontario Sportswriters' Dinner tonight at the Royal York, but hints it might be controversial.

Puckmen have scores to settle when Carabins play here Friday

By GORD BELLMORE

When University of Montreal Carabins put their undefeated record on the firing line at Varsity Arena Friday afternoon, they will be assured of a rude welcome, quite out of the Winter Carnival spirit.

Blues have a couple of scores to settle with Carabins, the only Canadian College team to defeat Varsity this year, in league or exhibition play.

U. of M. upset Blues, 1-0, in Montreal two weeks ago, more important, Pierre Charbonneau, Montreal's tough centre, was the man who put Blues' Ward Passi on the sidelines for the season with a broken leg.

Friday's game, which has been moved up to 3:00 p.m. because of the ice show, will be the first of three road games in six days for the third-place Carabins. They have built their 3-0-1 record entirely on home ice and have yet to face the grind of travelling.

After Blues, Carabins meet McMaster on Saturday night in Dundas, Ont. and next Wednesday travel to Quebec City to play Laval. All three teams have reputations of being particularly tough at home.

For the Cinderella Carabins, lightly regarded in pre-season poles, midnight should tell this week. Although they have one good line in Andre Boucher, Jean-Louis Mongrain and Jean Cusson; an above average goalie in Jean Viau; and an improved defence, this should not be enough to beat McMaster and Blues.

The latter two have too much depth to finish behind Montreal, and even though Blues are in a scoring slump, they are bound to break loose soon. While Carabins are certainly better than they were last year, and while they may even end up in the first division, they will be hard put to beat Rouge et Or in Quebec City.

Blues are planning a hot reception for the Montrealers. Coach Joe Kane, who is disgruntled over Blues' recent performances' has put the whip to his charges in practice this week.

Perhaps the most overdue of Blues to break out is the line of George Olah, Don Fuller and Captain Sonny Osborne. Osborne, in particular, has been performing at something less than his usual ability. His point production was down when he centred the now disbanded Mop line, and Kane hopes the change of wing mates will do the trick.

STRAY SHOTS: Joe Kane expects to use Chris Speyer for the first time this season on Friday . . . Speyer was a regular last year . . . Winger Austin MacKay will be sidelined for an indefinite period with a shoulder injury he picked up in the 1-0 loss to Carabins . . .

Don Mervyn takes over scoring lead

Blues' scoring slump shows in statistics

Varsity Hockey Blues' decline in scoring this season can best be seen in league statistics at the half-way mark in the schedule.

Blues do not have a player in the top 10 scores and only have two, Steve and Hank Monteith, in the top 20. At the half-way point last season, Blues had five players in the top 20, including the top two scorers, Steve Monteith and Ward Passi.

Monteith, who eventually won the scoring title, had 15 points in six games and Passi had 14. Monteith had scored five goals and Passi eight.

Blues' top scorer this season is rookie Hank Monteith, but he only has nine points, enough for a tie for 12th place in league statistics. Brother Steve leads the team in goals, with seven, and has eight points.

Varsity's total of 22 goals is only eight off last season's pace but Blues have not had one high-scoring line or player to show up better in league totals. More important, however, is the fact that Blues have allowed only 11 goals, compared to 26 last season, and have a 4-1-1 record, compared to last season's mark of 3-3.

Waterloo Warriors provide a perfect contrast to Blues. Warriors have won only one of seven games but have two of the top four scorers in the league. On the other side of the ledger, Warriors have given up eight goals per game.

Warrior rookie centre Don Mervyn took over the league scoring lead from McMaster's Bobby Apps last weekend. Mervyn, an 18-year-old from Kirkland Lake, has eight goals and nine assists for 17 points in seven games. Apps is one point behind.

Varsity's Gary Aitken leads in goaltending, having allowed an average of 1.75 goals per game.

Waterloo is far ahead in team penalties, having picked up 127 minutes. Defenceman Doug Peacock of Waterloo is the most penalized player in the league, with 39 minutes.

Tom Williamson scores 43 points

Mustangs edge Blues in overtime

Tom Williamson scored 43 points in a spectacular performance to lead Western Mustangs to an exciting 79-72 overtime basketball victory over Varsity Blues at Hart House last night.

By PAUL HENDERSON
Williamson, the six-foot all-star guard, netted six points in the five-minute extra session when Western outscored Blues, 8-1. Regulation 40 minutes ended in a 71-71 deadlock.

Both teams had chances to win the game in the dying seconds of regulation time but failed. Varsity stole the ball with 37 seconds to play while Mustangs were trying to maintain possession for one final shot. But guard Dave West incurred his fifth foul in attempting to drive for a score and Blues lost the ball and West for the duration.

Williamson missed a field goal in the final second to send the game into overtime.

Without West and guard Bill Woloshyn, who also fouled out of the game late in the fourth quarter, Blues were unable to keep Williamson in check in the overtime. He hooped his 16th and 17th field goals of the game and two foul shots, his 10th and 11th.

Blues only scored one point in the overtime as Dave Ouchterlony and Ed Bordas missed several chances at tip-ins. With time running out, Varsity fouled Mustangs in a desperate attempt to get the ball and Williamson and Leo Innocente netted four foul shots to wrap up the game.

Williamson picked up 21 of his tallies in the second half when Mustangs forged from behind a 44-32 half-time deficit. He potted two free throws in the 12th minute of the second half to pull Western into a tie for the first time in the game.

From then on, the lead changed hands several times before the 71-71 tie.

The game started slowly but quickened half way through the first quarter when West and Woloshyn combined on a pair of two-one breaks. Both scored on drives before Williamson warmed up and made good on a number of drives up the middle.

Bordas and Ouchterlony played well under the baskets, controlling the backboards and tipping in rebounds. But after the intermission, their were few rebounds to garner as Williamson began to hit with phenomenal consistency.

West paced Blues with 21 points, including seven on free throws. Bordas, who scored 20, and Woloshyn, who scored 14, were Blues' strong performers in the first half when Varsity shot an excellent 54 per cent from the floor.

Innocente netted 14 points to follow Williamson for Western.

Under the Basket:— It is not known whether Williamson's 43 points constitute a record for Hart House . . . The total is not a league record, for diminutive Gene Rizak scored 44 points in Hamilton three years ago playing for McMaster . . . Blues also suffered the infamy of being the opposition in that contest . . . Williamson moved back into sole possession of first place in league scoring by virtue of his outburst. He has scored 150 points in six games for a 25-point average. Dave West has 71 in three games for second - best average, 23.7 . . .

Western: Williamson (43), Innocente (14), Barclay (8), Brown (8), Mitchellson (4), Dick (2), Rogers, Newman, Kreek.
Varsity: West (21), Bordas (20), Woloshyn (14), O'Neil (8), Ouchterlony (9), Neider, McKenzie, Kimmel, Andrew, Baranowicz.

Varsity Inkmen sign contracts for clash

Track meet gives way to U of T

The directors of the Millrose Games, to be held Thursday in New York's Madison Square Garden, have succumbed to the pressure, of University of Toronto's Blue and White Society. The Millrose track meet was originally scheduled for Friday night but was moved up one day to accommodate the greatest hockey struggle of the century.

The meet as it was originally scheduled would have conflicted with the Varsity-SAC hockey game, to be played Friday night as part of the Winter Carnival Ice Show. Track ace Bruce Kidd, who is also a top left winger with Varsity Inkmen, decided to pass up the Millrose Games to play in the hockey clash.

The meet directors decided to go ahead with the meet without Kidd but intervention by the Blue and White Society resulted in the meet being advanced to Thursday night, instead of Friday.

Total cost for rescheduling the Millrose Games is estimated at $250,000, almost half as much as the payroll of the Varsity Inkmen.

Although Kidd is definitely playing for the Inkmen, his linemates on the feared Triple "K" Line are on bad terms with each other. Playing coach Rich "Punch" Kollins and Shel Krakofsky exchanged words last night after Kollins took exception to Krakofsky's condemnation of Jacques X. Laxer (pronounced Lax-ay) as a hockey player.

"We don't need radical left wingers on our team," said Krakofsky. "And besides, with a name like his, he'll make movements all over the ice."

Kollins accused Krakofsky of basing his opinions on half truths and rumors and added, "You're full of mat-zoh balls."

Thead addition of Gord (Blades) Bellmore has relieved much of the pressure on the Varsity team as the sharp-skating centre came to terms with Kollins yesterday. Bellmore previously played for Cambodia of the Southern Mesopotamia league and led the league in stolen sticks in 1957.

The signing of goaltender Al (Shutouts) Schoenborn brought all but a few players into the fold with Inkmen. All players are expected to be under contract by game time.

...In The Net—SAC reporter Don Smith has come to terms but friends have warned him not to play because the SAC Fluffies may want to break his typing fingers . . . Sam (Dark Room Devil) Feuer has also signed a contract and is expected to team with Smith on defence . . .

Lyn Owen, who has been known to use a body check now and then, and Carol Patterson, Inkmen's latest acquisition, will also don the blades for Varsity . . . As for the SAC team,

More federal action in education: Davis

Increased federal participation in university education and an enrollment of more than 100,000 students in Ontario universities by the early 1970's was predicted last night by Education Minister William Davis.

He also said the government is considering the trimester system, and gave a few more details of the new department of university affairs.

Mr. Davis was speaking at a banquet for Tarheel exchangers and their University of Toronto hosts at the Mississauga Golf and Country Club. Most of his statements were made in reply to questions put to him after the dinner.

The minister said the new department would only have about a dozen staff members, a minister and a deputy minister. He said he did not know who the minister would be.

Mr. Davis said by the early 1970's Ontario university enrollment would be tripled. Ultimately, there will probably be more federal participation in financial assistance, although no more federal control, he stated.

Mr. Davis said the new provincial department of university affairs will be strictly of an administrative nature. One of its main functions will be handling requests for government grants. He stressed that there would be no control of academic matters.

TARHEELERS

Mr. Davis' speech was the key item of the first day of the Tarheel exchange. The 26 students from the University of North Carolina arrived at noon yesterday.

They spent the afternoon with their Toronto hosts touring the city, and wound up the day with a skating party on the Credit River.

Today they will attend selected lectures, hear a speech by Metro Chairman William Allen and discuss separatism, the image of the Ugly American in Canada, religion and morality.

The weekend will be rounded out with Winter Carnival activities, a NHL hockey game and skiing at Collingwood Monday.

B. C., Alberta students protest announced fee increases

Announcements of fee raises at two western universities have prompted sharp and indignant protests from students.

When a $50-$60 hike in fees for the University of British Columbia was announced last week, student leaders immediately criticized the move.

The raise would bring tuition for arts, science and education students to $372, and to $432 for students in professional faculties.

Alma Mater Society president Malcolm Scott called the raise "backward and indefensible." He said the board had failed to consider the ability of students to pay the increased fee.

The Ubysey, UBC student paper, said in an editorial that the increased revenue which the board of governors said it needs should come from increased provincial grants rather than from students.

University president Dr. John MacDonald said the fees raise was necessary to meet the educational requirements of the next few years.

At the University of Alberta, five hundred indignant student demonstrators paid a visit to President Dr. Walter Johns Tuesday, but he was out to lunch.

They were protesting a 20 per cent fee increase planned for the new $7,000,000 residence complex opening this fall.

The singing, chanting crowd gathered in front of the administration carrying such placards as: Is a University a Preserve for the Rich? and Never have so much paid for so little.

They presented a petition to the president's executive assistant, A. R. Ryan, asking that it be referred to the university board of governors.

Ryan addressed the gathering, inviting the students to "Go through the usual democratic process to gain their ends."

Senior students who organized the march have threatened to employ "all measures at their disposal, both on and off campus, in order to satisfy their cause."

Engineers were racing to complete the ice palace from 5 this morning, before warm temperature would hamper freezing ice blocks together. SAC President Doug Ward cuts ribbon to open third winter Carnival at 1 p.m., after Blue and White publicity parade around campus. Assistant to the President J. H. Sword speaks at palace at 8 p.m., before fireworks and torchlight parade to Ice Show at Varsity Arena. Fun for all on front campus and Hart House tomorrow, with Brothers Four concert Sunday night.

Bitter Ash seized by censors

The controversial movie, The Bitter Ash, was seized by the Ontario government during a showing at Carlton University yesterday.

Banned as obscene at Master University, the film was being considered for presentation at the University of Toronto beginning next Monday, but was submitted to the Ontario Board of Censors first.

When it was discovered that several films that had to be screened before prevented a decision on it for several days, the film was requested back from the censors with no reason given.

It was then sent to Carlton University where five showings had been scheduled.

About 350 tickets to each showing had been sold at $1 each.

As the third reel was being unwound to be put into the projector, Mr. W. R. Watt, a theatre inspector for the Ontario government, stepped in and seized the film.

It is the third reel that contains the seduction scene that has caused many people to assail the film as obscene.

The film is now being transported back to Toronto where it will stay until its producer, Lawrence Kent of the University of British Columbia allows the censors to view it, or until it is returned to B.C.

If the censors pass the film it will be shown on this campus by the Student Christian Movement.

Jews and Negroes butt of hate campaign

Hate literature is being systematically distributed to students at McGill University and Loyola College in Montreal.

Brown envelopes containing issues of "The Common Sense", an American newspaper consisting of anti-Semitic articles, leaflets criticizing Negroes, and other racist material, have been mailed to students by way of the student directories.

There are reports of the same discriminatory campaigning in Toronto.

The same type of literature has been flooding the Varsity office in the past month. Bulletins from The National Renaissance Party, warn that Negroes are needlessly "seen drowning in (their) own tears of self-pity". They feel "inferior", the papers say, only because they measure themselves "not against their own African background, but in the brilliant light of European history".

One of the publications urges readers to "join us in organizing secretly for the fight to decide whether or not we have the right to exist on this earth as human beings!"

"A Jew from tender age is trained to be a parasite, a despoiler, and an exploiter of men. He is a specialist in deceit, in trickery, in exploitation of the 'stupid Gentile,'" another claims.

Another charges that Einstein and Freud contributed "more confusion to the orderly progress of science than they have useful knowledge", since, according to the pamphlet, nothing more could be expected from Jews.

The Rockwell Report, which is an official publication of the American Nazi Party aims "to expose the deadly facts about the communist conspiracy".

In what purports to be a humorous defamation, the following is offered for sale at four cents each: "Jew Traitor's Surrender Pass Allows Jew Communist traitors to enjoy luxury gassing toward the end, in choice of flavored gasses, with 'chamber' music and Kosher 'nose-plugs' (giant-size), plus other fabulous benefits—in exchange for a full confession."

Offer record number of grad courses

A record number of summer courses will be offered by the School of Graduate Studies this year. These courses, which are equivalent to those given in the winter session, are of two types: 14 weeks, with a maximum load of two graduate or three pre-requisite courses; and eight weeks, with a maximum load of one graduate or two pre-requisite courses.

Courses are offered in English, German, Romance languages, history, music, philosophy, and political economy.

Applications for admission to the long session should be made before May 1, and registration completed by May 29. For the short session, the corresponding dates are June 10 and July 3.

Prospective students are advised to check with the School of Graduate Studies in April or May, since additions or substitutions may be made.

International week opens Monday

International Students Week, Feb. 3-8, has come up with a week of varied activities leading up to a unique Festival show Saturday night. The show is a one-of-its-kind production filled with many of the most bizarre and least known examples of overseas drama.

The week starts off with an official opening ceremony with President Bissell combined with the opening of a grand cultural exhibit of objects of art and handicrafts from various countries throughout the world. The exhibit will take place in the central lobby of Sigmund Samuel Library.

A Chinese artist will be painting water color portraits in the Chinese manner on Monday, in Sigmund Samuel lobby, and perhaps for part of the rest of the week.

Professor C. B. Macpherson and Professor P. Russell form the panel for a discussion on the topic Bread or Liberty, chaired by SAC president Douglas Ward, Hart House Debates Room, Feb. 3, 8 p.m. Women Welcome.

Films from different lands will be shown at noon every week day except Wednesday in the Hart House Music Room.

An International Fashion Show features fashions in dress from all over the world on Wednesday Feb. 5 at 1 p.m. in the Cody Hall of Nursing.

A Festival Show culminates

the week's events at Harbord Collegiate Sat. Feb. 8, 8:30 p.m. Highlights of the culture and customs of ethnic groups from all over Europe, Asia, and the Far East are combined into a giant variety show.

Hungarian folk dances and a Ukrainian chorus contrast with the African Lion's Dance and a Spanish Flamenco.

The installation of an African tribal chief will be enacted as well as a presentation of the court of a Moghul Emperor and a play-legend of a Chinese love story.

The Festival Show is the only part of the Festival that is charged. Tickets are $1.25 at the SAC office and at FROS House, 45 Willcocks.

Really brief briefs

Gerhard Mennen Williams will speak in Seely Hall, at 8:30 tonight, on "Education in Africa".

Soapy is the United States Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs and has a reputation for putting his foot in his mouth and spouting non-sequiturs.

The Student Christian Movement is sponsoring a lecture series entitled "Twentieth Century Profiles," held in Room 22, University College, 5:10 — 6:00 p.m. every Wednesday until Feb. 19.

The subjects of the lectures are men with youthful, often controversial, contemporary philosophies: James Baldwin, John Osborne and Arnold Wesker, Ingmar Bergman, and Pope John XXIII.

The first lecture was held Wednesday 29. The Rev. William Whitla, a lecturer at York University, discussed James Baldwin.

The Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship will sponsor Paul Little, evangelist-at-large, for three noon-hour lectures Feb. 4 to 6.

His subject will be the uniqueness of Christianity among the religions of the world.

Survival lessons for life on the continent are being given for students of this university who are bound for Europe this summer. The Destination Europe series of four lectures takes place on the four Tuesdays in February in University College Room 108.

Twenty-five University of Buffalo pharmacy students arrive today as weekend guests of the Student Council of the Faculty of Pharmacy. They will join the Tar Heels from the University of North Carolina and U of T students for the Winter Carnival. As well, they will meet with their U of T pharmacy counterparts.

Commuting students will get the full treatment at Peterborough's new Trent University. Two city colleges — located in renovated town houses — will be opened for their academic and social use in September, 1964.

Peter Robinson House for men and Catherine Parr Traill House for women will each provide common dining rooms, a library and reading room, a seminar room as well as study bedrooms for 30 men and 20 women student residents respectively.

A planned demonstration against Lizen-dick fizzled yesterday.

Calling themselves the Victorian Crusade against Cleo (Liz), the Victoria College organizers of a protest march to the King Edward Hotel decided to call the whole thing off.

In response to students' demands, visiting hours for women in the Trinity College residence have been expanded to include Saturdays from 2 — 6 p.m.

The annual Engineering Intercourse Chariot Race will be held on the front campus today at 1:15 p.m.

Nine chariots, representing the nine engineering courses, will be competing. The only ironclad rule is that each chariot must have a rider on, in or under it at all times.

The Students Association at Laval University says that the political climate is not right for the Queen's October visit to Canada and that the trip should be cancelled. It also claims the trip would be too expensive.

Makes plea for more manpower in social welfare

A plea for more manpower was made last night by Mr. Philip Fisher, Chairman of the Commission on Education and Personnel of the Canadian Welfare Council at a dinner celebrating the 50th anniversary of the founding of the University of Toronto School of Social Work.

Mr. Fisher, speaking on "A layman looks at social work education", was introduced by President Dr. Claude Bissell as Canada's leading statesman in social welfare.

The need for social welfare, Mr. Fisher said, had multiplied greatly since the war, but no comparable expansion has taken place among field welfare workers.

"We must have action to improve this picture," he said

Mr. Fisher appealed to employers to retrain non-skilled employees in order that they would not become unemployed, and welfare problems.

Premier John Robarts presented Dr. Bissell with a copy of a book of case histories compiled by U of T social work students.

Metro Chairman William Allen, deputy federal welfare minister, Dr. Joseph Willard and 1,200 guests attended the anniversary banquet.

The anniversary celebrations are being held in conjunction with a social work conference.

Dr. Katherine Kendall, international association secretary, noted that the U of T School of Social Work was the first founded in Canada. Quoting Gilbert and Sullivan she quipped: "Are you sufficiently decayed?"

New constitution for UC Lit approved by Quorum

The much-debated new constitution for the University College Literary and Athletic Society was passed for the first time at a meeting yesterday. It has yet to pass a second time and be ratified at another meeting Feb. 12.

Sixty persons attended to vote in favor of reduction the number of compulsory open meetings from three a year to one, and to create the posts of commissions director and member at large.

A procedure which would require 50 (not 60, as before) members to petition for an open meeting was also agreed upon.

The new constitution will raise fees by $1 for all UC students. If passed, however, the raise would not be effective until the 1965-66 year.

There was no debate allowed on the fee-increase motion. Debate was closed after the open-meeting amendment was approved.

Peter Gzowski, managing editor of Maclean's Magazine, raised an interesting and important point Tuesday night.

He said one way of counteracting the stultifying effect the university has on writers would be to have successful writers on the English staff.

Mr. Gzowski said it was a shame that a Canadian writer such as Mordcai Richler should be forced to live in England; and he suggested that this university could hire Richler.

Most Canadian universities have missed the boat concerning resident, writers, and the University of Toronto is no exception. The fact that there are a couple of poets on campus is purely accidental.

And it's not that there is a lack of Canadian writers, if that is to be offered as an excuse. Jack Ludwig, for example, is a Winnipeg born writer who is now head of the New York State University department of English. There are many other novelists—not to mention playwrights and poets—who could fill a valuable role as members of the U of T's English departments.

The purpose of hiring such persons would be two-fold. They would provide incentive, advice and criticism to those students who want to write; and they would inject a creative spirit into the English departments, which would benefit all students.

The purpose of the university is to educate its students—not train them as competent technicians. For the most part the members of the U of T English departments are competent technicians. They can provide a critical review of English literature, but very few have creative ability.

This is not to say that it is impossible to learn how to write in the university. If a student does learn to write, is usually in spite of the English department, and not because of any encouragement he has received.

While we recognize the value of studying the Canterbury Tales, we also recognize the value of Ludwig's Confusions. We will never be able to talk to Chaucer, but if the university co-operated we could talk to and learn from Ludwig.

what about the women?

The establishment of the new multi-faculty Innis College comes as a welcome announcement in view of increased enrollment and the shortage of residence accommodations.

It was announced that the college will provide residence space for 300 men, in addition to the 300 who will live in New College.

But in its efforts to fill the space between Huron St. and Spadina Ave., the administration appears to have overlooked something—women students, and women graduate students in particular.

The residential accommodation for all graduate students is deplorable. With the exception of the posh cloisters at Massey College, graduate students are forced to try to squeeze into one of the undergraduate residences.

Because the women's residences are more crowded than the men's women graduate students have an even more difficult time. Married students have no choice but to look for living space outside the university.

While we realize that there is an urgent need for male residences, we cannot help but wonder if and when the administration is going to remember that women also attend this university.

By JAMES MORWICK

This article is especially written for those male students who, through inadequate breast-feeding in early childhood or through some other psychological disaster, were left with an almost obsessive desire to impress females with their virility by smoking a pipe.

Why do I feel qualified to express an opinion? Well frankly I've tried pipe smoking and have failed abysmally in my attempts to project a virile image. Surely my inefficiency cannot be attributed to the sallow green colour I take on, or even to the dizzy spells that cause me to drop heavily to one knee and gasp for air. I have learned to gloss over these awkward moments and stage a brilliant recovery that cause onlooking admirers to hardly notice anything amiss.

For example when I feel myself turning a sickly greenish tinge, I merely stagger (in a sophisticated way of course) to a dark corner of the room and lean heavily against the wall. I then remove my pipe slowly from my mouth while roguishly smiling back at the staring masses. After several moments the spectators lose interest in my strange behaviour.

If however, the soporific effects of the tobacco prove too much, I'm left in the rather awkward position of being on my hands and knees: the graceful recovery becomes slightly more difficult. There is only one thing to do: I place my right hand on an area of my back just above the buttocks and mutter quite audibly something about "an old war injury".

Every neophyte who has succeeded in getting through the "barf" stage has an almost irresistible urge to strut around the campus in a distinguished fashion with his new possession clenched tightly between his smoke-stained teeth.

The piper, who keeps the stem clenched firmly between his molars, runs into a problem. Copious amounts of saliva are generated in the mouth and build up to flood proportions at the edges of the mouth, and lo-and-behold the malady called "post-puffers trip" makes its ghastly appearance. There are of course several ways of dealing with this problem: one way is to remove the pipe from your mouth and, quick-as-a-bunny, wipe off the foam with your sleeve with a swift sure stroke.

A second method, which is equally uncivilized, consists of removing your pipe and doing what the vulgar masses call "hawking a gob" or "dragging in the snot". For the civilized, cultivated reader of this article these quaint little phrases are the vernacular way for describing the process by which excess fluids, conglomerated in unfortunate locations in one's respiratory tract, are drawn into the mouth with an impulsive burst of air and then forcibly ejected through pursed lips. These fluids then enter into the realm of free fall and describe a short parabola in their trajectory to mother earth below. Is that clear?

The third method, considered by the elite to be very prim and proper, is the method used by most connoisseurs of smoking. When the saliva starts to accumulate near the pipe stem, the pipe is shifted inconspicuously to the opposite side of the mouth. The tongue is quickly shunted to the surplus fluid areas and the fluids are quietly swallowed.

Although this method sounds simple, it should be practiced with religious fervor, because once it is mastered the man-of-the-world pose comes easily.

This synopsis does not classify all meerschaum suckers. There are some people who smoke a pipe because they actually are intellectual, distinguished, and sophisticated. But we members of this group are, as yet, a small minority.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Praises Wkr's review

In response to Charles Marxer's letter, and the review PRIEST UNCHAINED by Alan Walker, I should like to lend my support to the latter.

Roman Catholicism was imposed upon me as a child. After 21 years of constant anguish and struggle, I was fortunate to become fully rid of its perversion. Although I cannot personally verify the data of Mr. McLaughlin's book, all that I have observed tends to convince me that Mr. McLaughlin is fundamentally correct.

Roman Catholic education is a deliberate attempt to 'anesthetize' the minds of children (most of whom are helpless to reject such propaganda). Fifteen years of Roman Catholic schooling has led me to this conclusion, as does a mere glance at the zombie-like remains of my childhood friends and relations. I remember fragments of conversations (prior to age six) which ran like this:

I: "But suppose I don't believe."

Authority: "You must. You were given faith at baptism."

I: "But I DON'T have any faith."

Authority: "You DO."

I: "But who gave them the right to give it to me? I don't want it. Suppose I want to give it back?"

Authority: "You can't. It was given to you permanently!"

This authority was one of the more considerate. On most occasions I was told to sit down and was publicly disgraced. I recall an answer I was often given: "You are a heretic."

(The word I did not fully understand, but both myself and the class were fully aware that it involved supreme wickedness. Being sensitive to this disgrace and the ostracism which resulted from it, I learned to keep all my questions to myself and to always respond with the answers I was given to memorize.)

Mr. Marxer's letter stated that Mr. McLaughlin "quite obviously has an ax to grind." It is not as easy as that. When a person rids himself of the delusions imposed by Roman Catholicism, he can then, for the first time, be truly happy. On the other hand, he experiences a tremendous sorrow for all the innocent people still thwarted by Catholicism. Mr. McLaughlin may be trying to do his part to enlighten the duped.

This is a difficult task, as Mr. Walker pointed out, since Roman Catholicism is usually able to prevent such information from being published. The opinion of Life magazine is of little consequence. It is controlled by the same pressures, and written for a deluded public.

A great number of Catholic clergy are perhaps honest. Nevertheless an honest but misinformed teacher perpetuating falsehoods is eminently destructive to the character of individuals and society.

The difficulties of attempting to enlighten are made obvious by Mr. McLaughlin's book and Mr. Marxer's response to it. Those who believe are so irrational and unaware of reality that they unquestionably reject any criticism of their authorities. Neither rational argument or factual data can impress a believing Roman Catholic. The church has repressed individual strength and reason and has replaced this with a structure of false dogmas and illusions. To rid oneself completely of Catholicism, it is necessary to reject the imposed strength. This leaves a void since it takes considerable time for the individual repressed since birth, to grow into a rational man.

The period of transition is extremely difficult, and rational disbelief, without the help of a strong and compassionate friend, is often insufficient aid for a faltering Catholic attempting to sever himself from the institution which oppressed him.

Mr. Marxer offer personal insult to Mr. Walker as well as to Mr. McLaughlin. This is unwarranted. Mr. Walker has been well known on this campus for many years as a journalist of dedicated purpose and utmost honesty. If facts are published and people wish to ignore them, in favour of infused 'faith', it is their free choice. However every attempt to make society aware of the true conditions is admirable and should be publicly acclaimed.

The dull life of a convict

By JOHN SEWELL

John Sewell was a member of the Criminology class which visited Kingston Penitentiary last term. These are his impressions of that trip.

The tailor's shop: we huddled around a guard who wasn't talking quite loud enough to be heard. My eyes drifted about the room: the men were in groups of two and three, slyly looking at us, with that smart alec smirk.

I think several other of the fellows in our group were a bit worried — there were scissors lying at odds in the room.

We had just been looking at the outdoor sports area and our guide — a man who works in categorizing the prisoners — had told us that organized sports had been banned because of the frequent stabbings. I also remembered seeing the bit of a wired up crows nest where a 'rifle' sat whenever there were people in the yard.

Theoretically, the men in the tailor shop were to be learning a trade useful after their release. But there are mitigating factors: the machines they use are out of date: they are not forced to work (how can you force a man to work at something as intricate as tailoring); the men spend only 4½ hours in the shop. The rest of their time is taken up with going back and forth from their cells, or eating (each man eats in his own cell). It takes an hour and a half to feed the prisoners, so the prisoner spends 10 minutes eating and the rest of the time sitting there. Perhaps he might have a book with him — the penitentiary has a good library, at least considered good for the type of person in such an institution.

Or, perhaps he might listen to the radio: there is a choice of 2 stations, but is turned off until 10 o'clock.

The men didn't speak to us: they just sat on their tables playing with scissors or needles, looking at us. They all wore basically the same uniform. It looked like a flannelette shirt with a number on the back — just a small number, an inch or so high — and grey pants.

Outside I remember seeing the men in heavy brown coats: some wore ridiculous stove-pipe hats with a long peak.

I remember asking what these 4 or 5 men were doing just standing in the yard. Our guide explained that they had probably been doing some job — such as unloading a truck — and were just waiting until the next bit of work.

But again the tailor shop: the urinal and toilet didn't even have a door. I looked at the guard again — a fat little fellow in an ill-made uniform which the prisoners had sown together in this very shop. He was not armed, nor were the other two guards in the room. That could be fatal, if the prisoners were to get arms.

We decided to go: our guide banged on the door with a wooden hammer used for such a purpose. A guard opened the door from the outside, with a key as large as a fairy tale.

On to the canvas shop: this is where mailbags are made. The guide told us that it was also the place where the toughest men were put. We just stepped in the door and looked. Two men paced the floor in step, somewhat like zoo animals. This time we got sneers.

We moved on. 'What do you do with the more intelligent people? Like lawyers up for fraud? Do they get a chance to do research on their own, or help out with some of your office work? And the teachers sent up for something?

"Oh, they don't seem to do much: they just sit around."

I found that strange. But then I don't know what it's like to spend time in one of these places.

Kingston is maximum security, and only the most unresponsive types are sent here. Surprisingly, it seemed to me that almost half of them were under 30 — we saw very few old men.

We passed up the machine shop, the carpentry and paint shop, and went to the printing shop. It seemed more friendly, and I felt as if I was in a factory. One of the fellows thought he saw a man in the print shop who had pleaded not guilty early in the summer. The guard would tell us nothing. He was small and frightened, and we learned he was new on the job.

Smothers Brothers smother folk music and folk artists

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

"...when the Smothers Brothers 'think ethnic' it can only lead to mayhem."

from an album liner note

It was at a party about two years ago. The soiree was slightly dragging as parties are wont to do at their beginning and the host decided to put on a record. "The Smothers Brothers," he announced.

Well, we all thought he was kidding, of course. The host, being not above cracking jokes of such a calibre, wasn't taken seriously... until the record started.

It was "The Smothers Brothers at the Purple Onion" (the San Francisco edition of that coffee house), the first album the brothers cut.

Needless to say the brothers convulsed us with laughter. Their satires on folk music and folk performers, their sometimes bordering on off-colour jokes, and Tom's introductions which are masterpieces of redundancy, stuttering and bewilderment turn even the most bored audiences into a giggling, helpless mass of happy people.

But when we tried to tell others about them we got odd stares. "Smothers?.... Brothers?" they asked. That's right. That's their real name. Tom and Dick Smothers.

Luckily, before everyone thought us mental deficients, the brothers became famous.

Signed to a 2-week fill-in engagement at the 'Onion', the boys brought down the house nightly and had the engagement extended to 36 weeks.

Then Jack Paar discovered them, brought them on his show many times and the brothers became nation-wide favorites. Other T.V. appearances followed — everything from Hootenanny to The Judy Garland Show.

The first record album was a big seller and two more followed. Sold-out night club engagements came and went with frequency and now the brothers are venturing out on the one-night stand circuit. They came to Massey Hall on February 15th.

Perhaps it's not right to call them folk singers. Essentially they are comedians merely using folk music as a background. They take it apart, satirize it, and generally have a good laugh.

But they do it all in good fun and in good taste. Underneath all the cutting-up there is a real genuine love for the music which is probably what endears them even to hard-and-fast folk music fans.

On the rare occasions when they perform a song straight, they show that they can actually sing, and they do so with a gentle and tasteful close harmony.

In fact, the short snatches of singing between stretches of wild comedy on earlier records caused so many persons to request more, that the brothers had to record an entire side of an album of song without their usual comic corruption.

like in a camp, or in the army. Each had his own little table, and personal belongings, and, perhaps, a picture from Playboy. The latter startled us. We had thought this type of thing would be banned.

The dormitory looked really quite friendly but had obvious disadvantages. The cell at least has privacy.

We talked to the two editors of the monthly booklet 'Telescope'. These were fellows of our own kin. They read Saturday Review, Atlantic, and such magazines, and were quite interested. The younger one—he looked thirtyish — told us that he could only write his name when he came in 3 years ago. Yet during the past summer he has sold two stories to Liberty magazine.

This made things interesting, and we all got talking at once. He had a copy of 'The Varsity' there — the Wednesday issue, the day of our visit being Friday — and he regaled us about our football team. He also mentioned that he had just read Oedipus Rex, and that at last he knew what the Oedipus complex was.

I think the whole group enjoyed talking in the editorial office. We had found a man who had accomplished something in his imprisonment, a man who wanted to talk to us just because we were people.

We moved on to the cell blocks. They were just as you would imagine. Stretching the length of the corridor, four tiers high, they house 800 prisoners—all but the sixty in the dorms.

The cells are about 5 feet wide and 9 feet deep. At the far end is a toilet and wash basin. The bed folds up against the wall so that the fellow can move about, sit down at his little table—a table usually crammed with personal effects. One fellow was very inspiring: he was painting his cell. On his table were a dozen Christmas cards he had made himself: he had his own paintings on the walls.

It was a long time walking down one of the 4 arms of the cell block.

Gates clanged before and after us as we went to Solitary: a part that seemed soundproof, our voices being swallowed up into nothing. The cells each have a heavy wooden door with a small peephole. Inside, the prisoners lay on their beds. We understood they were allowed half an hour a day recreation outside their cells. For the first time I had a feeling of pity.

The hospital: it had no doctor, but only an aide available for repairing wounds. The doctor comes in the morning for sick call.

And the psychiatric unit of 35 men. Here, the cells are open most of the day. But there is only one psychiatrist and he comes for two hours a day. Imagine interviewing 100 men a month—an average of 6 hours a man! For the other 850 prisoners, nothing.

The kitchen is as kitchens go: the prisoners do the cooking. The food surprised us. It seemed quite on a par with Hart House.

And what is the greatest problem in the penitentiary? Stabbings rate high. This seems logical, since any little thing could cause a flare up and there is no way in a prison to avoid a situation, no escape possible.

But homosexuality is rampant. In the dark T.V. room—every second night—or during the movies—every weekend—or perhaps in the showers. Locked up for at least two years, with nothing to do most of the time, one could expect little else.

Would conjugal visits do it? For some, no doubt, but what of the bachelors, or those who were separated?

We walked toward the main gate. The prison seems like a dream world. I found it hard to imagine that it was real—I still do. But I was duly impressed. These were the men, it seemed, who would return again and again to crime. I almost thought that the prisoners received lenient treatment. For a few, there was pity, but for most it seemed that there was no alternative. They had chosen their way, and we have not yet found a way to redirect them.

LIFE OF THE BUDDHA

By ALAN WALKER

Alfred Foucher: THE LIFE OF THE BUDDHA (abridged translation by Simone Brangier Boas) Wesleyan University Press, Middletown, Conn., 1963 ($10.75).

What is a biographer to do when source material tells him a great religious leader was fully formed before his earthly birth; that he entered the right side of his mother's body "in the form of a white elephant having six tusks;" and emerged after several months of complete consciousness?

He combines rather apologetically myth and fact in an attempt to understand the true nature of his subject.

So Alfred Foucher says in this 1949 work, newly translated:

"Sanskrit poets claim that the beautiful wild goose is able to separate milk from water; and one could ask what historian has the secret of sorting from such mixed data the fabulous from the real and the exact amount of each. Possessing no such talisman, let us follow the texts as they bring us the various episodes of the story."

From this valuable book the faithful can accept any degree of irrationality they wish. Overly rational persons can at least understand something of the nature of Buddhism from descriptions of what the faithful believe.

The essential quietness, the peace of Buddhism is attractive to many today but few obtain any real understanding of the religion.

"Because Buddhism claims to be a religion without mysteries, it owes us explanations; and, truly, it never refuses them," says Foucher.

It doesn't refuse them on purpose. But the situation is rather like that facing Louis Armstrong who, when asked what "swing" meant, replied: "If you gotta ask, you ain't got it."

Buddhists do their best to explain their beliefs. Unsympathetic persons have great difficulty in following. And as they get nearer the truths of Buddhism, many tend to become envious of the Buddhists' calm self-control and inner peace.

I will always remember an afternoon's conversation with Ven. Ananda Bodhi, the bhikkhu of Britain's only monastery for English-speaking Buddhists.

We sat shoeless in front of a low table covered with seven of the eight possessions he is allowed to own — two robes, a belt, a water-strainer, a begging bowl, a needle and thread (he was wearing a third robe) — and we talked about predestination and morality.

He talked, too, about short-cuts to Nirvana. There aren't any. Zen Buddhism, as opposed to his orthodox Theravada Buddhism, seems to offer short-cuts.

"Zen has been eagerly grasped, misunderstood and exploited by Beatniks," he told me.

Convinced of the necessity of long study, I left the bhikkhu's sound-proofed monastery and waded through an evening of London fog and noise back to my office.

He had told me much but there was much work to be done. Without total commitment no-one can share in the Buddhist's world.

But Foucher's book gives as good a grasp as any essentially popular volume on the roots of the Buddhist religion.

Like many of the world's great religions, Buddhism arose from the teachings of one man — Prince Siddhartha of Kapilavastu, later called Sakyamuni or Gautama, the Buddha.

Foucher uses original Sanskrit and Pali texts for sources plus many artistic monuments. The book does not accept the myths connected with the Buddha's life, but does present them and pays adequate attention to them as part of the Buddha's career.

In the smooth-running narrative account, Foucher deals with the Buddha's birth in the sixth century B.C., his upbringing in luxury, his religious conversion, his seven years of wandering and his final finding of Enlightenment.

Also covered is the Buddha's teaching and miracles connected with his life; and the basic principles in as clear as possible a form of Buddhist belief.

The sections on the Buddha's fast and mortification before the Enlightenment; his achievement of Enlightenment; and, much later, his death, are treated with a fine sense of drama and poetic power.

But the final effect of the book is one of the joy of peace and love in the Buddhist world.

"Transported abruptly from the tumult the bright lights of the port (of Ceylon, the first Buddhist city on the long sea route through the Far East,) to the dimness and calm of the nearest Pagoda, the traveller cannot help but wonder if the smile on the great Buddha's face is not caused by the vain bustle of our Western life and the useless noise of the age of steel."

Declare Canada a Nuclear-Free Zone

The Canadian Government should declare Canada to be a nuclear-free zone.

The idea of regional nuclear-free zones—in the Mediterranean, the Far East, Central Europe and Latin America — is gathering strength among people all over the world. Such zones, by discouraging the spread of nuclear weapons and nuclear bases, strengthen world peace.

Such a declaration by Canada would: (1) contribute to the cause of peace and disarmament; (2) enable Canada to request the United States and the Soviet Union to respect Canada's nuclear-free status.

A nuclear-free Canada would mean the cancellation of the present nuclear arms agreement with the U.S., and the dismantling of U.S. bases on Canadian soil, rule out present U.S. H-bomb flights over Canada, and cancel any privileges now enjoyed by U.S. armed forces for use of Canadian air space or port facilities for their nuclear armament.

A declaration making Canada a nuclear-free zone would contribute to our defense and security. It would be an act of independence that would win respect for Canada in the United Nations. It would enable our country to speak with a clear conscience in the U.N. Disarmament Commission, of which Canada is a member, for the speediest agreement between the powers for the abolition of all nuclear weapons.

English kings come to life

By ERIC RUMP

The kings and queens of England are the theme of The Hollow Crown now playing at the Royal Alex. It was a shrewd choice on the part of John Barton, its deviser. There have been a lot of them, so he had plenty of material to pick and choose from; and the private lives of the great have a fascination denied, shall we say, to butchers. Not that English monarchs have been a strikingly articulate group, but there always have been enough good writers around to make up that deficiency.

This variety of material is one of the shows chief attractions. It starts in Anglo-Saxon times and the excerpts read from the Chronicle suggest that the writer felt that life under certain monarchs was not all that could be desired.

The period up to the Tudors is then described by Jane Austen in an account in which she calls herself "a partial, prejudiced and ignorant historian." Partial and prejudiced she may have been; but considering she was only fifteen at the time, she can hardly be called ignorant. Henry VIII is represented by his own writings. His letter to Ann Boleyn, proposing marriage, is ungraciously written, and placed next to hers from the Tower, pleading for mercy, shows him as a determined and unfeeling man.

James I's Counterblast to Tobacco produced some rather nervous chuckles from the audience, but good humour was restored by Charles II. His poem "I pass all my hours in a shady old grove" is light and easy, and the Marquis of Halifax's description of him as a man finding his chief entertainment in his nether parts, which therefore made him amiable, was comforting and reassuring. But it was all down hill after him. The Hanovers turned out to be a tedious bunch and Queen Victoria all that one feared. There can be no more prosaic account of a coronation than the one she recorded in her private journal.

The spoken parts are presented by three men and one woman, and once more demonstrate how much can be done on stage with the minimum of costume and scenery. The men were all dressed in dinner jackets—that funeral black we all put on for our most festive occasions—but this did not hamper them from assuming a number of personalities throughout the evening. Various songs were interspersed throughout, sung with gusto by a trio, accompanied on either piano or harpsichord.

On my way out, a large, middle-aged gentleman turned to his numerous family who were gathered about him. 'Children,' he said, 'that was beautiful english, beautiful english. I want you to speak like that one day.'

I trust they will not follow his advice: that might well prove disastrous. But his first point was valid enough; this is a show in which the atmosphere is relaxed, and it is a pleasure to sit back and be so skilfully entertained.

A Thurber Carnival is funny, slick and thoughtful

AVR director, Nicholas Ayre and Designer Lawrence Schafer do a last minute rehearsal check of Lyn Wheeler.

By BILL CAMERON

The SAC All-Varsity Revue this year is 'A Thurber Carnival'. Some people will already have heard of the show itself, but almost everybody will have heard of James Thurber, from whose writings the various sketches which make up the Carnival were taken.

There isn't much point in talking about James Thurber as humorist, observer of Life and chronicler of Mores, and what not: his ghost would come back to haunt anybody who did. The easiest thing to do is to call him the Mark Twain of the cocktail party people, and let it go at that.

There are eight people in 'A Thurber Carnival', and they are called upon to be anybody or anything, as the occasion demands — Walter Mitty, Mr. Preble (who gets rid of his wife), Little Red Riding Hood, and Thurber himself.

The show is fast, funny, slick, and occasionally thoughtful — the New York critics who are quoted on the back of the record jacket sound as though they've got stock in the production: 'Completely captivating.... joyous, magnificently lunatic.... very Advanced.'

A Thurber Carnival opens at Hart House February 18 and continues till the 23rd.

Tales from the quarter

By LARRY GARBER

There are only two parts to France: Paris and the Provinces. The Parisians are cold, aloof things, half animal and half vapour. They say that if you are lying in a ditch in Paris and screaming "Help," the Parisian will not touch you unless you drop the "H". They say that if you are drowning in the Seine, being sucked under by the muck and vermin of that noble river, the passing frenchman will merely ask you the temperature of the water. They say that, while a young lady was being raped below the pont Alexandre, several Parisians watched from the vantage point above and argued technique.

So the excursion into the Loire Valley was the best thing that could have happened to us. The air was clean in this country, the people were friendly; and then again, it was an adventure, we were on the move, in transit. We drove in the afternoons, towards the chateaux and through the villages; in the evenings, we sat in the little village cafes, bought our suppers of paté and baguettes, then drove to the tiny clearings by the Loire. In the mornings, it was impossible to sleep; we would rise as the sun came up, shivering on the cold wet ground, and drive into the small town for our first café au lait served up in huge soup bowls. At first all this freshness was uncomfortable, almost impure. It was like being laundered. Even Cheryl looked more virginal.

Of course, a lot of what happened on that trip is vague. Good trips are like that, full of so little that is upsetting or nasty, that it seems now like one very long dream where there is only one village, one meal, one sleep, one comment. But here are some of the impressions remembered, detached entrails from a week in the country.

The first night as we are bedding down by the bank of the Loire. . . The ground is cold, but no one wants to sleep in the car. Stephen U. stands on a rock in his pajamas, staring at a magnificent chateau on the farthest side of a tiny island; while he is striking this monumental pose, a wild hog attacks Bonnie who is washing my underwear. Stephen U. leaps from his perch like a carnival St. George, grabs a dead branch, and charges the unseemly beast. He disappears into darkest thicket in dead pursuit, only the yellow and pink of his pajama tops visible; then emerges screaming as the hog turns on him with a devilish grunt, leaps grimly into his sleeping bag and is silent for the night. Emmanuel the Spanish walks into the brush with a cigarette in his mouth and an ashtray in his hand. Bonnie and I curl up beneath a single blanket, trying as best we can to keep out the cold and the quiet. All of us awake at the first light surrounded by a herd of cattle licking our faces and dropping manure pies at our feet, and not necessarily in that order.

Standing in front of the Chateau Chambord, perhaps the largest in the valley. It is past seven in the evening, and the chateau is closed for the day. However, we decide to break in. We run through garden and walk to a large side entrance. Bobby E. Lee whooping like a cowboy, Cheryl sighing like a martyr. Only three of us get through the first courtyard, while the others turn into a first floor hallway. This hallway, unfortunately, is full of police at switchboards and desks: the chateau doubles as a headquarters. Quickly, I explain that we are seeking information about pheasant hunting. The police are very pleasant as they search us for firearms. Then Emmanuel the Spanish, Yvonne and Cheryl are brought into the hallway; these people were found in the torture chamber, explains the officer, playing with the miniature guillotine. Do we know them? "I have never seen them before," I explain, and they are taken away. We are all reunited the next day, and are friends again in no time.

Emmanuel the Spanish in front of a pinball machine in Tours. He is cursing and shouting. The machine is not a Gottlieb of Chicago, it is a Rogers of Philadelphia, and Emmanuel the Spanish is almost in tears. "Heretic," he says, "I cannot have this blasphemy!" He tilts all the machines in the café and walks out with a Quixote strut.

Myself shaving in a canoe outside of Chaumont. Several fishermen downstream walk towards me along the banks laughing at the absurd sight of my face lathered. Bobby E. Lee jealously finds his own canoe and floats out into the river with soap and razor. He cuts himself and his blood drips into the clear water. He thinks he is bleeding to death, lays full length in the canoe as it floats away like a bier. The sight upsets Cheryl's early morning stomach; pale and green, she bends over into the grass and begins to grin like a fountain.

Walking into the wrong corridor at the Chateau Villandry. Some very rich people are eating what looks like a 27 course meal, and when they see us their faces pucker up in sheer horror. "Terribly sorry actually," says Stephen U., snapping away with his camera. Later, we talk to the police.

Camping near a bridge outside of Azay-le-rideau. We have put our wine in the sand by the beach to keep it cool. After immense sighs of peace and salvation, we prepare to sleep. Then there is a sound, something like 'rat-rat-rat-rat,' and from under the bridge a pack of rats move cautiously towards the bottles. Terri fled, we search frantically for sticks to beat them off. No one wants to lead the attack. Bobby E. Lee stands on top of the car like a colossal dwarf. "Let them have the damn wine," he pleads, "it's no good for you anyway." That night, we all slept in the car.

The village of Azay-le-rideau itself. It is an amazing thing, but everyone in this town is fifteen years old; and what is worse, they all look alike. All the girls have dark brown hair and wear beige trousers; all the boys have pink complexions and wear pointed running shoes. "Maybe it's a Utopia," says Stephen U. We walk down the main street towards a medium-sized café, hoping to see signs of age and decay. Across from the café itself, there is a narrow alleyway called the Champs Elysses; a thin donkey is squatting over the ground enthrallled in the last stages of digestion; it is being steadied by a blonde girl and a pink boy. Inside the café, a young boy serves us; in a corner of the place, a troupe of German boy scouts are playing House of the Rising Sun on several guitars. "Let's get out of here," I suggest courageously. Are these children the result of allied infiltration during the war? "That's ridiculous," says Emmanuel the Spanish, "it is obvious to me that they are all spooks and pagans. We are being pursued."

Swimming in the river at Usse. Stephen U. puts on fins and snorkel, walks into the river up to his knees, splashes water on his nose, and emerges refreshed.

The Abbey Fontevault. A sunless, dusty place. The guide speaks at us in a secretive nasal tone. We see the chapel, the cemetery, and the out houses; we see tiny rooms where the nuns lived their lives in squalor and sacrifice. Something is wrong here and in the town it is worse; an atmosphere of suspicion and mockery everywhere. We inquire and are told that the Abbey is now a prison; where the nuns once lived in their retreat, men are now locked away to wait out their days. We get out of that one fast.

The excursion lasted a week all told. Of all the chateaux, we saw only four or five. But that wasn't important; we had left Paris and its tedium behind us, travelled through the fresh green countryside, slept by the rivers, inhaled the cleaner air, and returned to nature in our own way. Actually, when the week was up, we drove back to Paris in less than an afternoon, wept like babies at the sight of the bridges and the Seine, and by seven in the evening were jockeying for table position at the Café Bucé. "Did you enjoy the trip, man?" asked Fitz. "Yes," said Cheryl wistfully, "there's uh, lots of water out there." Then Fitz told us the latest Quarter story; seems there was a guy who had an irritating case of gonorrhea; his fiancée was coming to Paris to marry him in a few days and he was searching desperately for a cure. Fitz had tried herbs, to no avail. The poor man had since fled, leaving a forwarding address for his woman to follow. She had been pursuing him all through Europe in this way, while he kept a step ahead of her looking for a cure. It was a good story alright. We were back.

Art must communicate

By ROSAMUND ATLER

A Canadian landscapist and an American geometrical symbolist — Thomas Chatfield and George Ortman — are artists indicative of two trends of the very sick, very wrong art produced today. Both artists are old enough to know what they are doing and to believe in it. What is then wrong lies either in their misplaced faith, in the spineless society that spawned them, or in this reviewer's lack of appreciation of art that is therapeutic, pleasuring-giving, escapist, and uncommunicative.

Chatfield, according to his dealer, is "the only painter to have evolved from the Group of Seven." Very nice. But the Group painted Canadian landscapes thirty years ago. That was when Canada was establishing its identity. Now past this adolescent stage of development, Canada can only look on Mr. Chatfield's paintings as a superficial, false Canadianism — and a mercenary one at that.

And the Amerindian Ortman? What does he say? His drawings are sexual and a necessary stepping stone to the understanding of his paintings. The paintings — squares and circles and arrows constructed with canvas, masonite and plywood — are supposed to be heavily symbolic. The symbolism would entirely escape had not the graphic and written explanations been available. Ortman, termed a symbolic-geometrical-abstractionist (?), speaks, but in terms that are too far removed from the intuitive elements necessary in any art language.

However, both shows are worth seeing if only for the novelty. Ortman's drawings, lithos and paintings are showing at the David Mirvish Gallery. They are colorful, skillfully carpentered and very indicative of the New York Scene.

Chatfield at the Sobot Gallery at least shows himself to be academically competent with his palette knife. The color and compositional qualities of both men are irrefutably above average. But color and composition is not enough to make a good painting. There must be content — and meaning in the content.

AND ART MUST COMMUNICATE!

Ogdon: one of the Great

By MEL ISCOVE

So many bad young pianists are currently rattling around the concert halls that one tends to be suspicious of every new arrival. But when a pianist like John Ogdon comes along, our suspicions are quickly dispelled, and we must recognize him to be a great talent.

In his recital last Thursday at Hart House he proved not only technically flawless but on the whole artistically sound. His most striking virtues are a secure and beautifully controlled tone, as evidenced in the Bach Prelude and Fugue which began the program, and a smooth flowing legato line which elevated every piece on the program. His most striking defect is an inability to give a coherent shape to a long work: an inability which leads sometimes to a garbled interpretation.

This defect was most obvious in the Beethoven Sonata Op 109. Mr. Ogdon chopped the first movement, which is really one extended musical line, into unrelated fragments. He then rendered the whole at a much more frenzied tempo than Beethoven's exquisite writing here demands. This was followed by a prestissimo movement in which inhibited dynamics were combined with a relentless tempo, lacking the strong rhythm essential in Beethoven. The result was great chaos, not great strength, and the movement ended before one was fully aware of what had happened.

Only in the beautiful variations did the pianist redeem himself. The tempo was steady and relaxed, and the contrast between variations was well handled. Here each unit was short enough so that the shape was apparent to performer and audience. But again his inhibition led him to ignore some of the richness of Beethoven's late period chord spacing, with its wide expanses between treble and bass, and its resulting full bass sound.

If Mr. Ogdon had difficulty with Beethoven, it is not because he is not a great pianist. His inhibition indicates that he is slightly unnerved by the greatness of Beethoven's music. This awe will lead him to search for and find that intangible philosophic rightness that is peculiar to Beethoven. It is a musical discipline which tolerates no presumptuously imposed personal interpretations by the not fully mature artist.

The pianist displayed a great versatility in the varied musical idioms of Brahms, Ravel and Liszt. The Brahms Paganini variations, technically his most enterprising offering, were well executed, although they tend to get hung up in their own tediousness. The Romantic variation form, we must conclude, is more of visual than auditory interest. Although it looks good on paper, it tires the ear with its thorough but meaningless repetition. Mr. Ogdon completely captured Brahms' heavy-handed stodginess in the fast and cumbersome sentimentality of the slow variations, and gave a solid idea of the misguided creative strength that went into the writing of the work.

Prophet plays at Massey Hall

There is no guitar but the Spanish guitar and Andres Segovia is its prophet. I doubt if there lives a music lover with soul so dead that he could not find reward in attendance at a Segovia concert".

VIRGIL THOMSON

urday night at Massey Hall Segovia demonstrated that 56 years of performing have not dulled his artistry.

At the ripe age of seventy, Segovia maintains an indefatigable pace of one hundred concerts a year in all parts of the globe. While he may not perform with as much vitality as in his younger days, the years have increased his richness of tone and depth of feeling.

When Segovia first took up the guitar it was considered an instrument for cafes and night clubs, not at all for the concert hall. He mastered the intricacies of the classical guitar and inspired composers to write music for him.

By DAVID SECTER

The name of Andres Segovia is virtually synonymous with the Spanish guitar. Sat-

The concert included works by Tansman, Mompou, Tarrova, and Turina all dedicated to Segovia.

It is impossible to select individual highlights from a concert which in total approached so near to perfection. One can only affirm that Maestro Segovia and guitar provided an exhilarating, fulfilling experience in music.

Design for privacy

By MARGARET BRYCE

Serge Chermayeff and Christopher Alexander; Community and Privacy, Towards a New Architecture of Humanism; Doubleday and Co. Inc; $5.95; 236 pages.

One of the more pleasant progeny of the population explosion furor is this simple book by two perceptive, though well-established, architects and planners.

The first part of the book analyses the problem of our auto-centric mass culture as the sacrifice of the sanctity of the individual to the community—the cancer of togetherness. The second part formulates the anatomy of privacy in an urban dwelling that is adaptable to our prospective society when all the world will be a city.

This is not a back-to-nature book, rather a back-to-basics book. It is an eleventh-hour appeal for a selective re-examination of the simplest design principles so that they will be applicable in the new context of our mass culture.

It is rarely that an architect feels the need to explain his actions or his ideas in simple language. Anyone who is interested in the form of his future home and future community should devote two hours to this readable book and join the revolution.

Of the Ravel, we can only say his rendition was impeccable, with all the lucidity and shimmering cascades of the impressionistic idiom. Liszt's Mephisto Waltz No. 1, was played with much drive and energy contrasted with a tender lyricism: and the kind of soaring climaxes we usually associate only with Horwitz.

We conclude that Mr. Ogdon is best in the shorter works, where he is not beset by problems of shape and structure. It is interesting that even in his own composition, Variations and Fugue, the structure was loose and the piece, though full of musical merit, was too long and lacking in direction. But the shorter pieces possessed enough of a spark of insight to convince anyone that in twenty years John Ogdon will have overcome his difficulties to become one of the greats.

THE EVE OF ST. CATHERINE

To go or not to go, — that is the question:
Whether it be nobler in the bed to bear
The bells and clangors of outrageous Davies
Or to heed the summons of the strident Virgin
And flee through sealed doors. To stay, — to sleep
No more; and by a sleep to say we start
The heartache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to; 'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wished. To stay, to sleep.
To sleep? Perchance to dream?

For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despised love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office?... Soft you now!
The fair Ophelia! — Nymph in thy orisons
Be all my sins remembered.

A Co-ed Speaks

or Gosh Mr. Davies, you've got it all wrong

Oh! Mr. Davies, I must tell you:
I'm the girl who hears the bell you
Ring to keep your little grads
From being prematurely dads.

I tell you sir with utmost candor
What you suggest amounts to slander.
In truth my late nocturnal yearning
Is founded on a thirst for learning.

And sir, I do resent the curfew
Which stops a girl from having her few Extra hours with her tutor
Whom you would make an ardent suitor.

I find your double rooms conducive
To that which I have found elusive:
None other than a concentration Found so lacking in our nation.

O Sir, I know a late inspection
Would show two scholars in reflection,
And not at all what you suspected,
Or what you ring to have corrected.

Now I must leave because you doubt me;
My tutor must read on without me.
Perhaps I'll move on down the street
And find a host who's more discreet.

Beloved bastard

By DAVID SECTER

Torontonians do not stand for hours in sub-zero weather unless there is mightily good reason. Tom Jones is.

The film scintillates with creativity from beginning to end, with comic techniques culled from the entire realm of film-making. Before the credits we see Squire Allworthy coming home from a journey and discovering a child in his bed. He banishes the mother but decides to keep the child, and call him "Tom Jones". The whole scene is silent, with dialogue flashed onto the screen. Twenty years later Tom is accusing an innkeeper of filching a 500 pound note from his trouser pocket; he turns to the audience and implores, "You saw her take it, didn't you?"

The plot is inobtrusive enough: Allworthy is raising Tom as his own son, despite the opinion of the countryside that the lad was born to be hanged. Tom falls in love with Sophie Western, the peaches-and-cream daughter of the neighbouring Equire. This illegitimate liaison, along with sundry other peccadilloes as reported by Blifil, Thwackkum and Square, forces Allworthy to banish Tom. Sophie with Papa hot on her tail pursues her paramour. Her cousin is fleeing from her husband Colonel Fitzpatrick. The entourage converges on an Inn in Upton, and a rapid-fire chase results. After other wild and wanton adventures on the highway, Tom reaches London, more complications, his virtues are revealed, he is snatched, literally, from the gallows, and is reunited with his own true love (not by long shot his only love).

The action encompasses the whole scope of eighteenth century England: Country, highway, and big city. Scriptwriter John Osborne and director Tony Richardson deftly expose the iniquities and inequities of the period, without letting the social commentary hamper the comedy. They strip away the glamour of the fox hunt and reveal the brutality beneath: hunters trampling a farmer's land and a pack of vicious dogs massacring a deer.

As Tom moves through the streets of London, we see a pauper being laid in his coffin amidst the bustling squallor of lower class life. Such scenes capture the sweet and sour satire of Hogarth's etchings.

Tom Jones achieves something very rare in conveying the spirit of the novel. Fielding's indulgent "Dear Reader" approach comes through via several incisive epigrams. As Tom wanders from a monumental drinking bout into the arms of Molly Seagram, the ever-ready village wench, the narrator observes: "It is often said that alcohol dulls a man's desire. That is quite true — for a dull man."

Several of the movie's characters win permanent places in our memory. Albert Finney is ideal as the robust, disarmingly sincere Tom. It is almost unbelievable that he is the same actor who plays the tormented reformer in the current Broadway drama Luther.

Hugh Griffith scores another triumph as the boisterous, belching, fast-boiling Squire Western. We defy anyone to forget him snoozing on a haystack with his arm draped affectionately over a pig.

Twice in the film Joyce Redman, as Mrs. Waters, emits facial expressions which alone are worth the wait in line: when Col. Fitzpatrick crawls into her bed and she ducks demurely under the sheets; or when she hears she has been sleeping with her own son... Tom Jones.

Of the many unforgettable scenes, THE piece de resistance is the dinner which Tom and Mrs. Waters partake at Upton in utter silence. Gazing lustily at one another, they devour their fowls and let the grease drizzle down their cheeks. They break a wishbone and she wins; they leap up from the table and dash into her room.

If you have not indulged yet, treat yourself to Tom Jones soon. You will want to line up for seconds!

Fun with fission

By TIM BENTLEY

Dr. Strangelove or How I Learned To Stop Worrying And Love The Bomb puts Peter Sellers in three roles: President of the United States, a heroic RAF Group Captain, and Dr. Strangelove, the half-mad ex-Nazi scientist.

The world premier was Wednesday in New York, London, and Toronto at 11 Odeon theatres. It is an amazing blend of comedy and suspense, taking a satiric look at the results when a fleet of nuclear bombers is dispatched to Russia by USAF General Jack D. Ripper (Sterling Hayden), a victim of anti-floridation propaganda.

The President tries frantically to recall the bombers, but only the Strategic Air Command, represented by General "Buck" Turgidson (George C. Scott), knows how—and the war lords would prefer not.

The action covers only an hour and three quarters; the suspense, consequently, is terrific.

Most of the action is in the War Room at Washington, where President Muffley uses the Moscow hotline to contact the Soviet Premier requesting that he shoot down the western jets before they do any damage. Unforunately, the Premier is drunk and takes offense at practically everything Muffley says. They spend the better part of the time quibbling over who is sorrier about the shmozzle.

Dr. Strangelove is one of the three parts played by Peter Sellers.

Dr. Strangelove, the third person of the Sellers trinity, is a U.S. nuclear advisor whose plan is to send the most intelligent and virile American men (plus government officials, of course) into the deepest mineshafts with twenty women apiece to repopulate the world after the disaster.

Inspired comedy by Scott and Sellers (in all three roles) combines with authentic action to create a top-rate satire whose disarming propaganda in no way hampers its cinematic success.

Billy Liar

A poor man's Walter Mitty

The power of the "absurd" lies in the fact that, in its gross distortions and denial of reality, it manages to be at once very funny, and more truthful than any parallel direct statement of fact might be. Dreams are absurd—the ultimate logic of the irrational—and "Billy Liar" is a dreamer. His "real" name in this fine film is Billy Fisher, and he is a young man of totally middle-class background, who works for Sheddack & Duxbury, an undertakers establishment.

He longs almost desperately to escape his surroundings; but his longing, rather than being converted into action, is sublimated into fantasy. When hard-pressed by his family or employer, he does not react, but instantly imagines himself as a Nazi machine-gunning "the enemy".

For long-range satisfaction, Billy conjures up the imaginary nation of Ambrosia, in which he is at various times (and in the same moment, too—you know dreams!) war hero, mustachioed cavalry commander, beloved despot, popular presidential candidate, and husband to beautiful woman.

The stimuli to Billy's fantasies are, of course, found in his everyday life. For instance, the prison fantasy is created because Billy has in fact cached several hundred of his employers business calendars instead of mailing them, and has spent the postage money.

Billy is "engaged" to two women—one as intellectually and sexually stimulating as a plump boiled chicken, the other vulgar, and bawdy with one ring. But the third girl in his life is beautiful, strong, free-and real. Liz loves Billy for the longing ty, obsequiousness, and dejection, to bravado, charm, and unrestrained joy, are always fluid and precise. He manages to make Billy at once lovable and irritating, malicious and capricious, innocent and just plain foolish.

In the last analysis, the success of this film is due to its excellent direction. John Schlesinger ('Loneliness of the Long-Distance Runner') instantly establishes the middle-class, materially prosperous milieu with visually fine opening shots of masses of "indistinguishable, but "nice" homes and apartments. Mood and character are simply portrayed in Liz's jaunty walk through the city.

Deft editing makes the flux between the real and dream worlds smooth and fast-paced. The final shot, drawing out as it does from the light in Billy's room to a panorama of similar lights in similar rooms clinches the sense of meaninglessness and waste which close the story.

Except for a few draggy moments in which Bill's mundane family life is reiterated, this film is rich in every way. Fresh, too, in spite of the inevitable comparisons between it and Thurber's Secret Life of Walter Mitty.

By ARTHUR ZELDIN

to be free which they share: she urges him to escape with her to London. But Billy's last-moment refusal to act, to take a chance on proving himself in the real world, destroys his charm, and leaves only the poignant awareness of the truth of his pitiable existence.

The supporting cast of this film, especially Julie Christie, is fine; but this is Tom Courtenay's picture. This wiry, rubber-faced young star acts beautifully with his entire body; his subtle and swift transitions from timidi-

Cagers need two road wins to get untracked

By PAUL HENDERSON

Toronto Varsity cagers venture from their home court this weekend for the first time in the intercollegiate season—and they will have to win both games on the road to get their record back on the winning side of the ledger.

Despite the advantage of playing at Hart House, Blues have lost two of three contests, their only victory being a 99-56 trouncing of McGill Redmen back in December.

Blues' losses, however, were suffered at the hands of two strong squads, Windsor Lancers and Western Mustangs. Blues dropped a 79-72 overtime to decision to Mustangs last Tuesday when Western's all-star guard Tom Williamson netted 43 points. Commenting on Williamson's sensational performance, Varsity coach John McManus said it was "the best shooting that I have ever seen by a basketball player. With shooting like that," added McManus, "they were unbeatable."

Blues encounter McGill Redmen in Montreal tonight and meet Queen's Golden Gaels in Kingston tomorrow. Redmen are in last place with an 0-7 record, Gaels are 2-4, having defeated McGill twice last weekend.

Blues are currently mired in fifth place, a position hardly reconcilable with the talent they have. The only consolation is that Varsity has played half as many games as most of the other league teams.

McManus expects to have all his players healthy for the weekend trip to the eastern sector. After two consecutive defeats, Blues are determined to get back on the victory path.

Under The Basket — Two of Queens' most productive players, Doug Evans and Larry Ferguson, joined Gaels late and have participated in the last four of Queens' six games. Evans is averaging 13.8 points per game and Ferguson 10.5.... Ferguson was selected to the second all-star team last season when he toiled for Western... Gaels' other top scorer is Bob Howes, averaging 13 points for six games...

McMaster Marauders scored eight points in the last 30 seconds to defeat Western Mustangs, 72-67, last night at Mac. It was the first time in history that McMaster has defeated Mustangs... Tom Williamson scored 22 points for Western and his league-leading average dropped to 24.4.

Grapplers host Bowling Green at Hart House

Varsity wrestling Blues, having their troubles this season, face Bowling Green University in a dual meet at Hart House tonight.

Blues will be without Larry Angus, sidelined indefinitely with an arm injury suffered this week in the inter-faculty championships, and Andy Szandtner, who has a sprained neck.

Rookie Alvin M... 137 pounds, will put his undefeated string on the line against Bowling Green. McKenzie, a former Ontario high school champ, has won all his bouts this season by pins.

Zero hour draws near

Problems stalk gladiators before Varsity-SAC clash

Complications have marred last-minute preparations for the greatest hockey clash of the century—the Varsity-SAC game to be played tonight at Varsity Arena following the Winter Carnival Ice Show.

Don (Toe) Cunningham, playing coach of SAC Fluffies, announced last night that all his players are under contract for the big game except one, Dave Beatty. It is reported that Beatty is dissatisfied with the contract offered by Cunningham and has threatened to join Varsity Inkmen if his demands aren't met.

Since Beatty, as publications commissioner of the SAC, has sentiments for his loyal Varsity servants it is possible he will accept a fantastic offer from Inkmen coach Rick (Punch) Kollins before game time at 10:30 p.m.

Meanwhile, Kollins announced that all his players have been signed but that two stars, Jacques X. Laxer (pronounced Lax-ay) and P. O. "Whirlwind" Maud have been sidelined by ailments. To add the woes of the favored Inkmen, Shel Krakofsky of the fabulous "Triple K" Line, is suffering from an injured shoulder, although he is expected to play.

The winner of tonight's game (The Varsity, of course) will receive the famous George W. Porter Fly Swatter Trophy, presented for athletic supremacy.

IMPORTANT

All Varsity-SAC hockey types are asked to report to dressing rooms 116 and 117 in Varsity Arena at 10:15 p.m. tonight for important pre-game strategy talks. Varsity Inkmen will wear white tops, SAC Fluffies blue. The game of the century will start immediately after the Winter Carnival Ice Show.

Women on road for title meets

Varsity's women's Intercollegiate volleyball and badminton teams travel to London and Guelph Saturday for their respective league championships.

The volleyball team will meet its toughest competition from University of Western Ontario, which has dominated the intercollegiate scene for the past 10 years. So far this year, U of T has clashed with McMaster and Western, beating the former and losing to the latter.

Coach Carol Anne Lathern is confident that her team will upset Western, largely because last year's veterans, Marg Harvey (III Pot) and

By GORD BELLMORE

The intercollegiate hockey game between Varsity Blues and Montreal Carabins at Varsity Arena this afternoon could very well develop into a goaltenders' duel.

Blues' Gary Aitken and Jean Viau of Carabins are the top two net minders in the league, according to the latest goals-against statistics. Aitken, who jumped from the interfaculty league to Blues after their second league game, sports an impressive 1.75 goals - against - per - game average, the best in the circuit. Viau's record is 2.75. Each goalie has registered one shutout.

A further glance at the statistics reveals the contribution of Aitken and Viau to their teams' high positions in the standings. Blues and Carabins are second and third respectively in the race for the Queen's Cup although they are only fifth and sixth in team scoring.

Perhaps the most outstanding development in the league has been the big improvement over last season in overall defensive play and goaltending in particular. Last year only Maurice Grenier of Laval Rouge et Or and Jimmy Cannon of McMaster Marlinns had goals-against averages of less than 4.00. But this season five of the seven regular goaltenders are below that mark, Aitken, Viau, Cannon, Grenier and Ken Walters of McGill Redmen.

In the first round of the personal battle between Aitken and Viau, the Carabin won a 1-0 decision in Montreal.

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Vic ties UC Redmen 3-3 on goal in dying seconds

By AL SCHOENBORN

Interfac Editor

Victoria College survived a display of ineptness yesterday, coming from behind three times to salvage a 3-3 tie with University College Redmen. Vic's tying goal was scored with 20 seconds left to play and the Vic goalie on the bench in favor of an extra attacker.

The tie left Vic one point ahead of UC in Group I, although Redmen have played one less game.

Paul Pape, Don Lillow and Doug Whelpdale scored for UC. Bob Dewar, with two, and Mike Jones counted for Victoria.

Redmen, already plagued by player losses to Blues, entered the game without Ron Hanna, suffering from a cracked sternum. And before the game was over, Redmen had lost Nelson Neff with a possible concussion and Gary Hunt, who was hit by a shot on the ankle.

Meds A defeated Dents A, 6-2, in Group II. Roger Green, Pete Strachan, Jim Brooks, Pete Rueffer and Don Stemp (2) counted for Meds. Paul Sunohara and Bruce Band got the Dentistry markers.

Rubby Results: SPS VIII 6, SMC E 2; SMC D 4, SPS IV 2; SMC F 7, Trin E 2; SPS XI 6, Vic X 2.

BASKETBALL

UC II moved into a first-place tie in Group II with Meds A, edging St. Mike's B, 36-35. Redmen were led by Gerry Wiseberg's 20-point effort while Mike Woods had 10 for the Irish.

Law A hit the win column, handing winless PHE II a 36-20 setback. Dave Grant potted 13 points for the lawyers.

New College is still winless in Group II after losing 32-26 to Trinity A which was paced by a 10-point effort from Mike Kergin.

Basketball Bumlings: Molecules B 69, Trotters 22; Dunkies 81, McCall 33.

WATER POLO

PHE continued unbeaten in Group I with an easy 10-3 win over UC. Tom Muranyi hit for five PHE goals. Meds IV yr. dumped Vic I, 8-3, on Harvey Armstrong's five goal performance.

In other contests, Dentistry took Trinity A, 10-6, St. Mike's A beat New, 5-2, Vic II doubled the score on Meds II yr., 6-3, and Pre-Meds I yr. drubbed SPS III, 7-3.

GYMNASTICS

Vic won the interfaculty gymnastics championship with a team total of 92.7 points. The team of Rich Adlington, Craig Williams and Barth Curley finished 17.6 points ahead of runner-up PHE.

Bill Whitelaw of UC took the singles title, placing first in the parallel bars, horizontal bars and long horse vault and tying for first with Bob Smagala of PHE in free-hand calisthenics. Whitelaw placed second in the pommel horse and still rings.

The goaltending duel won't be the only sidelight of to day's action. Blues' recently-formed line of Stu McNeil and the Monteith brothers, Hank and Steve, will attempt to continue the success it had in its debut against Waterloo last week. This Triple "M" line was in on all five Varsity goals against Waterloo, including two power-play markers.

On the other side of the rink, Montreal's hot line of miniature Andre Boucher (5'3"), Jean Cusson and Jean-Louis Mongrain will be out to add to their already impressive record. This trio has scored seven goals in four games.

Whatever happens today, first-place McMaster should benefit. Marlinns play host to Carabins tomorrow and the visitors will likely be tired from travelling and smarting from the inhospitable treatment Blues have planned for them.

STRAY SHOTS: Rick Warren, one of Blues' sub goalies, stopped a deflected shot in the mouth during practice and had to undergo painful dental work on what was left of his china ware. Warren is a Dentistry student . . . Carabins arrived in Toronto last night after a long bus trip. Most teams travel by train . . . Today's game starts at 3:30 p.m. to make way for tonight's Ice Show and Varsity-SAC hockey clash.

Pre-twist swim excitement

Varsity swim Blues will provide the pre-twist contest entertainment at Hart House Saturday when they host Bowling Green University.

The swim meet starts at 2 p.m., 1½ hours before the Winter Carnival twist contest, and should turn out to be one of the outstanding meets on Blues' agenda. Blues narrowly defeated Bowling Green last year in a triple swim meet.

Two of the outstanding members of Bowling Green's team are Pat Ellison and Mike Zimm. Ellison is only a sophomore but swims both butterfly and free style events along with doing acrobatics on the diving board.

Zimm, co-captain of the American squad, is a good all-round swimmer and will probably face Blues' Graeme Barber and Mike Chapelle in the 400-yard individual medley.

Varsity's coaches Larry Freeman and John Ridpath haven't yet decided whether to let the 400-yard free style relay team try to break the Canadian record which was unsuccessfully attempted last week.

Dief scrapes through on student Tory vote

OTTAWA (Special) — The Progressive Conservative Student Federation gave John Diefenbaker a bare vote of confidence in a stormy meeting here yesterday.

Voting on the resolution was by secret ballot. A request by some delegates for the exact tally was rejected by chairman John Sinclair of the University of Manitoba. But it appeared that the margin was slim.

The motion to conduct a secret ballot was hotly contested and passed by an estimated vote of 29-27. The chairman refused to announce the exact result.

The confidence vote climaxed a tumultuous debate, punctuated by hisses and boos. Mr. Diefenbaker made an emotional appeal for support at a luncheon before the meeting.

Delegates from Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia assailed Mr. Diefenbaker, and said the Conservative party has no prospect of winning an election under his leadership. He was supported by Maritime and Prairie delegates.

Jeff Yyons (III Law) said from Ottawa last night the students' meeting reflected the mood of the party as a whole and of the country. He thought an open vote at the general party meeting would produce a clear majority for Diefenbaker, but the results of a secret ballot would be close and could go either way.

The six delegates from Toronto were split.

George Alexanderowich (III Law) thought that the Tories "shouldn't wash laundry in public."

The Campus Co-op entry won this year's cleaned-up version of the chariot race at the Winter Carnival. The Co-op entry is shown crossing the winning line.

'Religion is just a crutch'

By ANDREW SZENDE

A Sunday-school teacher admitted Sunday that there are some things in Christianity in which he doesn't believe. Others present agreed.

Bill Mann (III APSC) was speaking at a discussion between Tarheels Exchangers and their Toronto hosts on whether religion is necessary for morality.

He argued that morality and religion are the same, and that he believes in God because he needs God's help when in trouble.

Janet Saddington (IV Trin) maintained that religion is just a crutch for people who cannot otherwise arrive at a set of moral values.

She said that religion is really "churchianity"; blindly believing in a dogma which most people had not thought out.

"Morality involves respectability and keeping up of appearances. That is why going to church is considered moral."

She argued that the church has become outdated, so the way to arrive at moral standards is for the majority of people to agree on them.

Several people, including Tarheeler Dave Henry, agreed that religion is a kind of "bogeyman" being a "divine authority". It carries much more weight than simple "human authority", they felt.

One Toronto law student suggested that Communist morality is really Christian morality with a small "c", since the Communists had basically the same crimes and punishments as Christian countries — without belief in religion at all. He said in the Communist case the state is the basis of morality because it sets the laws.

Tarheeler Amee Gibson said religion does not have to be denominational; it can be "scientificity", communism, or atheism. "But," she continued, "every same person has a religion which determines his actions or morality."

Peter Haynes of North Carolina said Christianity is not justified in claiming that it is responsible for moral behavior. Stephen Dennis of North Carolina said, because organized religion is obviously a failure, men will have to set up guidelines for themselves.

Defends U. S. policy in Africa

A defence of America policy in Africa was coupled with "watch and wait" advice by G. Mennen (Soapy) Williams Friday night at Trinity College.

The United States assistant secretary of state for African affairs was speaking on "Education in Africa" to the African Students' Foundation.

Mr. Williams said the collapse of many African countries shortly after achieving their independence was not unique in history, nor was one-party government in a new country.

He denied that communism had a foothold in most of the new African nations. He called the recent Zanzibar coup "a genuine national revolution" which was only partly infiltrated by "Communist militants who were trained in Cuba."

He said Africans want freedom and not communism.

Mr. Williams attributed the late independence and also collapse of newly independent countries to economics. "The common trend is that free countries become troubled when they do not lose their poverty automatically with independence."

After independence, many find out their economy is still dependent, and find it difficult to carry out their policies. When poverty does not disappear, people become resentful, he said.

Answering questions, Mr. Williams denied that the United States supplied Portuguese in Angola with weapons and supplies to beat off Angolese revolters. He said the materials could have been purchased by Portugal before the revolt itself.

Winter Carnival beats warm weather

Damp and non-wintery weather didn't spoil the fun and attendance at the weekend activities of the Winter Carnival.

More than 800 students were on hand for the chariot race and other events on the front campus Saturday, and even 200 joined the torch parade Friday night in steady rain.

Almost 3,000 paid to see the Ice Show Friday in Varsity Arena; another 4,300 seats were filled for last night's Brothers Four concert. The Blue White dance Saturday was an early sell-out. An overcapacity crowd of 2,200 attended.

The Campus Co-op turned the tables on both the arts colleges and the Engineers by winning the third annual chariot race. The wooden, bicycle-wheeled chariot took advantage of this year's revised rules, and was able to lap the typical, heavy chariots.

"We wanted this to be a race, not a massacre," Blue and White Chairman Don Cunningham (IV Dents) said last night. He was upholding this year's race that was without the usual fights, injuries and ambulance calls.

Cunningham said the Carnival as a whole would lose some money this year, but how much or exactly why money would be lost was not determinable last night. Heavy door-sales of Ice Carnival tickets will help cut the loss, he said.

At the Engineer's inter-course race Friday afternoon, Chemical's entry—coated with poisonous red lead and grease—proved more of an untouchable than Electrical's entry, equipped with a 40,000 volt induction coil.

Stanley Taylor (II UC) took the prize for the longest beard for the second year in a row. Other beard-class winners were: Randy Stansfield (II Trin), style; Don McCuaig (Extc), shaggiest; and Gary Craig (IV APSC), fastest shaved.

Victoria swept both the toilet bowl and log-sawing events. Architecture won among ice sculpture entries, with Delta Kappa Epsilon and Lambda Chi Alpha running up. St. Michael's was given special mention.

Xi Psi Phi fraternity's bed made it to the finish line in the bed pushing class.

Perhaps the lowest attendance was registered at Sunday's Interdenominational service in Hart House. Only about 70 were present. Rev. Stanley Kutz of St. Michael's College preached the sermon.

Suspend slacker-upper

(SPECIAL) — An Oxford University student has been suspended for having a woman in his room at night.

Roger Lee Hostin, a 21-year-old graduate student at Worcester College, was informed of the suspension last Wednesday.

He offered an explanation of how a woman was found in his closet at night. He had been at a dance and then took her to get a taxi. This was not possible because of the heavy fog.

"I invited her to spend the night in my room," he said. The girl had phoned her residence to say that she was staying with friends, but the residence called Worcester College to find out where she was. She was there.

The incident was the latest in a growing controversy on the campus. The Student Council, in a report on student discipline, stated that a man's sexual behaviour was not a matter for college discipline.

University officials disagree.

Students are allowed to bring women into their rooms until 11 p.m. but violations are generally handled in the greatest secrecy.

U of T wins chess tourney

Eleven University of Toronto chess players combined to win the eastern Canadian University chess championship in a tournament held in Hart House last weekend.

Toronto won matches with Queen's, McGill and the University of Montreal to win the tournament with a total score of 18-6. The team lost only three games in 24.

McGill took second place with a 14-10 score. Queen's had 10½-13½, while last year's winner Montreal finished with 5½-18½.

Dave Grimshaw (SGS) shared first board honors with Kalotay of Queen's, each winning two games and drawing one.

the pacifists claim they were tortured by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation men in Griffin, Georgia last November.

In spite of documented records of the brutality there is no independent news observer to confirm these reports.

The Georgian, student newspaper at Sir George, phoned Georgia police and were told that GBI did use possible instruments of torture but not on prisoners... they reportedly played with them among themselves.

The marchers claimed that young and old men and women were burned with electric instruments normally used to prod cattle.

PLAN MORE TEACHERS

OTTAWA—External Affairs Minister Martin told Carleton University students this week that Canada plans a 50 per cent increase in its program of sending secondary school teachers on assignments in developing countries.

Mr. Martin spoke in connection with a student fund-raising program to bring overseas students to their university to study. Two students are presently studying at Carleton under this plan: one from Southern Rhodesia and another from Nigeria. The students hope to bring a third student to Canada by raising $5000.

He told the students that in the 1964-5 academic year the external aid office plans to have 230 to 240 teachers in the field compared with 160 in 1963-64.

Mr. Martin added that there will be an increased number of university professors carrying out assignments on behalf of the Canadian Government.

An increase was also expected in the number of overseas students brought to Canada for training in business and academic institutions. In 1963, some 1,400 individual training programs were arranged.

FACES CIVIL RIGHTS TRIAL

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—A Yale University student has volunteered to be a defendant in a civil rights test case in Clarksdale, Mississippi, next spring.

Richard Van Wagenen of Washington was arrested last October in Clarksdale for littering. He was passing out leaflets for the mock election of Aaron Henry at the time of the arrest.

Also arrested at the same time were four local Negro workers. They were convicted, but Van Wagenen had to return to New Haven before his trial came up.

His defense was being provided by the legal fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The group has agreed to use Van Wagenen's trial as a test case because of certain irregularities regarding his arrest.

Van Wagenen said that his case will be appealed if he is found guilty. There is no jail sentence for littering.

MARCH TO U.S.

MONTREAL—A 26-year-old ex-coed from Sir George Williams University flew Monday night to the state of Georgia, prepared if necessary to suffer starvation and torture "for the cause of peace."

Miss Mary Suzuki and Michael Newman (Burnaby, B.C.) are so concerned about the rights of people to "walk for peace" and distribute leaflets that they feel they have no alternative but to join those marchers who have been jailed in Albany, Georgia because of their civil disobedience activities.

Last May a group of pacifists began a walk to Cuba from Quebec as a protest against the mutual military build-ups and intimidations of the Cuban-US situation.

As a result of their activities, several of

Yanks not really ugly

A debate on the Ugly American Image in Canada proved to be one of the livelier discussions of the Tarheel Exchange.

The American students defended their nation in heated debate on such issues as economic encroachment of Canadian industry, the tourist image, and U.S. intervention in Canadian politics.

Pat Wilson, an English student at North Carolina, said later that although he felt there was some feeling against Americans, it was understandable.

As an example he referred to the matter of economic encroachment, saying "No debtor in the world ever likes his creditor."

Canadian students agreed, conceding that Canadian complaints were emotional rather than logical.

Wilson, who admitted he was a believer in power politics, said he felt the U.S. was the most powerful country in the world, and should use its power to gain its ends.

The response offered by U of T students was that if such intervention is not avoidable, it at least might be done more tactfully and skillfully.

Vic was victorious in several events during the Winter Carnival, including the toilet bowl. In this game, teams from Architecture, Engineering and Trinity fight for possession of the ball on the greasy front campus.

Papers must try teaching

(Special)—A Carleton psychology professor said Saturday that a newspaper which tries to reflect what we think is a failure.

Speaking to a teachers' seminar in London, Professor R. W. Wendt said he was dismayed to hear talk that some newspapers want to ask readers what newspapers should be like. "If we think that newspapers will reflect only a particular biased view, then we ought not to read them at all," he said.

A good newspaper, he said, is one that tries to teach, "to tell something." He expressed dislike for recent specialization that reports "a bunch of esoteric junk."

U of T card sharks win at Waterloo

A University of Toronto team carried off the trophy at the first University of Waterloo Invitational Bridge Tournament Saturday.

The team of Marty Ellis (III New), Mike Wise (II New), Mike Schoenborn (II UC), and Dave Bryce (I Vic) won 24 of the 40 hands played in the two sessions. They competed against teams from Waterloo, Windsor, Detroit, Rochester, and two more from Toronto.

One-half point behind the winners was a local team which included a former U of T student, B. O. Downes.

The Rochester team was third.

Tied with the Windsor team for fourth was the Toronto team of Bob Logie (II Trin), Lachlan McLeod (II Vic), John Norwood (I Trin), and Jerry Anglin (II SMC).

In a sawoff with Medicine, Vic took first place in the Winter Carnival's log-sawing contest.

increased fees

The recent announcements of fees increases at the University of British Columbia and the University of Alberta have resulted in immediate student protests. These protests have generally been directed at the universities, with the argument that the finances should be coming from the provincial governments instead of the students.

The western students are justified in their protests. A university education now is expensive enough to exclude many capable students. The increases only make financial considerations more important.

But we would question the direction in which the protests have been aimed. While pressure on the universities and boards of governors may instigate a chain of pressures, the problem does not rest with the universities.

As The Ubysey has so loudly pointed out, the B.C. government has persisted in cutting the financial requests of the universities. The universities have no choice but to raise fees; although, as The Ubysey suggests, the board may not have been adamant enough in presenting its requests.

The fees problem is one which may soon be facing University of Toronto students. Last September U of T comptroller G. L. Court said it is possible fees may be raised here next year.

The same situation exists in Ontario as in the two western provinces. The universities desperately need money, which they request from the provincial government. These requests are inevitably cut — last year in Ontario to $70,000,000 from $97,000,000 — and the universities are forced to raise fees in a futile attempt to obtain money for operating costs.

But neither does the problem stop at the provincial level. Unfortunately Queen's Park does not have an unlimited supply of funds, and is itself unable to meet the universities financial requirements.

President Claude Bissell has pointed out the money must come from the federal government. Last May Dr. Bissell, speaking for the Canadian Universities Foundation, asked the federal government for $300,000,000 to provide expansion funds for Canadian universities.

And this leads us right into the middle of the Confederation squabble. Constitutionally the provinces have power over education and the federal government is supposed to keep out of this field.

Until something is done to straighten out the British North America Act, it is unlikely that very much will be accomplished — and any move that is made will be on an ad hoc basis.

In view of the critical situation, the universities have suggested that the formalities be dispensed with, and that the federal money be distributed. But the provinces have been treading cautiously in order that they can retain control over education — at least until a new deal on Confederation can be worked out.

Considering the complexity of the problem, a student protest to the university becomes rather ludicrous, although students are certainly justified in registering their dissatisfaction.

At this point about all they can demand is a recognized philosophy of higher education. Until recently, higher education has been administered with about as much imagination and foresight as was a one-room country school at the turn of the century.

The predictable population explosion of the 1960's has caught everyone with their administrative pants down. Until a long-range policy is formulated, higher education in this country will continue to stumble along on a day-to-day basis.

If students plan to have any say in what is done, or if they even want to say that something can be done, intelligent and organized efforts will have to be made.

Sporadic blasts at the nearest authorities will only divide the academic communities, and will merely confuse the issues.

Students have a role to play in finding a solution to the problem. But if this role is to be meaningful it must be conducted on the level of responsibility which student leaders across the country are claiming is their right.

Fees, students and provincial governments

By MIKE HORN

Last March about 10,000 students from the University of British Columbia and Victoria College conducted a massive campaign—the Back Mac campaign—following intimations that university financial requests to the provincial government would not be met.

Mike Horn, now a graduate student at U of T, at the time was on the Victoria College students' council and helped organize the campaign.

Tuition fees have been raised at the universities of British Columbia and Alberta, and students are annoyed. Though at first glance these events are not spectacular, they raise some questions which concern all Canadian students.

How much in fees can and should the student pay at a public university? And how much should he be consulted in determining the amount of these fees? They are questions which take on special weight at UBC—which last March was the center of a student action which ranks among the largest and best-organized in Canadian university history.

The Back Mac campaign, though it originated outside the students' council, was adopted vigorously by what may well be the wealthiest and most powerful student government in Canada. Enthusiastically supported by students alumni and faculty members, the campaign involved much student time and more than $10,000 in an effort to marshal public support for adequate operating grants to the existing university system. Students were warned that tuition fees would be raised unless they acted.

DEMONSTRATED

The students did act. In Vancouver and Victoria they demonstrated: four thousand UBC students trekked to the courthouse in downtown Vancouver; in Victoria almost half of the student body filed quietly onto the Legislative Assembly steps in spite of a stiff law prohibiting such action (passed to prevent the Sons of Freedom from "loitering" on the legislative lawns). Student organizers addressed high school assemblies; and in the course of a three-day blitz, 232,000 voters signed petitions circulated throughout the province. These were ceremoniously presented to Leslie Petersen, minister of education, who was co-operative to the point of helping to arrange TV and radio coverage for the presentation.

BUT FEES RAISED

Virtually everybody rated the Back Mac campaign a success. Nevertheless UBC fees have now been raised $50 (to $372) in the faculties of arts, science and education, and $60 (to $432) in the professional faculties. And additional fee increases are in the cards. In view of the objects of the Back Mac campaign something obviously went wrong.

I stated this unhappy fact in print within three weeks of the campaign, and found my fears substantiated in subsequent months. In spite of the campaign, UBC's operating grant for 1963-64 turned out to be $8,575,000, some $1,600,000 short of the sum requested by the Board of Governors—and about $2,500,000 short of what department heads and faculty members felt to be essential.

But Premier Bennett's election victory in September indicated among other things that the voters were hardly disturbed by this development, notwithstanding the strong support which the petition had obtained from Interior constituencies, which are over-represented in the Legislative Assembly and for a decade a bulwark of the Bennett brand of Social Credit.

...Lots of people signed the petition—very few adults are opposed to higher education, and signing their names cost them nothing—but the students failed to make generous support for the university system a vital political issue. It is clear to instructors and students that government support lags well behind need. However the government took a step last year which indicated some concern about the future of higher education.

IMPLEMENT PLAN

The Macdonald Report, submitted last year, recommended a specific plan for the future development of higher education in the province. Implementation of this plan was one of the objects of the petition, as was the immediate supply of the operating grant requested by the board of governors. In its session early last year the government satisfied two of the most immediate

The American south...

By TOM WAKAYAMA

Tom Wakayama, a former student at the University of Western Ontario and now a field worker for the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, was at U of T in December to establish a Friends of SNCC group.

My acquaintance with the South began on a Sunday evening in Birmingham, Alabama, seven hours after four Negro girls were killed in the dynamite bombing of a Negro Church. I no longer feel the shock and disbelief I experienced that day, for my work with the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee has taught me that incidents like the Birmingham bombing are only a part of the total picture of violence and terror that dominates the South.

The South is built on a system of total segregation. It runs from the highest government official, like Governor George C. Wallace of Alabama, to the lowest "po white cracker", who firmly believes that even he is better than the best Negro.

It is even found in the segregated pews of the Southern Baptist church and in the Bibles clearly marked "Colored" and "White" on the edges of the leaves. All these forces are now well mobilized and what exists in many of the South today is a police state.

It is a police state in the full sense of the word—the local police and especially the state troopers are the well trained terror squad. The incidents of police brutality involving snarling police dogs, cattle prodders and high pressure hoses are not isolated instances that break out in extreme moments of excitement. They are deliberate actions of a sadistic police squad sent out to protest areas by government officials who know their capabilities and who know they will be fully used.

I have seen the scars inflicted by police night-recommendations of the Macdonald Report on education: the separation of Victoria College from UBC, and the creation of Simon Fraser University in Burnaby.

One thing is clear: the government's financial support even at this initial stage is insufficient from the University's point of view, and especially from that of the student, who is now expected to make up part of the difference between available funds and actual needs. Professors like philosopher Avrum Stroll can complain and move to the University of California. Students can also complain but in the end they have to pay.

President Macdonald described the fee raise as "fair and necessary." Malcolm Scott, Students' council president, promptly called the increase "backward and indefensible." These are stock responses; more relevant to the situation in B.C. is the Ubyyssey's editorial question: "Why... if UBC is striving for the average in Canadian higher education and fees, does it not seek average provincial assistance also?"

More important still is the question: why increase tuition fees at all, anywhere, unless provincial governments are demonstrably incapable of contributing more money to their universities? That the B.C. government, for example, is incapable of doing this is belied by Mr. Bennett's widely advertised budget surpluses.

Forcing students to take up the slack in university operating budgets created by niggardly governments can in no way be interpreted as providing an incentive to enter university.

Reports from UBC indicate that outside of the students council and the Ubyyssey the student attitude is fatalistic. That there are grounds for Scott's charge of a "sweetheart agreement" between the Board and the government has been denied by the board chairman. Nobody outside the board of governors is entirely clear about its relations with the government, but the accusation that the former is too easily intimidated into making a less than favorable deal can hardly be established or disproved without inside information. Whatever the case, the students have been presented with a fait accompli.

AFFECTS ALL STUDENTS

Implications of the decision concern students across the nation. The University of Alberta has also announced a fee raise, and an interesting point is raised in a letter to the Ubyyssey: "With UBC fees hiked, U of T can hike its fees with the claim that UBC has hiked its fees. Each side thus supports the other with complementary casualties as they gouge the students' pocket books." The language is perhaps too aggressive, but the point is valid; and if the students of UBC failed in their massive attempt to forestall a fee increase, can students anywhere else feel safe?

Any decision as to what amount of tuition is "fair" is purely arbitrary. Talk about the amount the "average student" can afford makes little sense until we manage to locate this elusive scholar and if, having found him, we consider it fit and proper to handicap the economically below average student. Considering Canada's need for educated citizens, a far more valid and relevant criterion would be: what amount of tuition, if any, would be most effective in attracting the largest number of potential students to our universities? The answer is simple: no tuition at all; and this solution has been adopted by many American state universities for in-state students.

LITTLE HOPE IN CANADA

It is too much to hope that this idea will catch on quickly with Canada's farsighted legislators. There is unfortunately no way even of ensuring that fees will stay at their present level, for generous financial support to public universities does not rank high among the issues occupying the minds of most voters and their representatives. Conditions in B. C. are admittedly worse than in some other provinces, but if Premier Bennett can get away with "shafting the university" (to quote another Ubyyssey editorial), so can premiers of provinces which presently have rather more enlightened policies. And students across Canada are foremost among those who will have to foot the bill.

... a police state

sticks on black heads and the burns inflicted by cattle prodders on black bodies. I have been told of the beatings in the medieval southern jails. I have all these incidents fully documented by SNCC fact sheets, notarized affidavits, taped interviews, records and photographs.

In Americus, Georgia on August 9, 1963, James Williams, a Negro, was walking down the street where demonstrations, initiated by SNCC, had erupted. He was not in the demonstration nor did he belong to any civil rights organization. He does now because on that day James Williams was brutally beaten. He was attacked by two Georgia State Troopers who struck repeated blows on his head with their clubs. He fell to the ground bleeding profusely from a severe scalp laceration.

"Get up nigger", they shouted, and then proceeded to stomp on him with their boots. But James Williams could not get up because they had broken his leg. Even the cattle prodder thrust into his rib could not make him get up. They had to carry him into the jail where he was to receive more punishment. An hour later he was given medical attention.

James Williams will be immobilized for six months with a cast extending the entire length of his leg. I have an affidavit and a taped interview of his experience.

No one is immune to this brutality, not even a housewife in the sixth month of pregnancy. Mrs. Slater King, wife of the Albany Movement's vice-president, had driven to the Camilla jail to bring food to the daughter of a friend who had been incarcerated there. As she and a few friends approached the gate two deputies of the Camilla jail ordered them away. Mrs. King because of her condition, walked slowly. One of the deputies incensed by this kicked and knocked her to the ground. Another officer hit her twice on the side of the head and she lost consciousness. As a result of this beating Mrs. King lost her child.

But again, James Williams and Mrs. Slater King are not exceptional cases. There are people with similar stories all throughout the South. Police brutality is happening while I am writing. It is happening in Albany, Georgia; in Gadsden, Alabama; in Selma, Alabama; in Greenwood, Mississippi; in Danville, Georgia. It is happening wherever a Negro has broken the enslavement of a lifetime and is demanding his civil liberties.

It is under these conditions I have described, that the workers of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee wage their daily campaign of "One Man - One Vote". They have no protection from state courts for the courts are an integral part of the white power structure. Until only recently, three SNCC field secretaries were being held in a jail in Americus, Georgia, awaiting trial on a charge of "inciting to insurrection", a capital felony punishable by death.

Despite these overwhelming odds the struggle of SNCC continues.

Swimmers lose a record by false start in relay

Despite disqualification in a Canadian record-breaking relay win, University of Toronto Swim Blues outlasted their water counterparts from Bowling Green University Saturday at Hart House. Bowling Green could have tied the meet by winning the final relay event, but Blues' Tom Verth held off the challenge of visitor Pete Weller to win by a stroke and give Blues an enjoyable 54-40 triumph.

Earlier in the evening, Blues had won the 440-medley relay in the record-shattering time of 3:56.7 only to have the effort erased because Pete Richardson started his leg too soon.

Big-shouldered Verth led the Varsity attack with a pair of wins. Despite the loss of pool conditioning to football this fall, Verth captured both the 200- and 500-yard freestyle events with ease.

Other individual victories for Blues were contributed by Pete Richardson in the 100-yard freestyle and Mike Chappelle in the 200-yard breast stroke.

400-yard medley relay: Bowling Green, 3:59.8, Toronto disqualified.
200-yard freestyle: Verth (T), Campbell (T), Simons (BG), Time 1:54.9.

Varsity gymnasts raise their standing

University of Toronto gymnasts proved themselves the best college squad in eastern Canada Saturday at the Trinity College School invitational gymnastics meet, but could only manage second to the host high-school team.

Blues totalled 232.4 points compared to TCS' score of 248.5. Queen's placed third with 220, while defending champions Royal Military College finished fourth with 204.4.

Interfaculty champion Bill Whitelaw led Blues, placing first in the high bar, second in the parallel bars and still rings, and third in the box horse. Whitelaw's efforts earned him second place in individual standings, 6.3 points behind TCS's Bob Kirby.

Digby Sale performed flawlessly in the still rings and his 18.2 score out of a possible 20 marked the highest total for one event in the meet. A third place to Dick Addington gave Blues a clean sweep in this event.

In other placings, Sale took third in the parallel bars, while Scott Griffiths finished third in free calisthenics.

Blues' next competition will be in a triangular meet against McMaster and Ontario Agricultural College at Hart House February 19.

clair to the ice and could have caused a serious injury. Since Charbonneau seemed more concerned with picking up penalties than playing hockey, he should have been ejected from the game immediately. Barry didn't even call a two-minute penalty.

The game was then delayed for five minutes while fans littered the ice with everything from programs to a dead fish and Montreal and Varsity players exchanged words, pushed and shoved. Canadian-Canadian relations weren't improved when some imbecile fans called the Montrealers "frogs", "pepsis", and "animals." One clod even spit on a player in the Montreal bench. And to top off the melee, Blues' Awrey picked up the fish and hurled it into the Montreal players' bench, striking Lefort on the head.

Awrey, who also shows a tendency at times to be more concerned with sitting in the penalty box than winning games, should have been ejected from the game. He wasn't and in fact there was not one penalty called for the entire five-minute episode.

Since Charbonneau had been allowed to continue in the game, it was not too much to assume that Blues would be out to get even. Rookie Don Fuller took it upon himself to be the avenger. First, Fuller almost took Boucher's head off with his elbow and received a two-minute sentence. Then when he returned to the ice he wasted no time in stabbing the blade of his stick into Charbonneau's midsection. Charbonneau retaliated and the fight was on. Awrey hadn't had enough so he charged into the fracas.

Fuller, Chabonneau and Awrey were sent to the penalty box to cool off. By this point all three should have been drying themselves after an early shower.

During one of the many altercations, I asked one of the officials why Barry hadn't ejected a few of the hot-heads to restore order. He replied, "Sometimes you'd like to get these guys out of there, but you don't have any reason."

No reason? I guess malicious elbow checks in the head, fish-throwing and spearing are part of hockey. If that's the case, the intercollegiate hockey league will be Joe's Fish Market's biggest customer.

Cagers stay in second division, defeat Redmen but lose to Gaels

By PAUL HENDERSON
Toronto Varsity cagers failed in a bid to move into the first division of the Intercollegiate league on the weekend when they split a pair of games on the road.
McGill Redmen, the only team Blues have been able to master, suffered their eighth consecutive defeat and second at the hands of Blues, 57-45 Friday in Montreal.
And a vastly improved Queen's club edged Varsity, 71-69, in a thrilling game at Kingston, Saturday, virtually eliminating Blues from contention.

Matmen outclassed by Americans

Varsity Wrestling Blues suffered their worst defeat of the season Saturday when they were outclassed, 23-6, by Bowling Green University at Hart House. The visiting American squad, acknowledged as one of the strongest east of the Mississippi absorbed only two defeats en route to their victory.

Blues continued to be plagued by lack of wrestlers and began the meet by dropping 10 points through two defaults, both in lightweight divisions.

Freshman Alvin McKenzie and veteran John Holt provided brief moments of joy for Varsity supporters. McKenzie, a sure bet for the OQAA rookie grappler of the year award, outpointed his 137-pound opponent Nick Delpizzo, 4-3.

Varsity new comers Pete Derry and Ray Seto fought well in defeat, as did Bob Griffiths who prodded a close 21 decision.

Blues' defending intercollegiate 177-pound champion, Don Merker, lost his first bout of the year and one of the few he has ever dropped. Merker was decisively won by Bob Lee, 6-3.

Blues possess a record of two wins and three defeats and are in fifth-place tie with McMaster Marauders. Both teams have registered two victories, although Blues have played two fewer games than Marauders.

While Blues were eliminating themselves, Windsor Lancers moved a step closer to clinching their second straight Intercollegiate title, dumping previously undefeated Waterloo Warriors, 107-81. Lancers have defeated all contenders in running up a 6-0 record and scoring 603 points.

Against Redmen, Blues were paced by Dave West, who netted 15 points, tops in the dull game. Without the services of Ed Bordsas, Dave Ouchterlony and John O'Neill, who did not make the trip, Varsity had trouble collecting rebounds and mounting a score. They were rendered more impotent when West fouled out with eight minutes left in the game.

Bill Woloshyn hooped 11 points and Arvo Neidre, forced to play centre because of the absences, 10. Wayne Andrew and Vlad Baranowicz added 9 and 8 respectively. Bob Mingie (12) and George Lengvari (11) led McGill.

Blues missed four foul shots in the last 1½ minutes of play Saturday with the score 70-69 in favor of Queen's.

West scored 29 points in returning to his early-season form before leaving the game in the latter stages with a knee injury. Woloshyn contributed 15 and Dave Ouchterlony, who joined the team for the encounter, 8. Ouchterlony also played well under the boards but Queen's starting five were all at least six-foot, three-inches tall and collected most of the rebounds.

Larry Ferguson's 28 points were top for Queen's. Bob Howes matched his own game-average of 13 points and Doug Evans notched 10.

West, Ouchterlony, Neidre, Andrew and Woloshyn all fouled out of the game, played before more than 1,000 spectators.

In Windsor, Lancers displayed their depth once again as five players hit double figures. Bernie Friesmuth headed Lancers with only 18 points but Bill Brown and Angelo Mazzuchin were close behind with 16 apiece and Bob Horvath and Bill Hassett added 15 and 14 ties respectively.

Waterloo centre Jerry Raphael was high scorer in the game, however, surpassing his season's game-average with 28 points. Bob Pando hooped 16 points before fouling out.

Under the Basket:—West's injury may be a torn knee ligaments . . . Bordsas missed both games and Ouchterlony the McGill game because of studies. . . McManus figured that Queen's could have been contenders for the title if they had been able to use all their current players from the start of the year . . .

VARSITY AND SAC TIE 3-3

The Varsity and SAC failed to settle their difference Friday night when their hockey teams met in the greatest clash of the century at Varsity Arena. Although there is still some dispute over the outcome, the scoreboard read 3-3 when the final bell brought the tough, 45-minute game to a close.

The continual dispute between The Varsity and SAC thickened after the game when the SAC Fluffies charged that the Varsity Inkmen didn't score one legal goal.

Larry Ward scored SAC's first goal while Inkmen had their five females on the ice in front of goaltender Al (Shutouts) Schoenborn. Ward batted in a loose puck while the Varsity femmes tried frantically to clear the puck out of their end of the rink.

Don Arthurs, cigar and all, made the score 2-0 for Fluffies before Lyn Owen counted Varsity's first goal when she and two other females pushed the SAC net into the opposing end of the rink and "captured" the puck.

Arthurs then scored his second goal to pave the way for a great come back by Inkmen. Steve (Body Basher) Barker made the score 3-2 when he flipped the puck (one of three that were on the ice at the time) past SAC goaltender John Roberts.

Varsity coach Rick (Punch) Kollins got credit for the tying goal in the game's final seconds although the Fluffies contend that referee Bob Awrey of Varsity Blues actually put the puck in the net.

Royal Military College's Ed Sanford. There were 71 entries in the junior division.

The senior final pitted two Blues against each other. Dave Morrison gained a hold-down over teammate Jim Marks to clinch that championship.

But Varsity's senior squad of Marks, Morrison, Bill Collier and Frank Foulkes was unable to manage their Ryerson rivals, and the polytechnical team took the team championship, 21-10.

Eleven universities were entered in the team competition.

STUDENTS OF VARSITY

You say it is a duty to publish one's opinions. In my opinion there need be no more than job to job unemployment in this bountiful land; governments need not borrow money from private investors; prospective home owners need not borrow money from private investors with which to finance the ownership of average utility homes; funds for financing government projects and homes need not cost more than a fraction of one percent per annum; taxes can easily be drastically reduced; we can bring in a million immigrants a year for generations and enjoy ever increasing prosperity for all; we can demonstrate to the world a sound system of financing our dual public and private enterprise economy, and end the threat of the nuclear destruction of our civilization.

You supply the hall, and I will explain why and how. Invite economists, bankers, editors, politicians so that they too can hear and learn the truth about our chronic economic difficulties, for they know not that they know not.

Blues defeat Carabins, tie for first place

Four goals in 40 seconds, Stu McNeil injures back

By GORD BELLMORE

It was a long time coming, but Varsity Hockey Blues finally broke loose in Friday's game at the Arena against University of Montreal Carabin. In the space of 40 seconds, Blues exploded for four goals late in the second period to break open a close game and give them the needed margin for a 7-3 victory.

The win, coupled with Carabins' big 7-6 upset of McMaster Marlins Saturday on Marlins own ice, gave Blues a full share of the league lead. Blues and Marlins now have identical 5-1-1 records for 11 points, two more than Montreal, the surprise team of the year.

Carabins have one game in hand and can move into a tie with the leader by defeating Laval Rouge et Or in Quebec City Wednesday night.

The hard-won victory over Montreal came at a high price for Blues. All-star Stu McNeil, playing only his second game since rejoining the team, suffered a recurrence of an old back injury early in the first period.

The talented centre said later that his back gave out when he turned sharply on a routine play. The full extent of the injury will not be known until later today when X-rays will be taken.

McNeil is the second all-star Blues have lost in three games. Ward Passi had his leg broken in the first Montreal game two weeks earlier.

Speyer starts spree

Peter Speyer started the four-goal onslaught when he went the length of the ice to score. He backhanded the puck past Jean Viau in the Montreal goal with defence-man Jean-Jacques Granger hanging on his back.

Hank Monteith and Bobby McLellan then struck in rapid succession, and before the startled Carabins could recover he game was out of reach with the score 6-1.

The swift demolition of the visitors came after 35 minutes of almost uncanny goal-tending by Viau, who frustrated Blues shooters time and again. Prior to the four goal spree, Blues had built up a slim 2-1 lead on goals by Don Fuller, and Hank Monteith, with Jean Delorme scoring for Carabins.

Blues came out loaded for bear in the first period and the game quickly developed into a rough, fast-moving affair. The crowd anticipated trouble because of the injury to Passi in the first game between the two teams and kept up a continuous clamor from the start.

Pierre Charbonneau, the man who put Passi out of action, was the particular target of the spectators. Charbonneau lived up to his rough-neck reputation, and in the third period, after already incurring four penalties, came off the penalty bench to flatten Blues' Ian Sinclair from behind.

The incident almost resulted in a full-scale riot as some incensed spectators, and the Varsity team went after Charbonneau, who had fled to the Carabin bench. A large fish, tentatively identified as a dogfish shark, was thrown on the ice, and Blues' Bob Awrey quickly flicked it at the Montreal bench.

Hank Monteith stars

Carabins got two goals back in the third period after the game was out of reach as Gilles Lefort, and Jean Cusson each scored. All three Montreal goals came with Blues a man short. Sonny Osborne counted Blues final tally.

Hank Monteith was the big gun for Blues, counting two goals and two assists. It was the second outstanding performance in a row for the aggressive rookie, who has shaken his early season slump.

Carabins upset McMaster on 3 third-period goals

The scramble for first place in the Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League took on a new look over the weekend as Varsity Blues defeated Montreal Carabins, 7-3, and then Carabins upset McMaster Marlins, 7-6.

Blues' victory in Toronto Friday moved Varsity into a first-place tie with McMaster, each team having 11 points in the standings. Montreal's upset of Marlins Saturday moved Carabins to within two points of the top and they have played one less game than the leaders.

Montreal scored three goals in the final period at Dundas, Ont. to overcome a 6-4 McMaster lead. Defence-man Jean-Jacques Granger scored the winning goal with less than two minutes to play in the game.

Andre Boucher, Montreal's leading scorer, paced the victory with three goals. Jean Delorme, with two, Gilles Lefort and Granger counted the others. Gary Spoor, Jim McLellan, Pete Randle, Bobby Apps, John Savage and Larry Keleher scored for McMaster.

MAN'S ANIMAL INSTINCT HAS A FIELD DAY

EVERY SPECTATOR at Varsity Arena Friday afternoon thoroughly enjoyed the wild and woolly show put on by Blues and Montreal Carabins. There's something in our nature that makes sports fans thrive on fights, elbowing, high-sticking, more fights, spearing, slashing, more fights, holding, butt-ending, and still more fights. It is this quirk in man's nature that makes professional wrestling one of the biggest box-office attractions in North America. Spectators know that pro wrestling is prepared entertainment. But they love the violence anyway.

Nonetheless, this is no justification for the deplorable display that was perpetrated at the Arena Friday afternoon. And don't kid yourself, it was deplorable.

The nature of hockey is conducive to flaring tempers and personal "battles." But there is no reason, under any set of hockey rules, why a game should get out of hand. Any competent referee, using his power of authority, should be perfectly able to sense unjustified antics in the making and nip them in the bud.

Referee Bill Barry showed Friday that he is not competent. On at least three occasions in the hectic third period Barry could have prevented the game from turning into a side-show where hockey is the least important purpose of the players. If Barry had imposed a game misconduct penalty on the first of these occasions the game likely would not have deteriorated into a vendetta. Barry muffed this opportunity and then, in the name of consistency, choked twice more.

It was obvious from the opening whistle that Blues were hungry for victory. They had lost, 1-0, to Carabins two weeks before in Montreal, their only setback of the season. And in that game Ward Passi was sidelined for the remainder of the schedule with a broken leg when he was checked heavily by Pierre Charbonneau, Carabins' hard-rock centre. Most Blues feel that Charbonneau hit Passi viciously while neither player had the puck. The referee likely thought otherwise, or else didn't see the play, because Charbonneau received no penalty.

Before Friday's game was one minute old, Sonny Osborne of Blues contacted diminutive Andre Boucher of Montreal with a heavy but clean body check. At this point the tone of the game was established. By the third period, Barry had assessed 36 minutes in penalties, including a 10-minute majors for fighting to Bob Awrey of Varsity and Gilles Lefort of Montreal.

THIS IS ONE REALLY BIG FISH STORY

THE SERIOUS TROUBLE started half way through the final period when Charbonneau, upon returning to the ice after serving his fourth minor penalty, hit Ian Sinclair of Blues in the side of the head with his elbow while Sinclair was facing the other way. The unexpected blow knocked Sin-

'Subversive' student fights on

By DAVID BRYCE

Tom Morgan, one of the three Indiana State University students indicted last May and re-indicted in July in the first use of the Indiana Anti-Subversion Act of 1951, is here this week to publicize the case and to raise funds for his defence.

Morgan, Ralph Levitt and James Bingham were three officers of the Bloomington chapter of the Young Socialist Alliance. They organized a meeting, attended by 128 students, faculty, and townspeople, at which Leroy McRae, a national officer of the YSA, advocated the use of violence by Southern Negroes if Necessary in their struggle for civil rights.

Morgan is presently free on $1,000 bail, but faces a prison term of 2-6 years if convicted. The act makes it a crime to "assemble for the purpose of advocating" the overthrow of either the Indiana or United States government by "force, violence, or any unlawful means." The case is believed to be the first in which students have been prosecuted for their political beliefs.

Interviewed by a Varsity reporter, he appeared a quiet, earnest young man. Only 23 years old, he has been apparently matured greatly by his recent experiences.

He was in his last year at IU until the spring of 1963.

His life was transformed by the charges laid against him and his friends, but even more by the "trial by newspaper" which the Monroe County prosecutor, Thomas A. Hoadley, conducted.

Hoadley found fertile ground for his allegations and innuendoes in Bloomington, a former bastion of the in the work of the Committee to Aid the Bloomington Students, and Morgan is on a tour of the continent to publicize the case and to raise funds for the C.A.B.S.

The committee has raised in three months approximately $1,200. Morgan estimates that $5,000 — $10,000 is needed to conduct the defence at the local level. If it is necessary to carry the case to the Supreme Court, as much as $30,000 would be required.

"While the United States is widely regarded as the land of the free, it has always been necessary to fight for freedoms," Morgan said. He indicated that although nearly everyone he has talked to has given his support, enough support has not come from the wallet.

Morgan is to speak at New College at 1 p.m. today, and in Rm. 2135 of Sidney Smith Hall Thursday at 4 p.m.

The meeting is sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council, the Student Christian Movement, and the CUCND. The SAC has voted to send $25 to aid the defence of the Bloomington students.

Nine professors from the University of Toronto have expressed support of the committee, among them Professors Northrop Frye, C. B. Macpherson, and David Gaither.

Canada students jailed in Georgia

ALBANY, Ga. (CUP) — Two Canadians were arrested in a vigil outside Turner Air Force Base Monday.

Mary Suzuki, of Sir George Williams, and Michael Newman of Burnaby, B. C. were arrested for participating in a vigil protesting the arrest of a group of pacifist marchers last week.

The marchers were on a Quebec-City-to-Cuba march to protest against the settling of international problems (principally the U.S.-Cuba situation) "by bombardments of hot words, mutual intimidations and military build-ups."

Another demonstrator was arrested later at the jail when he argued with officers about the earlier arrests, bringing to 27 the number of pacifists in the Albany jail.

No visitors except lawyers are permitted and on letters are allowed to be mailed. Some messages were smuggled out on toilet paper.

Miss Suzuki is reported to be on an indefinite fast.

Police Chief Laurie Pritchett has ordered forced feeding of all the marchers.

Ray Robinson Jr., 28, an American Negro and ex-boxer, was on a complete fast for 2½ days. In hospital last Wednesday, he gave up the fast to be coherent for a psychiatric examination.

He now is back in jail and back on his fast.

Peter Light, a volunteer at the Montreal Peace Centre, plans to fly to Georgia today and is likely to be spending his 27th birthday in jail.

The marchers left Quebec City last May and hope to reach Guantanamo, Cuba. The arrest was their eighth on the march.

The New York Committee for Non-Violent Action claims that they were tortured with electric cow prodders last November by members of the Georgia Investigation Bureau.

In January, the Montreal Peace Centre Personnel and sympathizers demonstrated outside the U.S. Consulate in protest against the alleged tortures.

SAC head says rep by pop question deferred

Students' Administrative Council President Doug Ward (III Emm) said last night that the matter of representation by population on the SAC will not be brought up this year.

Earlier there had been reports that Ward intended to raise the question at the council meeting tonight.

"We are presently negotiating with the board of governors on the relation of the board to the SAC, and I think we should clear this up before bringing in other matters." Any change in council election structure would require approval of the board.

Also, the university committee has not yet come up with any definite proposal, and until they do Ward does not feel council should act.

Several submissions to the committee have contained the proposal that the structure of council be changed to provide one representative for every 250 or 300 students.

Ward said he felt the best course was for council to complete the report now under preparation by the committee and leave it up to future councils to implement.

As a precedent he cited the report on honoraria and salaries prepared by the 1962-63 council which the present council now is applying.

Dual representation may liven SAC meet

By DON SMITH

Varsity SAC Reporter

Tonight's ninth general meeting of the Students' Administrative Council shapes up as a session for marking time and awaiting developments.

The most important issue on which debate is scheduled so far is dual representation. The report of the special committee which has been considering the problem will be submitted by committee chairman Stan Adelman (II New).

Information on other matters, such as the final loss or profit of the Winter Carnival or the desirability of the SAC setting up a student credit union, is not expected to be available until the next meeting.

The representation problem first arose through the creation of New College two years ago. All students at New College, including those from the professional faculties, vote for the SAC representative from the college.

The question which has been raised is whether Adelman represents all students at the college, or just the artsmen, since representatives of the professional faculties claim to represent the others.

If he represents all New College students there should be a second New College representative, for registration exceeds the constitutional limit of 500 for one rep.

The problem also arises in connection with the rarely-used "extraordinary" system of voting, by which each rep casts a vote proportional to the number of students registered in his college or faculty.

Blue and White Chairman Don Cunningham (IV Dents) said Tuesday that figures on the financial success of the Winter Carnival would not be available tonight because of late billing by some firms. He did say that he thought there would be some loss, but he declined to estimate how much this might be.

Chairman of the credit union committee Larry Ward (IV Vic) said the committee is awaiting a reply to a request for information from the credit union of the University of Montreal, and that it would probably not be available tonight.

There is a possibility that the credit union issue will bypass council. A motion to open the facilities of its credit union to all students is on the agenda of the Campus Co-operative executive, also meeting tonight, and if this is passed there would be no necessity for the SAC to act.

One report which may be available tonight is that of Len Shore (III Law), chairman of the national affairs committee, on the students' government at the University of Tanganyika, at Dar es Salam.

On this report council will base its action with regard to financial support of the government, which it supported two years ago with a grant of $1,500.

Blaze damages wall

The caretaking staff in Simcoe Hall was thrown into a slight flurry Tuesday morning when a fire broke out in a second-floor store room.

The fire department was called and it promptly responded by sending five fire reels.

A table strewn with paper towels and a box of trash beneath it were burning.

The fire was promptly extinguished before no more damage than a charred wall was caused.

Two members of the caretaking staff suffered burns to their hands when they tried to put the fire out.

Firemen suspect that the blaze was started by a discarded cigaret but found no evidence to back up that claim.

The incident occurred at 8 a.m. before many students had arrived on campus.

Leech named successor to Woodhouse

The appointment of Prof. Clifford Leech as chairman of the department of English in University College was announced Tuesday by President Claude Bissell. He succeeds Professor A. S. P. Woodhouse who will retire June 30.

Prof. Woodhouse has been head of the UC English department for 2½ years and of the School of Graduate Studies English Department for 17.

He was born in Port Hope, Ont., educated at the Barrie Collegiate Institute, University College, and Harvard University, and joined the staff of University College in 1929.

He assumed the position of head of the department in 1944, and devoted himself to reorganization of the honors course and to shaping the policies of the graduate department.

He also served on a number of the president's committees, was a founding member of the Humanities Research Council of Canada, a fellow (and vice-president) of the Royal Society of Canada, and a member of the executive councils of the Royal Society and the Modern Language Association of America.

Prof. Woodhouse edited the University of Toronto Quarterly, and his published works include Puritanism and Liberty, The Humanities in Canada jointly with Watson Kirconnell, and a wide range of articles on literature and the humanities.

Prof. Leech was born in London in 1909 and holds M.

A. and Ph.D. degrees from London University. He taught at the universities of Wales and Durham before coming to Toronto as a visiting professor in 1962, and was head of the Durham English department from 1954 to 1963.

He has travelled widely in the United States, Europe and Asia as a guest lecturer, and received an honorary doctorate from the University of Clermont-Ferrand in 1962.

The new department head's publications include works on Shakespeare, Webster, Fletcher, Ford and Eugene O'Neill, and he is a member of the editorial board of Studies in English Literature and of the honorary committee of Critical Quarterly, and is general editor of the Revels Plays series.

New countries need bread first

If new countries emerging from colonialism want to develop economically, they "might have to postpone liberty for a time, a decade perhaps," Prof. C. B. Macpherson of the Political Economy Department said Monday night.

Debating the question "Bread or Liberty" with Prof. Peter Russell of the same department as part of International Students Festival Week, Prof. Macpherson said new countries really have no choice between economic development and liberty.

"There cannot be real liberty in a country where there is dire poverty," he said.

Thus for the first decade new countries should put aside their ideals for liberty in favour of economic development.

Prof. Russell agreed that bread and liberty go together but does not see "why a country must develop so rapidly that it has to decrease liberty."

He cited India and Nigeria as among the more stable of recently emerged countries but explained they have no enormous concern for fast economic development at the expense of liberty.

He saw no reason why an emerging nation should follow the example of Cuba and Ghana.

Prof. Macpherson attributed the stability of India and Nigeria to the ready availability of capital in these countries when they became independent.

To other countries the capital for economic development is only available from other countries and this money usually "has strings attached."

He also stated that rapid development was necessary in order to hold the country together.

"A country should be sure — right at the beginning — whether it will stay together," countered Prof. Russell.

"An alternative would be to make the country more attractive to private investors."

"I don't think U.S. investors have drastically curtailed our autonomy as a nation," he said.

Shorts are not desirable in Europe

A Phys Ed co-ed who took a cycling trip through Europe has advised Toronto girls not to wear shorts there, because of the interest often aroused. Although she slept with bedbugs in a Florence youth hostel and woke up to military music in some German hostels, she believed hostels provide the best way of seeing Europe.

Veronica Holdup (III PHE) was speaking yesterday to an overflow crowd who heard that youth hostels are the cheapest and probably the best way of seeing parts of Europe. The cost per night is between 17 and 35 cents, excluding food.

A symposium of students speaking in the Destination Europe series gave varied views on student travel, reflecting their different experiences.

Sharon Meen (II Vic) said that one is considered as a student, not as a rich American. She found a great informality and independent spirit among the other students. Youth hostels provide an easy way to learn languages and make friends with Europeans, she explained.

In some countries, she said, a 'no driving, no drinking, no smoking' rule is enforced. These rules plus the early curfew, and 'morning duty' of small chores for each youth were the major disadvantages of the youth hostels, she believed.

John Cook (II New) found that hitch-hiking through Europe was as fast as the train and very acceptable. "A girl and boy couple is very functional — the girls gets the ride and the boy looks after it from there," he said.

To avoid the curfews in the large towns, one can stay out on the town all night or perhaps sleep in the jail, as is popular in London and Germany, he told the audience.

Pete Casson (III Apse) defended the much-maligned Italian hostels. "Only Italian hostels allow drinking, and they have the best parties in town," he said.

Says Christ looks 'mild'

A travelling evangelist said yesterday the modern image of Christ is a meek, mild, pale Galilean one. But he stressed that Christ is still relevant in the 20th century. Paul Little, denying that he was an evangelist, described his job as one of discussing issues of Christianity with university students. The "problem" in his first of three one o'clock lectures was showing how the identity of Jesus Christ makes Christianity unique.

Mr. Little said there are only four possible identities of Christ: liar, lunatic, legend, or Truth.

If it is accepted that Christ spoke the truth, we have answers to questions asked for centuries: why we are here, where we are going. Then we have some certainty amidst the confusion of the world.

Mr. Little speaks again today at 1 in the west Hall of University College.

To level palace

The Winter Carnival ice palace will be levelled tomorrow at 1 p.m.

Blue and White Society Chairman Don Cunningham (IV Dents) ordered the structure demolished because it is a hazard.

"It's fine now that we're having some cold weather, but with the next thaw the blocks could begin to shift," he said.

Cunningham said he was particularly worried about the hazard to children in the neighborhood.

The construction firm which donated a crane for the building of the palace will be asked to demolish it, either by knocking it down with a truck or by use of a wrecking ball.

BLURBS

The University of Toronto debating team won all of its debates at the University of Ottawa this past weekend but lost out on total points to Royal Military College.

Thursday's Hart House debate will resolve "Would this House support Lyndon Johnson as the next President of the United States?" The honorary speaker will be Prof E. McWhinney of the Faculty of Law.

Two workers were overcome by sewage gas yesterday in a sump hole at a construction site of moot court and a lecture hall beside the Law Library. They are both reported to be in good condition in hospital.

Dennis Lee, Victoria College lecturer, will examine social protest as seen in the works of John Osborne and Arnold Wesker today at 5 p.m. in Rm. 122 of University College.

The U of T Symphony Orchestra will present its first spring concert Saturday at 8:30 p.m. in the Great Hall of Hart House.

cowards or isolationists

At a Students' Administrative Council meeting two weeks ago, a fairly widespread opinion held that events which occurred outside Canada are of no ethical concern to students at the University of Toronto.

This opinion appeared to be based on the assumption that an official expression of student opinion on a situation such as the Bloomington student case constitutes unwarranted interference in the domestic and legal affairs of another country.

This is an absurd position.

This opinion is the same kind which holds that it is none of our business what the South African government does under the legal guise of Apartheid; what some of the southern states do in the name of segregation; and what the Soviet government did in suppressing the Hungarian rebels.

The principle involved is one of concern for human beings who are being maltreated. This principle is one which transcends national boundaries and legal systems.

In cases such as the one at Bloomington and the others mentioned, the actions taken can be defended on a legal basis. This does not mean that the actions are right; and it could mean that the laws are wrong.

When the laws are wrong, the only course to take, short of violence, is to use the weapon of public opinion to force changes in such laws.

If persons agree that injustices are being committed and yet refuse to express an opinion publicly, they are either moral cowards or isolationists.

Assuming that the cautious council members are not moral cowards, we can only conclude they are isolationists.

The only other isolationists of note we can think of start with Senator Barry Goldwater and end with members of the American right-wing lunatic fringe.

ban the band

This year the Students' Administrative Council had a budget of more than $240,000; but the figure is illusory.

Almost all of this money is allocated to specific expenditures, and council has an insignificant amount to initiate new activities or expand existing ones.

If council needs more money for activities it is forced to cut back on expenses in some areas or, as a last resort, try to get more in fees. This year many areas of SAC activity have been hamstrung because of financial problems.

If next year's council is to have financial resources to carry out some of the ideas proposed this year, funds are going to have to be found. Because it is very unlikely that fees will be raised, the money will have to come from reduced expenses in other areas.

One glaring example of a high council expenditure that could be reduced involves the Blue and White Band.

This year the band played at six football games and the Armistice Day service. Part of the band has also played at a few hockey games. None of these events are SAC functions.

The total cost of the band this year is estimated at $4,707. Of this the U of T athletic association pays only $1,000. The SAC pays the rest.

If the athletic association wants the band to appear at these events, it should be willing to foot the bill. If it does not feel the presence of the band warrants the expense, it should do without such music at its events.

In any case, the financial responsibility of the band does not lie with the SAC.

MP criticizes mediocre Canada

by FRED STINSON
as told to BILL CHRISTIAN

(Fred Stinson is a graduate of Trinity College in history, and a practising Toronto lawyer. From 1957 to 1962 he was the Conservative MP for York Centre, and during those years was vocal and influential in matters of foreign policy. Further, his voice has often been heard recalling Conservatives to true conservatism. In recent years one of Mr. Stinson's absorbing activities has been the foundation and leadership of the Canadian Overseas Volunteers.)

Canada is no place for the softness, weakness, and laziness resulting from affluence. As part of a world waging the great struggle of "peaceful coexistence", we should never let our government fall into the hands of the indolent and mediocre.

More men like Andrew Brewin, Jack Pickersgill, and Donald Fleming are needed to fill out the ranks of parliamentarians in a country which has made it socially unacceptable for a man to devote his time and energy to politics.

Hardworking, patriotic men can combat the efficient ruthlessness of communism and its suave cadres. But naive men like Howard Green and Alvin Hamilton could never penetrate the veneer of polished elegance to realise that the Communist is a man who takes his ideology seriously.

Work is the keynote. Curling and skiing have no place in the activities of diplomats and attaches, who should devote themselves to the study of the culture, geography, politics and language of the countries in which they serve.

A new, revitalised Conservative party, founded on hard work and political positivism, would be able to fill the bill, but conservatives will be denied their chance as long as Mr. Diefenbaker maintains his clutch on the party leadership. The longer he remains leader, the longer the Conservatives will be out of office.

Why the Conservatives for this job? Because mere tolerance and impractical ideals are not enough. With tolerance and ideals must go work, constructive intellectual vigor, and hard-headed practicality. For instance, the whole concept of defence and foreign affairs must be reconsidered, and only the Conservatives show any grasp of the need for positive action as opposed to maudlin retreatism.

With the state of our combat readiness, Wilson's slogan "He kept us out of war" could easily be modified to "He couldn't get us into war". The lack of transport for Canada's army is so severe that there would be almost enough time to hold a general election to test the opinion of the country before our "military might" would reach the combat theatre.

The artillery and infantry brigades stationed in Canada are prepared only to fight a war that will never come—one in their homeland.

The militia serves no useful purpose. Veterans with romantic remembrances of brave exploits and past glories have no role in the modern army. They have no value in national defence, but are of substantial cost.

Economisation of the armed forces will save money, but we have a moral obligation to use our wealth to aid the underdeveloped nations of the world. We are doing the little we are efficiently and well, but we could carry out a larger program with imagination and vigor.

Two hundred million dollars is not a large sum for a country of our wealth, but it is too large to be left entirely in the hands of top level bureaucrats. Business men, attracted by adequate salaries, could join with volunteer students in CUSO, and with professional groups, in serving abroad. Individual enterprise is needed here, as well as hand-handed government action.

American relations with Nationalist China are an instructive example of how aid in South-East Asia should be carried out. Civilian and military authorities handle the money honestly and efficiently. The people are better-fed, the children are in good schools with adequate text books, and a young army with good morale stands ready to defend their island. If Canadian aid could prove as effective, we could well be proud.

Our aid, though, must not be used indiscriminately. We must take into careful consideration just whom we are going to help. It is as important to hinder our enemies as to help our friends.

The problem of Red China ties in with this. Apart from the fact that the presence of Red China in the United Nations would slow down that organisation even more, and damage Soviet-Western relations, and force the West to turn to military alliances like NATO for hope and security, and generally catalyse the final destruction of the U.N., China's prestige would be increased among the Afro-Asian powers, and her control would be extended.

It has fallen on the shoulders of the United States to keep the peace in South-East Asia, but such a task would be impossible if Red China were given the added impetus of aid and trade from Western countries such as Canada. We cannot afford the luxury of de Gaulle's irresponsibility.

But the efficacy of our foreign policy and defence, and all our other affairs, and perhaps even of our survival itself, whether against external threats or our own apathy or misdirected zeal, will depend on the calibre of men in Parliament and our prodding of the parties to adopt positive policies. Political action is your job.

Criticizes Co-op

Sir: We were interested to note the mention of the Co-op in the Varsity for the past few weeks under the title suggesting "another service of the Co-op." It might be enlightened to look at the other side of the picture. Very often a few people start an institution with high ideals which become popular and expand into such a proportion that the ideals are buried in the maze of technicalities and the conflict of ambitions.

In our opinion, the Co-op resembles such institutions. We experienced two years of life in a tiny section of this institution called the apartment section. While no landlord was there to interfere with your independence, there was nobody to look after your comforts either. We lived in an old house with old furniture, paying a rent which was in no way less than any rooming-house around the campus.

These things could be explained off as a complaint of a few small individuals in a great big establishment, but after all the Co-op's ideal is for the individuals to live together in mutual benefit. The board seems to be more interested in enlarging the institution and its fame than in the comforts of the individuals in it.

Questions carnival loss

Sir: Concerning the Blue and White Society chairman's statement in Monday's Varsity, it was reported that he said that the Winter Carnival as a whole would lose money this year. It was reported that the reason for this was not as yet determinable. With limited mathematics, I calculated the income (?) for the three nights as follows:

(3,000 x $.75) &
(2200 x $2.50 &

This fantastic problem totals $10,375!

I wonder if I might prod an explanation, for it seems that one is due. Perhaps I am ignorant of the size of the expenditures, the number of gifts passes, and/or the failures of the management. Whatever the case, I would appreciate some enlightenment.

FROS activities in flux

by MARGO SPEISMAN

In the not too distant future, the familiar name of FROS (Friendly Relations with Overseas Students) may disappear from the alphabet jungle at U of T. The name change will probably come about when FROS moves into its yet-to-be-built new headquarters, International House.

Hildegard Schweiss, Secretary of FROS, talked about the organization's accomplishments and hopes for the future. The move to International House will in no way change the basic aims of FROS: to help newly-arrived students settle in their new environment and to provide a congenial place in which to meet and exchange ideas with Canadians and citizens of other countries.

Even before foreign students arrive in Canada, they are able to learn about this "home away from home" through a special booklet drawn up by Mrs. Kay Riddell, the overseas student adviser, and from students who have gone through it all before. The first person they meet when they get through customs at Malton is likely to be a student volunteer greeter from FROS. During the peak period for arrivals, student volunteers from both FROS and the World University Service are "on call" at Malton and the Royal York to welcome the new students to the University and to arrange for temporary accommodation. The greeters are given special instructions to explain such quaint Canadian customs as all numeral telephone numbers, and the enigma of the Toronto Transit Commission.

After these and other initial moves, the emphasis at FROS shifts to the important work of getting overseas students and Canadian students to know one another. In September, "open house" is held every Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday night, from then on, it's Sunday night only. Another excellent time for meeting overseas students is during lunch hour. FROS at noon hour is a pleasant change from most of the crowded, noisy eating places on campus and it is probably the only place in town where you can get a five-cent cup of coffee.

The process of "getting to know you" is accomplished through a wide variety of cultural and social events. Especially prominent are the Country Nights when students of one country take over the FROS house and exhibit the dress, dances and dishes of their homeland.

Urs Maag (SGS), one of the many students who dropped into the office during my visit, told me a bit about a recent development at FROS. For the first time last year, the house remained open during the summer and organized a program. "We went to the Caledon Hills farm and made other trips to Collingwood and the Lake of Bays. A trip was also arranged to Stratford where the group took in all three plays."

The success of FROS has been shown by its tremendous growth and impact on the city in general. FROS has been used by press and radio as a centre for interviews. At Christmas time, the house was flooded with invitations for students to have dinner in Canadian homes. Hildegard was quick to point out that Christmas is not the only day in the year and such invitations are always welcomed.

The rapid growth of FROS has produced pressing problems of finance and space. The University provides FROS with its present building, caretaking facilities and a secretary. All other staff members and needs of FROS are paid for by contributions from the community at large, university staff and students.

An acute lack of space has forced FROS to hold most of its functions in other buildings, thus threatening the organization with a loss of identity. Rotary International, District 707, some 30 clubs in Toronto and the surrounding area, are helping FROS solve this problem. This group is now carrying on a drive to raise $250,000 for the new International Centre to be located on the north side of Harbord on a site donated by U of T. At present about half this amount has been raised and it is hoped that construction can begin June, 1964.

It is hoped that the university will respond generously to this drive. In an address to the Rotary 707 at the beginning of this campaign, President Bissell stressed the value of such an organization when he said the International House "will not be just a clubhouse of social centre. It will be a focus of the process of mutual understanding."

Students on board of governors?

This article, which is reprinted from The Manitoban, argues that the university of Manitoba Students' Union should have representation on the university board of governors.

This suggestion has been made by several students at the University of Toronto, and the same arguments apply here. Miss Faerman is a member of the Manitoban editorial board.

By SARALEE FAERMAN

UMSU council and its executive have often been criticized of restricting themselves to the coordination of "unimaginative projects" and of lacking a distinct and overall philosophy of operation. President Bruce Doern and his council have found the best method possible of refuting such accusations by example to the contrary. It is possible to discern a real and a valid philosophy behind many of the activities initiated this year. More and more, council has come to recognize the necessity for increased student responsibility.

PROCEDURE LEGITIMATE

The latest and best example of this philosophy is council's suggestion that the president of UMSU be allowed to sit in on the meetings of the board of governors. It is only surprising that such a request was not made earlier. Since it is the student body that is most directly affected by the board of governors' decisions, the students should be given an opportunity to express their point of view.

There has been some hesitancy to grant this request on the grounds that the student body, unlike the board of governors, is constantly changing. This, however, is all the more reason to have a student present at board meetings. Because the student body is always changing, its opinions and needs differ from year to year. The board of governors, by nature a permanent body, cannot be expected to be aware of these changing needs unless there is someone at its meetings who is able to represent the students' point of view.

REQUEST SEAT

The board need not fear that students will block its decisions, since council has not requested a vote, and even if it had, one vote would not be sufficient to overrule the desires of the rest of the board members. The only way that a student representative could exert any influence, would be by convincing the rest of the board of the validity of the student viewpoint on a given issue, and this is after all a legitimate procedure.

In addition, if the students were able to see first hand that the board of governors had justifiable reasons for each of its decisions, there would be fewer complaints. In general, the move would be a wise one, fostering an unprecedented feeling of understanding and co-operation between students and the board.

If, on the other hand, the board were to refuse the request, it would be as much as admitting that its reasoning is not always valid and that it does not dare reveal its operations. Moreover, it would be exposing itself to accusations of being unreasonable and narrow minded since there is no way to justify an unwillingness to even listen to the student point of view.

There is a danger that the board of governors will try to ignore the request or dismiss it. It is to be hoped that this does not happen and that council will urge the board to give its proposal the serious consideration that it merits.

It all shows to go

By ROBERT DINSMORE

The kind of musical Cole Porter made himself famous with in the 30s required little besides a thin comic plot and a group of talented performers. As long as he could hang his "type" songs on something and had capable people to sing them, his success on a Broadway stage was assured. Last night's Vic Music Club production of a revised version of the 1934 Anything Goes proved that a too-familiar, thread-bare plot, can still be entertainingly punctuated with enthusiastic musical numbers.

With a passenger list made up of such notables as Evangelist-cum-night-club singer Reno Sweeney, the Rev. Dr. Moonface Martin, alias Public Enemy Number 13, and the typical love triangle plus mother-in-law to be, the SS American sails from New York for England. And anything, if not everything, goes!

The enthusiasm of the supporting players went too far in some cases, however, often over-staging and confusing the effect of lead performances. Marg Honey as Bonnie and Rick Axon as the ship's Captain offended in this respect. The ensemble numbers also tended to be a little overdone. Polish succumbed to volume.

But Betty Trott, last year's show-stopper in the Vic production of Pyjama Game, as Reno Sweeney (originally the Ethel Merman role), consistently lifted the pace, especially in such numbers as "Blow Gabriel Blow" and the title song. If "I Get a Kick Out of You" did not quite make contact, the fault lies with the play's revisers, not with Miss Trott.

The greatest delight of the evening was in the essentially non-singing role of Moonface Martin, played by Gary Fairfoul. The best comic lines were his and he took full advantage of them. Every scene in which he appeared was used successfully by him to portray the frustrated but happy second-rate gangster.

Mary Beth Irwin and Peter Middleton as the romantic leads were adequate, but Sir Evelyn Oakleigh, played by Glenn McCauley, was the best third of the triangle, as Cyril Ritchardish as the character's name implies.

After a shaky start, the pace picked up well, fell apart somewhat before the intermission, picked up with the ensemble number "Blow Gabriel Blow", led by Miss Trott, and languished until the finale. The intricacies of the denouement, and the closing chorus of "Anything Goes" left the audience entertained and happy.

The show runs until Saturday at Hart House, and musical comedy buffs will enjoy it.

White or wrong, Wallace is king

VICTORIA, B.C. (CUP)

Governor George Wallace, self-styled King Canute who sky-rocketed to international prominence last June by attempting to prevent integration at the University of Alabama, chose the University of Victoria for his first Canadian appearance.

He addressed nearly 1,000 students who gave him what an organizer called a "courtous and friendly" reception. But governor Wallace was confronted with two signs reading "Wallace Go Home" and "Negroes Si! Wallace No!"

Governor Wallace claimed the federal government has no constitutional right to "interfere" in educational matters. He quoted the Tenth Amendment which states that all powers not expressly delegated to the federal Government are "reserved to the states or the people".

The governor declared that "the real issue is not one of morals but of a federal takeover of our constitutional rights. There is no legal basis for federal interference."

But the Tenth Amendment is in contradiction to the Fourteenth Amendment passed in 1966 which states that "no state shall... enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges... of the citizens of the United States."

Governor Wallace was jeered when attempting to express the "compassion and good feeling" allegedly felt towards Negroes in his state.

He was then applauded when he suggested that Canada did not have large-scale racial turmoil, thanks to a restrictive immigration policy.

Governor Wallace denounced the "flagrant distortion" of the racial issue by such magazines as Time, Life, and Post.

He claimed that only 4 per cent of the Negroes in Birmingham participated in last summer's racial violence, and this had been "incited by outside trouble-makers."

He then charged that the Civil Rights Bill of the late President Kennedy is designed to compel employers to hire on racial criteria rather than on ability. He said he agreed with Senator Barry Goldwater in principle.

The governor took the opportunity to attack "Red-oriented groups" who allegedly participated in the Washington civil rights march in August.

In closing, Governor Wallace expressed little concern for the international repercussions of his segregationist policies, claiming that "it simply ain't nobody's business."

Condemn students as tightwads

The high reputation enjoyed by the Canadian Union of Students in international student affairs owes nothing to the generosity of Canadian students, CUS President David Jenkins told the McGill University Student Council Friday.

Jenkins deplored the unwillingness of Canadian students, who are among the wealthiest in the world, to fulfil their responsibilities to the international organization and to lend assistance to those national unions confronted with state opposition.

WUS wants seminar people for Chile trip

The annual World University Service's summer seminar organization is calling in applications for its 1965 program in Chile.

The seminar lasts from the end of June to the middle of August.

"Applications are being asked to be brought in a year early this year," said Dilys Francis, one of the WUS board of organizers, "because the language problem has to be solved ahead of time."

"All the seminar discussions and lectures will be carried on simultaneously in three languages, English, Spanish and French, but since the Spanish parts of the program will be so important, because lectures and discussions will be in Spanish, seminar members will have to know a certain amount of the language before they go," she said.

Miss Francis said applicants could gain provisional acceptance to the seminar on condition they learn Spanish after they apply. "They would be responsible for learning on their own," she said, "although we might have special tutoring from one of the language teachers on campus."

The only other requirement of the seminar is that applicants must be planning to return to the university in the following year as students in some capacity, graduate or undergraduate.

The seminar itself consists of a series of discussions and lectures with professors and government officials on the political, cultural and scientific aspects and problems of Chile. Chilean students will also take part in discussion groups.

After the discussion part of the seminar is over, members will visit Chile and tentatively other parts of South America.

Peskun is reason for Redmen success

By AL SCHOENBORN

Interfac Editor

Physical and Health Education and University College remain deadlocked on top of Group I interfaculty basketball after recent victories. PHE I handed Sr. SPS its sixth loss in seven games, 38-33. UC I needed a tremendous effort by freshman Peter Peskun to pull out a 42-35 comeback victory over St. Mike's A.

Peskun, who scored 27 points in the short 22-minute match, is the primary reason for the lofty position of Redmen. He is far and away the outstanding scorer in Group I with an average of 14.2 points-per-game. No other UC player is in the top 10, while PHE has four in that group.

	GP	Pts.	Avg.
Peter Peskun (UC)	6	85	14.2
Roy Schoedler (SMC)	7	74	10.6
Jim Holowachuk (PHE)	7	71	10.1
Andy Klimas (PHE)	7	62	8.9
Marc Emits (SPS)	7	54	7.7
Wayne Wessell (PHE)	7	58	7.6
Jim Metcalfe (SPS)	7	50	7.1
John MacInnis (SMC)	7	46	6.6
Tom Kent (SMC)	7	46	6.6
Art Bennett (PHE)	6	39	6.5

UC and PHE will meet head-on in Hart Home today at 1 p.m. for the third of their scheduled four meetings. The teams have split their games, UC taking the first, 64-49, PHE the second, 41-38.

In Group II, Meds A remained on top with a 31-27 win over Jr. SPS. Jr. Skule moved into second spot by edging Law A, 27-23. Viido Worang scored 10 for SPS while Frank Marotta also counted 10 for Law.

Pharmacy A gained a game in the pennant race in Group III as Vic split a pair. The druggists took Vic I, 35-28. Ivan Rempel of Vic was high man with 13 points. Ken Walker had 10 for the winners. The Scarlet and Gold bounced back to maul New, 54-19. Cuck Homer led the rout with 14 points while Ivan Rempel and Peter Braaten each potted 11.

HOCKEY

The UC-Vic race for the top spot in Group I is no longer the sole battle in that group. Upset victories have moved both PHE and Sr. SPS into definite contention for the third and final playoff berth.

UC I typified its feeble play by deflecting the puck into its own net for the only goal of the game to give Sr. SPS a 1-0 win. It was UC's first defeat of the season.

A second consecutive shutout performance by goalie Ron Belcher supported by a three-goal outburst gave PHE I a 3-0 win over St. Mike's A. The Hart House boys have now collected five points from three games to move to within one point of the third-place Irish. Hugh Lynn scored a pair for PHE, Pete Burwash added the other marker.

Trinity A won its sixth in a row with a 3-1 win over St. Mike's B. Paul Bates, Jim Edwards and Modris Eksteins counted for Trinity, John Gilbert for the Double Blue.

John Adams and Jim Robinson gave Dents A a 2-1 over Vic II. Gary Davidson scored for Bellmore's Boys. Tom Truesdale counted the only goal in Vic II's 1-0 win over St. Mike's B.

WATER POLO

PHE continued to win in Group I with a 7-2 win over Law. Larry Bell and Tom Muranyi each scored twice. Marv Mandelbaum and Mike Chapelle each had a pair in Sr. Skule's 4-2 victory over the hapless lawyers.

Other action saw Trinity B rub out SPS IV, 10-2, while Knox took Wycliffe, 5-3.

STUDENTS OF VARSITY

Every student can readily understand why millions of our fellow citizens are unnecessarily living in poverty; why most people are in debt up to their chins, why they are always burdened with high taxes.

Our private money manufacturers — our private bankers — are not directing the issuance of an adequate volume of money into activities that will supply the basic needs of all classes of citizens, and they are charging ten times as much for financing and public service projects as such financing is worth. This can be proven with facts and figures.

We have a dual public and private enterprise economy, and these dual activities must be financed on different bases. We must finance non-productive housing and public projects at an administrative cost which can be shown to be but a fraction of one percent per annum, and, of course, private enterprise must be financed with savings on a competitive basis. It remained for me to figure out how this can be done. This is new thinking, and nobody but nobody can find a flaw in it.

You arrange a meeting, and I will answer all your questions concerning economic problems. You are the coming leaders. You should know the answers.

Mervyn still tops scorers

Rookie centre Don Mervyn of Waterloo Warriors maintained his one-point lead in the Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League scoring race over the weekend. Mervyn scored one goal and picked up three assists to bring his total to 20 points, one more than Bobby Apps of McMaster Marlin.

Andre Boucher of Montreal Carabins made a big climb in the standings, getting three goals and an assist in two games. Boucher has 14 points to tie for third place with Stan Sharman of Waterloo. Sharman leads in goals with 11.

Varsity's Hank Monteith had two goals and two assists against Montreal to move into a tie for fifth place. The U of T rookie has 13 points.

INTERCOL BIRD-BELLES WIN; VOLLEY-BELLES THIRD

Varsity badminton girls became undisputed owners of the Intercollegiate Badminton Championship at O.A.C., Saturday. On the same weekend, the volleyball team made a bid for top billing at London but were only able to stagger into a third-place tie with McMaster.

At O.A.C., Varsity's "bad girls", a fierce foursome of Nancy Vincent, Judy Jarvis, Bonnie Elmsley, and Diana Mooser, repeated the tennis slaughter of the fall by winning first singles, second singles and doubles without one loss. This was a major upset of Queen's, holders of the championship for the last five years. The last time Varsity saw a 'blue ribbon' was 1958.

Nancy Vincent, a bird veteran and one of the top 'A' singles players in the country, had little difficulty, especially when supported in second singles play by Judy Jarvis, 1961 Canadian Junior Singles Champ.

In the doubles, it was a case of Abbott meeting Costello and instant teamwork. Veteran Bonnie Elmsley and freshman Diana Mooser coordinated their play to come out unscathed from the weekend play.

Western took the Intercollegiate Volleyball Championship. For the "London Lassies", it was their 11th win in as many years. O.A.C. took the runner-up spot with Toronto finishing a weak third.

Although the Varsity squad managed only two wins in five encounters, the girls made a good showing, considering the loss of many of last year's veterans.

Benson Building played host to teams from Western, Ryerson, York, and Laurentian Saturday in a Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Union Sports Day.

Toronto came out on top in badminton and squeaked past Western to win the basketball tournament. In archery a strong Western team ran up 1,942 points compared to Toronto's 1,849. Laurentian and Toronto exchanged ideas in swim techniques but no actual competition took place.

Varsity archers are making quite a name for themselves internationally. In the Division of Girls and Women's Sports Winter Intercollegiate Archery Tournament, Gail White, Juli Yamasaki, Janet Forsdike and Sheila Lithwick won the Class "B" competition with a team score of 5,946 points more than 400 points ahead of the field.

U of T placed second in Class "A" with 6,018, and second in Class D with 5,345 points. Individually, Gail White placed second in Class A with 564 points while teammate Jan Forsdike placed third with 554.

McManusmen travel to Stangtown

By PAUL HENDERSON

Memories of Tom Williamson's 43-point outburst will no doubt be in the minds of Varsity basketball Blues when they play Western Mustangs tonight in London.

But Blues paramount concern will be to cool down Williamson and come away with a victory. Statistics prove that if Williamson can be stopped, Western's attack will be stopped for he has netted 35 per cent of Mustangs' points.

Blues expect to have everyone except John O'Neill dressed for tonight's contest. Dave West will play despite a sore knee incurred in the game against Queen's last Saturday and Ed Bordas is ready after taking the week-end off to alleviate a heavy work-schedule.

With the loss of O'Neill through a leg injury, Varsity coach John McManus has been forced to use Arvo Neidre, but the latter's play has conduced more to committing fouls than scoring points. In view of Neidre's early fouls in the Queen's and McGill games, rookie Vlad Baranowicz saw more action and pleased McManus with his improved play. Baranowicz hooped 8 and 7 points respectively in the two contests.

While the play of Baranowicz is improving, that of Doug McKenzie has been disappointing. His 3.2 game average can be attributed to his failure to hit from the outside. If he were sinking two or three shots a game as in former years, the opposition defences would be drawn out, giving Blues an opportunity to penetrate. But McKenzie has not scored more than 6 points in any one game and has lost the position of starting guard to Bill Woloshyn.

Woloshyn came to Toronto law school from Western and is one of Blues' steady performers. Although he didn't according to McManus, score more than six points in an Intercollegiate contest before joining Blues, his game average is twice that number this season.

In league scoring, Williamson is again in front. The all-star guard has netted 171 points in seven games for a commendable 24.4 average, two points better than his winning rate of last year.

All-star centre Jerry Raphael of Waterloo Warriors currently holds down second spot by virtue of his average of 23.2 points per game. He finished second in 1962-63.

Perennial contender Dave West of Blues completes the dominating triumvirate. The all-star defender's mark of 23.0 exceeds his 20.6 average of last season when he was runner-up to Williamson.

Larry Ferguson of Queen's made the greatest advance among the scoring leaders over the weekend. Ferguson, an all-star forward for Western last year, moved from 17th to 9th position when he scored 28 points against Blues.

Under The Basket: Toronto Secondary School star, six-foot seven-inch Marv Morten of Oakwood C. I., is seriously considering enrolling at Western next year. Western coach John Metras has conferred with Morten.

BLUES WON'T BE NATIONAL PUCK CHAMPIONS

IF YOU HAVE YOUR BAGS packed for a trip to Kingston, March 13, to see Varsity hockey Blues play in the second national intercollegiate final, you can start unpacking them. The Blues won't be going to Kingston in mid-March. I'm not hinting that Blues will fold in the drive to the Queen's Cup, they very likely will win the Senior Intercollegiate League championship. But they still won't play in the national final at Kingston.

It just came to our attention yesterday that the U of T athletic directorate stated as early as last March that were Varsity Blues to win their league championship they would not be available for the post-season playoffs. This decision was based on the fact that Blues' league schedule is completed before the end of February and in order to participate in the national final, Blues would have to play two more weeks into March. As anyone can realize, March 13 and 14, the dates of the finals, are precariously close to final examinations.

When the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union decided last year to introduce national hockey and basketball championship tournaments in Kingston and Windsor, I wrote in this space that the organization of these tournaments was poor and it was doubtful if the finals would actually be staged. They were staged for the first time last March but the CIAU's organization has not improved.

The Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association (our Senior Intercollegiate League) voted last March that they would not entertain sending championship basketball and hockey teams to national tournaments later than March 6 and 7. This past November, the CIAU set the final dates for the tournaments at March 13 and 14 because the schedules of the Western and Maritime intercollegiate athletic associations will not be completed by March 6 and 7.

If the CIAU is so keen on furthering the cause of college sports on the national level it should have advised all four major conferences in Canada to have their regular schedules completed by the end of February. Then there would be no complications and the basketball and hockey tournaments would be truly "national."

The CIAU stated this past fall that all associations will arrange to have their 1965 schedules completed by the end of February. But this does little good for the 1964 finals.

THE CIAU HAS PROVIDED A WEAK FOUNDATION

THE OQAA ALSO AGREED last March that if any individual college wished to send their team, providing it wins the league title, to the national finals, this would be acceptable. Since then, Waterloo, McMaster, Montreal and Laval have advised that their teams will be represented if they win the OQAA championship. Toronto, Queen's and McGill ruled the proposed dates were too late for their students to be hopping around the country.

The same decisions apply for hockey and basketball and it is believed that Windsor and Western are willing to send their basketball teams. Windsor Lancers have no problem, of course, since the finals are staged in Windsor.

The complications are most likely to throw a block into the hockey finals because Varsity Blues are in a good position to win the OQAA championship. Should Blues win the title, the CIAU will be faced with a "national" final without what very likely is the strongest college team in Canada.

There has been growing emphasis and interest in Canadian college athletics on the national level in recent years. And the possibilities for inter-conference competition and relations have not yet begun to be explored. But if any attempts at national programs are to be made, they must be done sensibly and with strict organization. Complications such as those mentioned above must be avoided if national programs are to get any cooperation and following.

In its first attempts, the CIAU has not provided a strong foundation. There are tentative plans for national finals in other sports but if they are not handled better than the first examples they are bound to fail.

For one thing, it can not be expected that national finals will be successful when they are staged in a city where a local team is not participating. Last year, the basketball final in Windsor was a big success because Windsor Lancers were a participant. But the hockey final in Kingston was a financial disaster because it lacked local interest.

A more appealing plan would be to have one conference act as the host for the championship tournament and then stage the final on the home grounds of that conference's championship team. This would allow time for some advanced preparation and publicity and also provide the site of the final with an interested public. True, there would be complications in arranging accommodations, arena, etc. before the site of the final is determined, but this would be much better than staging a "national" final before a handful of spectators.

Blues could lose Marlins if Waterloo, McGill consent

By GORD BELLMORE

Varsity Hockey Blues have a good chance to move into sole possession of first place this week for the first time in the season.

Blues share the top spot with McMaster Marlins but Varsity faces a far easier task in the next few days than Marlins. Blues go on the road for a game against last-place Waterloo Warriors Thursday night and return to host fifth-place McGill Redmen on Friday in Toronto.

Meanwhile, Marlins make the long and tiring trip to Quebec, where they meet the two teams that are hot on Blues' and Marlins' tails Montreal Carabins and Laval Rouge et Or.

Carabins, who came from behind to upset Marlins, 7-6, in Dundas, Ontario Saturday, will have the advantage of home ice when they meet Marlins in Montreal Saturday. Moreover, it will be the second game in two nights for Marlins.

Montreal may have an extra incentive for the game. Carabins play tonight in Quebec City against Laval and a win will put them in a tie with Blues and Marlins for first place.

Laval is another tough proposition. Rouge et Or are only four points off the pace and trail Carabins by only two. Laval is particularly hard to beat at home, and both Carabins tonight and Marlins Friday will find their hosts a lot different than they are on the road.

For Blues, then, it will be a golden opportunity to put daylight between themselves and their nearest rivals, who will be knocking each other around in La Belle Province. Blues should pick up four points against the two weak teams while none of their three top rivals have as good a chance to accomplish the same feat.

For Blues' two games coming up, coach Joe Kane has been forced into more lineup changes because of the loss of Stu McNeil, with a back injury. The Monteith brothers, Hank and Steve, who appear to have found

Oops, we goofed!

Ask SAC to recognize frats

Four years after fraternities and sororities were shoved off the University of Toronto campus, the question of the fraternal organizations' status has been raised again.

In the dying minutes of an otherwise uneventful Students' Administrative Council meeting Wednesday night, Larry Ward (IV Vic) moved that the council recognize the Greek-letter organizations. His motion came after the point at which new business can be introduced, but after some discussion it was considered.

Recognition, including permission to participate in SAC-sponsored activities, student rates for advertising in SAC publications and listing in the Freshmen's handbook among student organizations, was withdrawn in 1959 following charges of discrimination levelled at the sororities.

Ward outlined his reasons for seeking the restoration, among them the support such organizations give to university activities and functions and their academic contribution.

He added that it was ridiculous that letters awarding prizes for ice sculpture and bed-pushing during the Winter Carnival weekend should have to be sent from the home of a Blue and White Society members because they could not be sent from the SAC office.

Clark Woodland (IV For) said that "since recognition was withdrawn because of conditions which existed at that time, we must have proof that these conditions no longer exist."

The motion caught council unawares, and after a few minutes of debate President Doug Ward (III Emm) moved to table the matter until a later meeting.

Asked later what he meant by "recognition", Larry Ward said he was concerned only with abolishing such situations as that he had described in regard to Winted Carnival.

Informed of the text of the 1960 Caput decision on the matter, which said in part:

"There is not at the present time, nor has there ever been in the past, any formal relationship between the University of Toronto and fraternities.... It follows that fraternities are in no sense recognized by the university as bodies entitled to any university privileges," Ward said: "This makes the issue a little stickier."

Civil rights group formed

The local committee to aid the Bloomington students decided last night to broaden its interest and to attempt to involve the other campus civil rights groups in a unified campaign.

These other groups have flooded the campus with publicity, appeals, for money, and a myriad of initials meaningless to most: CORE, SNCC, etc.

They feel the response generated by the visit of one of the Bloomington defendants has been overwhelming, and justifies concerted action now. Tom Morgan spoke to approximately 200 students yesterday afternoon who responded enthusiastically to his appeal for support.

Morgan asked his audience to demonstrate how much the academic community resists encroachment on civil liberties and academic freedom in particular. His answer was $110.35 in the collection that followed, the largest amount collected at any university so far.

Morgan, twice indicted along with two others last year under the 1951 Indiana Anti-Subversion Act, is on a continent-wide tour until the case comes to trial in Bloomington March 20. Toronto was his 49th stop.

An organizational meeting of the expanded committee, to be called the University of Toronto Committee on Civil Rights has been called for 1 p.m. Tuesday in Rm.

567 of Sidney Smith Hall. The Bloomington Committee organizers feel that the interest aroused among students by the Bloomington case can be mobilized to publicize key civil rights cases and provide support where it is needed.

In his address yesterday, Morgan predicted that if the Bloomington students are convicted, and it becomes necessary to carry the case to the United States Supreme Court, the two or three years before the final decision could see flurry of similar cases not only in the U.S., but in Canada as well, in which students and others will be prosecuted and persecuted for their beliefs.

Attack mental health query

A well-planned SAC staff-student symposium on mental health has been attacked by a student offended by a questionnaire he was asked to fill out in confidence as a prelude to the Feb. 22 symposium. (See letter and reply from SAC President Doug Ward, Page 4.)

Five hundred advance questionnaires were sent out to students picked at random in an effort to secure a cross-section of student opinion on the state of mental health facilities in the university and the individual faculties.

The first group of the questionnaires were mailed Tuesday. The student's letter of protest was received Wednesday morning.

"The questionnaire had been in preparation since the second week of January, so it definitely wasn't a last-minute effort," SAC Vice-President Mary Pat McMahon (III SMC) said last night.

"The questionnaire was a sociologically approved method of survey. Students were picked at random, but the method was completely licit for obtaining a statistical evaluation," she said.

Miss McMahon said the SAC arrangers had contacted and received valuable advice on how to arrange the questionnaire from consulting psychiatrists at Toronto Psychiatric Hospital; Dr. Marge-ry King, director of education and training for the Canadian Mental Health Association; and James Craig, a consultant on surveys and vice-president for Canadian Facts Limited.

The organizers had also talked with Paul Becker, organizer of last May's conference on student mental health at Queen's University. The upcoming SAC-sponsored symposium will be the first university conference to result from the lead given at the Queen's conference, a national symposium. Miss McMahon said.

Copies of the questionnaire have also been sent to all school and faculty deans, asking their opinion of existing or desirable facilities for counselling. Miss McMahon said the faculty questionnaires had been intended to serve as a gauge to show the differing attitudes between staff and students.

About 80 delegates, most of them non-professionals, will attend the symposium.

Credit union opened to all students

The Campus Co-operative voted almost unanimously Wednesday to allow university students who are not Co-op members to open accounts in the Campus Co-op Credit Union immediately. There is no initial charge.

At its semi-annual general meeting in Hart House, the Co-op membership voted to recognize: (1) students approved by the Co-op board of directors and (2) alumni of the Co-op as "associate members" of the Co-op — in effect credit union members.

The charter for the credit union, granted by the provincial government last year, left undefined what it termed "associate members" of the credit union.

The Co-op's decision will allow alumni to join, since they may help the directorship of the credit union because Directors must be 21 years of age or older.

The increased membership will increase assets which may be used in turn by a greater number of students at interest rates lower than those charged by most banks. The credit union rate is almost two per cent below that charged by commercial banks. Its interest on deposits is four per cent.

The associate members will be allowed to attend general meetings of the Co-op and enter into discussion. They could determine how they would like to see the credit union's funds used, and could speak against a Co-op motion to borrow funds from the union. They will not have a vote.

Board past-president Howard Staats said he expected assets to reach the $100,000 mark within two years, and felt the credit union would have office facilities and personnel independent of the Co-op by the end of this year.

The credit union is not by charter a part or holding of the Co-op. The union's policy cannot be determined by the Co-op's directorate.

Present office facilities for the credit union are located in the Co-op's offices at 395 Huron St. Hours for banking will be of service to students. They are from 9 a. m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The credit union has not yet received chequing privileges. It has applied for them. It has also applied for membership in the Ontario Co-operative Credit Society.

Summer grants for SGS

A summer grant of up to $500 will be made to qualified graduate students who plan to study this summer, J. R. McCarthy, secretary of the Ontario government advisory committee on university affairs said in an interview Wednesday. Mr. McCarthy said all graduate students who had received the $1,500 Ontario government scholarships for the 1963-64 academic term and students going into graduate work next year would qualify for the summer grant.

More formal rules will apply to those students applying for grants for the 1964-65 year, Ernest Sirluck, associate dean of the graduate school, said.

Because these rules have not yet been made final, applications will not be accepted until next week at the earliest.

Students who qualify for admission to graduate work will also qualify for both the summer and 1964-65 awards.

Regulations governing the registration and attendance of students receiving the summer grants are not yet available.

What's bugging John Osborne?

What is John Osborne angry about?

This was the subject of a lecture delivered Wednesday evening by Dennis Lee, a Victoria College lecturer, as part of the SCM lecture series. He spoke on two British modern playwrights, Arnold Wesker and John Osborne. Wesker wrote Roots, The Kitchen and Chips With Everything, and now is involved in a project called Centre '62 for the furtherance and enrichment of the arts.

John Osborne wrote, among other things, Look Back in Anger which was produced at Hart House last week.

Look Back in Anger, said
Mr. Lee, "exploded on English culture." He described its effect as a scandal to the older generation and a gospel to the younger.

It crystallized the discontentment of youth with national life, and established the conviction that humane things should be said on the stage.

Mr. Lee went on to relate that the state of British theatre before the production of this play in 1956 had been a limbo for artists. One of three things was produced, he continued: a revival of a classic; a drawing room comedy; or a melodrama.

With this basis, Lee could explain the revolutionary aspect of Osborne's and Wes-ker's writing.

By JOAN FERGUSON

First he established the cause of their anger. The main problem, he explained, was the state of national discontent in the 50s.

England was undergoing the postwar trauma of slipping from a first-to a second-level nation; of losing the Empire; of adjusting a social system that was a century out of date and being economically out-stripped by countries that they had laid flat on their backs during the war.

And the worst situation for Wesker, Osborne and the youth of England was contending with the fact that all the power was in the hands of middle-aged men interested in preserving the status quo.

So, Mr. Lee said, both Wesker and Osborne write about society. Their characters are coping with insoluble problems. They lash out against their world with blistering attacks.

Mr. Lee explained the difference between these two social prophets. Osborne takes a negative approach. He wants to make people feel.
Wesker believes that the artist could quite conceivably be dispensed with, and that he must therefore act positively.
This explains his work with Centre '62.

These two artists, Mr. Lee maintained, have created the start of a dramatic revolution that might have no parallel outside Elizabethan England. What will happen now he could not surmise.
"They may quit, go under, or they may achieve the highest values of their hearts."

JFK called Communist and traitor

"With the campaigns of hate being carried on in the United States today, critical analysis is something the citizen needs as never before," said Bruce Felknor at New College Wednesday.

Speaking on the topic "The Politics of Hate," Mr. Felknor examined the "climate of hate" in the United States in light of President Kennedy's assassination.

He spoke of the intensive campaigns being waged by the radical right against Communists or their sympathizers.

He said Kennedy was being called a Communist, a Negro-lover, a traitor and more. Rightists even tried to discredit him with a marriage and divorce before he married Jackie.

Felknor explained: "The constant, incessant rantings against a conspiracy can react on people and something happens."

"A Negro is lynched. An Evers is shot. A president is assassinated."

Mr. Felknor attributed the hate campaigns between the radical right and left to a lack of communication between the two. This leads to mistrust, hostility and finally hate, he felt.

"They send their literature to the people in the middle to convert them."

"The bulk of the expression of hate comes from the radical right," he said.
"There are different reasons for accepting hate ideas."

They don't even have to be very convincing."

He called American society one curiously "prone to hate."

Most of the promotion of hate is carried on through the mass communication media. "There's scarcely a first-class city that doesn't have at least one of about eight radio programs advanced by radical groups," he said.

"They conduct their campaigns under the guise of education. . . You get the Southerner scared enough of being dominated by the Negro, and show him a Negro working for equality and I'll show you a lynching."

Mr. Felknor is executive director of the Fair Campaign Practices Committee, a group striving to educate the public about commonly used unfair campaign tactics.

Subversive sing-songs at Hart House

"The sing-songs at Hart House seem harmless enough on the surface," said Bob McCulloch, leader of the singalongs, "but there is seething social comment beneath the surface of many of the lyrics."

The sing songs take place every Monday and Friday between 1 and 1 p.m. in the east common room of Hart House.

"We try to soften them up with innocent songs," he explained, "things like 'Trans-Atlantic Squadron' or 'Three Jolly Coachmen'. Then we hit them with the really subtle material, like 'Old MacDonald had a Farm' (bestiality), 'Shine On, Harvest Moon' (voyeurism), and the really wide-open one, 'Home on the Range' (you know how that third line goes).

"Seriously, though," he said, "the sing-songs are a lot of fun, and a pretty enjoyable way to while away

TO PICKET

The CUCND plans to picket the American Consulate Monday to protest the arrest of seven peace walkers in Albany, Ga. Two of them were Canadians, one from Sir George Williams University in Montreal.

The demonstration will be similar to one held in Montreal Wednesday to express sympathy with the Quebec-to-Cuba marchers. They were arrested Monday for picketing the Turner Air Force Base near Albany.

Claiming the Albany police acted unconstitutionally in jailing the walkers, the CUCND demonstrators will request recognition of the students' right to freedom of speech.

The demonstration will take place at 4:30 p.m. Monday outside the American Consulate at 360 University Ave.

SAC SHORTS

At a short and uneventful meeting Wednesday night the Students' Administrative Council:

- Approved a Varsity publication schedule of eight pages Monday, eight pages Wednesday, and 16 pages Friday regardless of advertising revenue;

- Heard notice of a motion to be made at the next meeting which would appoint two vice-presidents to the council executive, in place of the present one;

- Heard a report that fares on the second SAC-sponsored BOAC charter flight to Europe may have to be raised $50-55 in the face of 26 unsold seats.

The motion to add a second vice-president is a constitutional change, and as such requires the approval of the board of governors. Council President Doug Ward (III Emm) said that this could be obtained without affecting the negotiations presently underway about the relation between the board and council.

On the night of Jan. 25 a photographer from the McMaster Silhouette took a picture of a wrecked car on Highway 8. There was a dead woman in the car.

An Ontario Provincial Police constable seized the film, after trying to seize the camera.

The McMaster board of publications threatened court action against the OPP. The photographer, Pat Calway, wrote a letter of protest to Attorney-General Fred Cass.

Reg Gisborn, member of the provincial legislature for Wentworth East, raised the issue in the legislature. Mr. Cass apologized for the action of the OPP.

Yesterday the film was returned to Calway, and was developed in the presence of a member of the OPP identification branch. The film was blank.

Ask Rochdale not be college

The 14-member academic council studying the proposed Rochdale College of the Campus Co-operative has advised that the institution not be called a college, and that it not be a part of the university.

In a report to the Co-op Wednesday night, the council—composed of professors from most faculties—advised the Co-op to call the new residence a house or hall.

The academic council's recommendation would make Rochdale a residence only, enjoying no college power, other than being exempt from municipal taxes. The Co-op must presently pay tax on its houses.

The council did endorse the existing charter to incorporate Rochdale, even if not as a degree-granting college.

The council advised the Co-op to continue its self-disciplinary policy. "For 27 years discipline has been left up to the members of the Co-op. Ownership, operation and self-discipline should remain with the Co-op members," the report stated.

By not making Rochdale a part of the university, the council's report leaves the Co-op free to rephrase a clause specifying membership requirements for Rochdale. Presently, only U of T and Osgoode students are allowed Co-op membership. Ryerson students, among others, could be allowed membership within the terms of the charter.

The charter to establish Rochdale will be introduced this year as a private member's bill in the Ontario Legislature.

STUDENTS OF VARSITY

If Karl Marx had understood the nature and purpose of money, he would have realized that financialism was the dominant force that controlled both management and labour and that only a revolution in thinking was needed in solving management-labor problems.

The ultimate solution to capitalist-communist cleavage is to "sell" the communists on, and to ourselves adopt a system of private enterprise in the actual production of useful goods and in rendering useful services, but which reserves to government the financing of public enterprise projects, all of which are supposed to serve us at cost, and of average utility housing, none of which is any part of our private production "capital" equipment.

This system will end high cost public debt, high cost housing, and high taxation. For the first time in history national governments will have financial control of the development of private enterprise economies. It will be acceptable to all nations. Let Canada demonstrate to a confused and fearful world how to put first things first in national development. Let me explain this simple system to you — students of Varsity — fully, and in detail.

the frat issue

The old problem of fraternities and the university has reappeared.

At the last Students' Administrative Council meeting, Larry Ward put a motion on the floor asking that University of Toronto fraternities be recognized by the SAC.

Oct. 15, 1959, the SAC withdrew recognition of the fraternal organizations and cut off any privileges enjoyed by such organizations.

The Caput backed up this stand with stronger words four months later when it ruled that fraternities never had and, henceforth, would not have any formal relationship with the university. It also ruled that fraternities were in no sense entitled to any university privileges.

The Caput added that if a student membership in any club or group should be "deemed inimical to the interest of the university or the academic welfare of the student, such membership may be forbidden by the Caput."

In its ruling, the Caput said it viewed membership in a fraternity in the same light as membership in any other organization outside the university; and because of this it could make no attempt to regulate the policies or internal regulations of fraternities.

Ward proposed his motion in the dying minutes of the meeting. He admitted last night he knew nothing about the previous rulings, and he was not sure what "recognition" would involve.

It should be obvious that his motion was hasty and poorly thought out — if it was thought out at all.

In view of the decisions reached four years ago, and considering the fact that we have seen no manifestations of changes in the policies of the fraternities, Ward's proposal has little merit. It is merely a contentious issue which will survive as long as fraternities exist.

We expect some persons will revive the old argument that fraternities should be recognized so that they can be controlled. The basis of this argument is that if fraternities are brought under the legislative eye of the university, their shortcomings can be legislated away.

Fraternities, by their nature and policies, do not belong in an academic community. Their faults include discrimination — either constitutional or tacit — on the basis of race, color or creed, the filing of essays that are rewritten year after year and the perpetuation of a pseudo-collegiate attitude which is at odds with the academic purpose of the university.

If persons wish to join such organizations it is unfortunate, but it is their business. It is not the business of the university or the SAC to tell these organizations how they should act.

But when fraternities want to become a part of the university, a different question is involved. They have no place in the university community.

The one legitimate point Ward did back into was the clandestine use the SAC makes of fraternities. He pointed out that fraternities are used for parties after SAC functions and that they participate in the ice sculpture contest.

Ward's point was that since the SAC uses the fraternities in such a manner, the fraternities should receive recognition. While we cannot agree with his conclusion, we do agree that Ward does point out an inconsistency.

But we would suggest that under the circumstances the correct course of action would be for the SAC to cease using the fraternities for such activities.

The fraternity question was settled four years ago, after months of discussion and deliberation. We hope this decision will not be reversed by a motion conceived in such obvious haste.

Dr. Pavlov rings a bell

by MURRAY SOUPCOFF

Dr. Robertson Pavlov, well-known Toronto psychologist, today announced the preliminary findings of an experiment carried out in an unnamed University of Toronto residential college. Dr. Pavlov admitted that the experiment, an attempt to study the use of bells in conditioning reflexes, was originally intended for white mice but was instead carried out in the residential college because of the unmistakable similarity in the character of many of its students. He would not elaborate.

Dr. Pavlov told The Varsity that he began his study one month ago. At that time he had the college bell rung 11 times at 11:30 each night. He immediately noticed two typical responses: by the eleventh ring, women, members of a sex previously thought extinct in the college, could be seen leaving the rooms of many residents. In addition, as a delayed response, other women could be seen later in the evening leaving the building by way of the fire escapes. Dr. Pavlov repeated this bell ringing experiment week after week and to his amazement recorded these very same results.

He also noticed some other responses. Those students who liked to go to bed early — and alone — were awakened by the bell. Other students responded by rushing to answer the telephone. Finally they all responded by demanding that the bell be silenced.

As a result a smaller bell was installed. The large bell was now rung twice only and the small one once at 11:30 p.m. Two phenomena persisted. Women were still leaving the rooms of residents at 11:30 and other women were still using the fire escapes later on in the evening. Dr. Pavlov was still convinced. In the true tradition of scientific scepticism he had threads coated with sealing wax affixed across the bottoms of the college's six fire doors. The threads were soon broken. Triumphant, Dr. Pavlov concluded that certain occupants of the college had been conditioned to respond in a predictable manner to the sound of a bell and that as the conditioning became more engrained the stimuli could be reduced.

Unfortunately, Dr. Pavlov told The Varsity, even though the experiment has been discontinued and the bells dismantled, women are still leaving by way of the fire escape.

Smoke your life away

By VLADIMIR HACHINSKI

Why should we not surround ourselves in clouds of smoky sophistication? Why should we deprive ourselves of those puffing pleasures? Why should we give up the consolation of our frustrations and the fulfiller of our idle moments? Death and disease are invoked as deterrents, but have not people been ill and dying for centuries?

Like any other sport, smoking provides risk as well as diversion and pleasure. When skiing downhill, or when you go downhill chronologically, your risks rise. But a "good sport" does not give up when the chips are down. In a game of football, the injury usually comes suddenly and can be repaired, whereas the injuries of smoking are insidious, irreparable and longlasting—eternity. In any case, man is entitled to his own way of life and his forms of amusement. And if he is free to choose the manner in which he desires to live, why should he not be free to have some say in the form of his death? Few would doubt that with smoking one can increase one's chances for a modern death such as by lung cancer.

Several attempts have been made to diminish the harmfulness of smoking. Cigarette companies tried to improve their filters, but without much success, for most filters "let everything through except the flavor." The next attempt was aimed at dwarf-size cigarettes rather than king-size ones to appease the smokers' conscience by making him believe that the smaller the cigarette, the less risk of lung cancer.

A third attempt came from Bulgarian scientists who have tried to grow grafted tobacco. Tobacco leaves are grafted on the tomato plants so that there will be no roots in which to synthesize the tobacco alkaloids. This type of tobacco contains a considerable amount of atropine and other medicinals. The proponents of this type of tobacco claim that they can reverse the adverse effect of smoking; time may reverse their stand.

So, considering all this, why not smoke your life away?

LETTERS

Open letter to Doug Ward

Recently I received a letter and questionnaire from the SAC that indicated I had been chosen, "along with about 400 others", to answer questions about my state of mental health. Since I deposited the questionnaire in its proper place, the garbage can, I am unable to return it to the SAC.

One of the current problems centres around the individual, and his ability to attain self-identity in a conforming world. Because of the importance of this problem, it is regrettable that a questionnaire that attempts to arrive at a cross-section sample that, in turn, supposedly represents "all students of the university", could be circulated with any degree of sincerity.

The questions asked are highly personal. But how can you, Mr. Ward, or indeed anyone, arrive at conclusions about personal problems when you are "not concerned with individual replies, but only with the representative percentages which result from the total replies considered collectively?" It is this kind of spurious and devastating thought that is reducing humanity to categorized I.B.M. personalities. When such "public opinion" surveys attempt to regulate the sale of deodorants or toilet paper, they are relatively harmless. When they attempt to investigate the elements of individual personality, they are ironic to a dangerous extreme.

It would be advisable that you focus your symposium on the questionnaire, itself, and investigate it as the epitome of a serious social disease. Perhaps I am taking the symposium's intentions too seriously. It is possible that it is merely an intellectual play-phen.

D. M. Thompson III U. C.

Ward's reply

Dear Mr. Thompson

You suggest that you are taking the intentions of the symposium too seriously. In fact, you have misunderstood the purpose of the questionnaire.

In your mind, the completed survey because of its generality can only add to the forces of depersonalization upon the life of the student. On the contrary, we are asking for student assistance in completing these questionnaires in order that when the issue of student mental health is seriously discussed at the symposium, we will have in our possession up-to-date statistics on the pressures on Toronto students. Thus we shall be able to deal with what is needed and what is possible on our campus, in terms of such health facilities.

The first national conference on student mental health in North America was held in Kingston, Ontario, last year. Toronto is the first university to follow the initiative of this conference. The questionnaire has been drawn up in full consultation with psychiatrists at the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital and the completed questionnaires that we have received to date testify that the students are concerned and are willing to help.

A life of dependence

It is difficult to imagine the frustration which must engulf the young crippled adult, equipped with mental capabilities, but lacking the physical means to implement his normal ambitions, as he faces an uncertain future. This is a frustration born of the realization that a life of dependence lies ahead despite a willingness to strive and to compete in a word that is necessarily slanted towards the able-bodied. It is hard to reconcile this realization with hope and pride.

Unfortunately, hundreds of handicapped young adults who find themselves in this position in Ontario to-day have little choice but to turn to sheltered workshops for employment. I say "unfortunately", not because I feel that the workshops are failing to fulfill their purpose, but rather because I feel they will never be able to fully satisfy the severely handicapped person who possesses intelligence, but lacks manual dexterity and clear speech.

The accompanying article, written by David Freeman, a 19-year old cerebral palsy victim, reflects an angry frustration which is by no means typical of workshop patients, but which serves to highlight the pressing need for facilities to help others like him escape the web of public apathy in which they are caught.

By STUART McLEOD

In the interests of accuracy, it should be pointed out that of the thousands of cerebral palsy victims in Ontario, very few of the slightly handicapped ever find it necessary to turn to a sheltered workshop. Through childhood, the Ontario Society for Crippled Children provides therapy, nursing care and education sufficient to rehabilitate those with minimum requirements for our competitive society. In fact many children, suffering from nothing more than a slightly clawed hand or an unsteady gait are able to attend normal academic or vocational schools without receiving any special considerations. Others develop skills at Variety Village or at one of the numerous rehabilitation centres throughout the province.

By the age of 19, approximately 30 percent of all C. P.'s have good prospects of earning an independent livelihood. Another 35 percent of C. P. victims are also mentally retarded and being thus doubly handicapped are well off in a sheltered workshop. The most pressing problem is that facing the intermediate 35 percent who are stranded in a limbo between total disability and total rehabilitation. It is these people who deserve the immediate attention of the Department of Health and Welfare. For the present they must accept the opportunity for employment at a sheltered workshop.

Naturally, the aim of the workshop is not, nor can it ever be to provide its employees with a salary sufficient to permit independence. The staff members are therapists, not businessmen.

In fact, the workshop is heavily subsidized by the United Appeal and by governmental grants and without this aid, the operation would be impossible.

The workshop value lies in the opportunity provided for physical, occupational and speech therapy and in the social contact between workers. The people whom the workshop serves are for the most part unable to compete in any phase of industrial or business activity. Certainly a number of these people have average intelligence or better, but without manual dexterity their future is extremely limited.

Indeed it seems highly unlikely that many workshop employees can ever become self-supporting as there are few competitive positions which they can handle. Certainly their present salaries are meagre, but one must not ignore the fact that these people are being given a government pension of 65 dollars a month under the Disabled Persons Act.

Some insight into the seriousness of the present situation may be gained by looking at a representative group of handicapped children, those at Bloorview Home and School (the home for incurable children). Patients here (25 girls and 25 boys mostly orphaned and all handicapped, are given a home and schooling up to the age of 17. At 17 these children are faced with two alternatives; they may be fortunate enough to return home where they can be supported by their parents or they may have no choice but to enter a hospital for the chronically ill such as Queen Elizabeth, Runnymede or Riverdale. Here at the age of 17 they are placed among aged and dying patients. Their education is ended although their prospects of living to 50 or 60 are good. The most fortunate Bloorview patients have little to look forward to but a life of dependence very few could ever find work outside — a sheltered workshop.

Obviously there is a desperate need for a residence to serve crippled adults lacking the means for self-support a place where they can gain — some independence and lead relatively normal lives removed from a hospital environment. This project would have to embody some type of workshop or industrial plant where the residents could work off token payment for their support. A normal rent could be paid from the monthly pension. Only facilities of this kind can solve the serious dilemma facing the young, severely handicapped adult with no hope of self-support and no home to turn to. Unfortunately, the number of people in this position is small compared to the numbers requiring other facilities financed by the Department of Health and Welfare. (C. Ps are outnumbered more than 50 to 1 by the mentally ill.) Consequently this minority will undoubtedly suffer for a while yet although I am sure a residence of the type mentioned is forthcoming.

In the meantime, sheltered workshops must continue to fill part of the void although they can never offer security to those who live in fear of being forced into a hospital for the chronically ill.

Cerebral palsy victims work for peanuts

By DAVID FREEMAN

Four days a week, a man gets up in the morning, has breakfast and goes to a sheltered workshop. There he is seated at a long table with some of his fellow workers and given a bag of blocks to sand. These blocks are rectangles, triangles and almost every geometrical shape you can imagine. He sands these blocks by rubbing them over sheets of rough and fine sandpaper that are tacked down to the table before him or by rubbing the sandpaper over the blocks. For this work he will be paid seventy-five cents — if he's lucky. Or, maybe he is weaving a rug on a wooden loom. If so, it will be a couple of months before he will be paid for this project. Or, he may have been chosen to do piece work which consists of weighing bolts and nuts on a scale, putting bolts, nuts, screws and washers in a bag, assembling lighting equipment for a car and the making up and folding of boxes for oysters and shoes.

All this work is done by contract and, since those in charge have jumped at the deal that was offered, the worker will be paid the sum of $4.00 for two weeks work and, occasionally, more. Along with that, he will be patted on the back and told what a great job he's doing. And the men who "donate" the work come by almost every day to see that the workshop is doing well. If not, they "donate" some more work. What would the workshop ever do without them? As a result, the cerebral palsy (C. P.) victim must only work for small wages but he must also feel privileged to work for them as well!

A few months ago, I had the displeasure of working in a cerebral palsy workshop like the one I have just described. Right here, I am supposed to tell you how wonderful it was and how grateful I am for being sent there. Very much to the contrary; I found the whole experience very discouraging and the last thing I am is grateful for being sent there. It is very distressing indeed to be doomed to push blocks across sandpaper for a couple of dollars for the rest of your life when you are sure that fate meant for something better than this. It is even more distressing to find that you are supposed to consider yourself privileged to be doing so. And they tell us it's training - training for what? Surely any seven year old child can do this!

Speaking at a conference in Quebec, Dr. Keith S. Armstrong, Executive Director for the Canadian Rehabilitation Council for the Disabled, pointed out that a large number of handicapped are content to live within their disabilities. The workshop I attended encouraged this. It had no goal whatsoever that I could see other than being "just some place for us to go," which is the poorest excuse for inefficiency I ever heard of! When a client is sent there, he can't help but feel that the world has given up on him and that he has been put there just to be gotten out of the way of progress. Because of this, he abandons all hope and, in time, he may become worse than he was when he went in. He may even, become a little mentally retarded. It can happen as I have seen traces of it when I worked in a shop of this type. And, when a worker is mentally retarded, to my knowledge, it doesn't help to give a slow mind a slow job.

"Money isn't everything." Oh, how often have I heard that statement in the last few months! And how often have I heard it from some character sitting behind a great big desk with a steady job! Oh yes, that small sentence rolls off the tongue mighty easily when you don't have to depend on the government or a charity for a living. Just once, I would like to see this type of individual in our place sanding blocks and weaving rugs for a puny wage such as seventy-five cents every two weeks.

There is a case in the workshop where a man used to work for the city for $150 every two weeks and now, at the workshop, the highest that he has ever received is $4.00. This is a case where whoever was in charge was exceedingly careless in placing this man in employment. They didn't take the time nor the patience to consider what such a comedown would do to his ego.

Once I heard an authority at the workshop say that they paid us to make us independent. This is utterly ridiculous! How much independence can thirty-five cents buy! Yes, that was my cheque for two weeks, thirty-five cents! Now, let's not get financial about this. This does not make anyone independent. If anyone reading this saw that amount marked on his pay cheque, he would be ready to throw in the towel.

What we cerebral palsy victims needs is something that takes a little brain power and skill to make us feel that we are really doing our part. But oh no, apparently some poor misguided souls think that if you give a C.P. victim a bag of blocks to sand or some weaving to do and take time out to smile at him once or twice during the day, it will keep him happy. This kind of thinking is due to the public's lack of information on the subject. The public gets its ideas from people who know about C.P., but not from the people who have it; people who draw a barrier between themselves and the victim, putting him on a lower caliber of intellect than he actually is. If anyone ever took the time to ask the victim himself for an opinion on these things, I assure you, the story would be quite different. But, because of this attitude, everybody thinks we don't know enough to have opinions.

I admit those who are severely afflicted would find normal work impossible and I also admit that some are mentally retarded. But what about those of us who are only slightly afflicted with cerebral palsy? Once I heard of a C.P. victim who will soon be graduating from university majoring in psychology. Is all that training going to be wasted in a workshop? I have a friend who will be graduating from high school in a couple of years. What's waiting for him? A workshop, of course.

Why? Because the instant cerebral palsy is mentioned people immediately think of mental retardation and they can't wait to shove him into a workshop or an institution and forget him! Maybe they will look in on him sympathetically once in a while to show that they remember he's still alive. Of course, this makes him feel like a monkey in a zoo, but this doesn't matter, he isn't supposed to know enough to have feelings!

I have been thinking a great deal about workshops and how they should be operated. Firstly, I think that the cerebral palsy victims should be divided into two groups — physically disabled and mentally retarded. The doctor would determine to what extent he was physically handicapped and then a psychologist would evaluate his mental capacity. The system would work this way; the physically handicapped would go to the brain work of the project and the mentally retarded would do the mechanical end of it. Those who were too severely handicapped would be content with some both mentally and physically simple project. Secondly, the staff would consist of a doctor, social worker or psychologist, physiotherapists and a supervisor. The physiotherapists would always be ready to help but they would leave the activities in charge of the supervisor and the clients. I suggest that a member of the staff like the supervisor should also have a disability. I would like to see the word "Patients" removed and the word "Employees" substituted on all signs, boxes and so forth. Special training groups should be arranged to develop those with special talents. The workshop should set a certain goal each year to train a specific number of clients and that goal should get higher every year.

These are only a few suggestions. I don't think it can be this way for the present as I don't know that much about the financing of a project like this. I hope I have started clouds gathering for a few brainstormers.

Tales from the Quarter

By LARRY GARBER

"Look," said Cheryl one evening, wearing a dark dress high in the breast and long in the leg, "lets none of us ever leave each other. We're perfect together, no argument, no sweat. Lets not lose it." A week later she was gone and I never saw her again, but that night we were going to the Opera to see the new ballet Daphnis and Chloe, sets and costumes by Chagall. We took the eight franc seat where you saw half the stage for half the money; the right hand side of the ballet was beautiful.

Afterwards, we strolled down the Avenue de L'Opera; the studied lights of the street were brilliant but muted, with the dark shape of the Hotel Louvre high in the distance. "What a perfect night," said Cheryl, laboring for a perfect night. I let it pass, I was thirsty, so we turned into Rue Danjou for a few beers at harry's new york bar. The place is more myth than elegance; the tables are thick, low and bare, and on the walls there are plaques and pennants right out of Princeton forty years ago. Directly opposite the cash register is hung a carefully framed picture of Hemingway in beard and suit, pointing to a huge mounted fish.

The beer in harry's is reasonably cheap, considering the company. We sat by the back wall and talked about the Loire Valley.

"Coming back to Paris is so much prettier than living there at once," said Cheryl. For a girl who let herself be used like a bandage, she was very slow about some things.

There was some fast conversation beside us. Kate T., celebrity, wit, author and songstress, was seated a table away with a young man some years younger than herself; he was toothy and slick and somewhat large in the forehead.

Slick: "Kate Kate, you look damn beautiful, you know that sweetheart."

Kate: "Thank you darling boy."

Slick: "Every head snapped back to-night, no kidding. Kate, you're once in a lifetime."

Kate: "I'm feeling lovely already."

Slick: "So what do we do now?"

Kate: "I'm going to bed, bucko."

Slick: "Alone? or is that an invitation?"

Kate: "Without benefit of clergy or animal, honey."

Slick: "Aww. And here I thought I'd make you . . . comfortable."

Kate: "No bucko, there's no Santa Claus to-night."

Slick: "Why not, Kate. We're adults."

Kate: "I'm adult entertainment, sweetly, but you're still afternoon matinee."

Slick: "Okay Kate. I'll come over to-morrow noon for lunch."

Kate: "Bring a bib, bucko."

Slick: "You're absolutely great Kate, know that?"

Kate: "But remember, honey, I'm the daylight saving girl: always an hour behind."

Slick: "I'll set my clock."

Afterwards, Cheryl and I walked back to the Quarter. There is no use describing Paris at night; it has a lot of lights and some water, and it smells like an old shower room. But its as proud as an aging actress admiring her daguerreotypes.

"I mean it," said Cheryl when we were safe in the Cafe Tournon, "if we just stay together and laugh like we did on the trip. . ." Later that night, everyone came in. And in a week most of them were gone and new ones took their place. Cheryl went to Edinburgh; I was to meet her there somehow, but I didn't. One hears things, and later it was told that she had been arrested on a morals charge, convicted and deported from Scotland. Bonnie went to Strasbourg owing me money and that was forever too. The others were more or less around, but they drifted slowly away from the Quarter by stages, Emmanuel the Spanish, Stephen U., Anne the Pregnant, Nate the Accordion. After awhile it was embarrassing to run into them, as if we had been a part of some shameful conspiracy and were ashamed.

But that night no one was ashamed and we were still thick in the conspiracy. We sat grouped around Jules the Seducer; he was attempting a young scottish girl fresh from Tayport, and Cheryl who had been one of his earlier victims wanted to watch. Jules the Seducer must be explained. He was tall and curly headed, with a slightly broken roman nose and a clever hunch to his shoulder; he played guitar in a little cafe in the Rue Mazarine when everyone else had to play in the streets, and his hotel room was rent-free. The amazing thing was that he was not an interesting person; he was dull, quiet and without an inkling of expression. Someone once said that he was the dullest schizophrenic alive, because both sides of his personality were exactly the same. "You never believe him," said Cheryl, "no matter what he says, but after a while it doesn't matter. He uses every cliché known to man, you hear them all but it's his eyes that get you in the end. He stares you down with them, like a stinking Svengali; its almost funny."

Jules the Seducer had trapped the scottish girl in a corner (where he could watch the mirror) and was unloading a barrage of clichés like a bombardier flying low over Kim Novak. He wanted to take her into the country for a weekend.

Jules: "Son my father used to say, he always called me Son, stay close to Nature and you'll never go wrong."

Girl: "I suppose thats true."

Jules: "Son, he used to say, take a friend; you'll never go wrong with a friend in the country."

Girl: "Oh."

Jules: Make friends Jules, he said. . . sometimes he called me Jules bless him . . . a good friend in the country, close to Nature, is a wonderful thing And-you know something Catherine, I think I've found her and I don't mind having my friends hear it."

Girl: "I'll go, I'll go."

I could only stand this so long, then we left quickly and walked all the way to the Arc de triomphe. There, we witnessed a real return to Nature: two Italians were trying to urinate on the eternal flame. It was a refreshing sight, considering.

Young poets

Canadian poets are dull

By DWIGHT WALDO

POETRY 64, John Robert Colombo & Jacques Godbout, editors; Ryerson Press/Les Editions du Jour. Cloth, $4.00. Paper $2.00.

Despite the genius of Irving Layton and the achievements of Cohen, Avison, Purdy, Nowlan and others, young Canadian poets still suffer from our national virtue of dullness—a depressing conclusion to draw from a book that claims to contain "the most interesting of the young unpublished poets writing in Canada today."

John Robert Colombo and Jacques Godbout have chosen ten poems each by ten English-Canadian and six French-Canadian poets under thirty to make up Poetry 64, successor to Poetry 62. Probably it's a good idea to put Canadian poetry in the two languages side by side to see what conclusions can be drawn, and certainly readers will now have an unusual opportunity to assess the quality of some young Canadian poets without having to wade through countless literary magazines.

To an extent, influences in this book can be plotted geographically. Among the Tish-ites from Vancouver it's the new American poetry, chiefly Robert Creeley and Charles Olson, with the people from Montreal where Tish is a dirty word, it's Irving Layton. Harder to pin down this way is Gwen MacEwen, the most challenging of the ten. Her work is imaginative and unique, sometimes bizarre, with a rhythmic and intellectual intensity that only one of the other poets achieves. Besides being "musical" in the usual sense, her poems resemble music in their abstraction, their recurring themes and chanting rhythms. MacEwen stands at a distance from her emotions and conceptualizes them, as in the two breakfast poems where the metaphor of life as a meal is explored. But though this approach is successful in a tight poem like "The House", it produces emotional sterility in "For Alick MacEwen" or the poems where sex is intellectualized:

seeds of your body, mid skull and foot be fountains be fishes, be sperm to complete the sea of your sister, for I am amid the even and the eden and the black witch-hat at my pelvis bedarks me; at noon and at midnight holy ghosts roll between us.

John Newlove is the other poet whose lines remain in the memory. Like MacEwen he has rhythm and surprise and like her his best poems are a ceremony of wonder, transcending the "reality" of some of the other poets. His compact rhythms and broken-up lines owe much to Creeley, but Newlove's intelligence and honest compassion are his own; and his poems are so unified that it is pointless to break them up for quotation, so this one is in full:

Students are a bunch of nuts

by JIM DINGLE

The Student in the Age of Anxiety, by Ferdynand Zweig. Heinemann, London, 1963.

A British sociologist, Dr. Ferdynand Zweig, has recently published the results of his survey of student attitudes in England, endeavouring to clarify the differences between the "Oxbridge" and "Redbrick" classes of student, to determine how students react to an atmosphere of word tension, and to draw inferences concerning developmental responsible opinion.

To achieve these ends, Dr. Zweig interviewed some one hundred senior and graduate students from each of Oxford and Manchester universities.

The distinctions between the attitudes at the two schools were strongest in the areas of vocation and personal philosophy. Whereas at Manchester, the inevitability of a commercial or engineering career removed this major decision, at Oxford, there was a striving for careers with an element of service: diplomacy, teaching, legal or international work. A similar altruistic strain ran through the philosophies of the Oxford sample, although at Manchester there was no marked self-orientation. In both cases, social class distinctions were considered inappropriate and declining.

Most of those interviewed allowed themselves an optimistic view of future international relations, despite their own rational challenging of this view. In parallel to this conflict was the opinion that to study at university was a dead serious business, lightened only by a sense of privilege and self-enrichment.

These attitudes enabled Dr. Zweig to construct the ideal

This scar underneath my lip is symbol of a friend's rough love though some would call it anger, mistakenly. This scar crescent on my wrist is symbol of a woman's delicate anger though some would call it love, mistakenly. My belly's scar is symbol of a surgical precision:

no anger, no love. The small fading mark on my hand is token of my imprecision, of my own carving, my anger and my love.

Newlove and MacEwen are two of the three poets in the book without university degrees. The three Tish ex-editors from Vancouver, Frank Davey, Lionel Kearns and George Bowring, all have their M.A.'s in English from U.B.C. and share other characteristics as well. Where Newlove and MacEwen make penetrating poems out of their introspection, these men are able to reflect only the ordinariness of their lives. Their work is one-dimensional—lacks immediacy of feeling and language, that is, lacks love. If their poems fail to involve the reader, perhaps Bowring, the least dull of the three, admits the cause:

Is this any way for a man to live?
Up early in the morning to the dangling orchestration of two alarmclocks, out, toothpasted,
into a cold car and along a boulevard to buildings full of freshmen, books open ready for me to walk in,
deliver three cute jokes and ease into a discussion of Literature?

Montreal poets say they believe in passion, but neither B. V. Hertz or Henry Moscovitch generates much excitement. Perhaps a better selection of their work should be seen. But in this book both betray monotonous rhythms and a poverty of language. The matter of Hertz's poems isn't particularly vital and though his poem for Layton is interesting, it's hampered by banal imagery; his contempt in "For a Rabbi" is stillborn. Moscovitch is still flaunting a Laytonian conceit that sounds ridiculous in a poet as slight as he is so far.

Of the remaining three, there are two women, Margaret Atwood and Myra von Riedemann, of little interest, and Harry Howith of cused of a sense of humour. Though his sarcasm is heavy-handed, a poem like "Long Distance to Yevgeny Yevtushenko" is entertaining.

of personality held by British students, from which he projects the characteristics of future informed opinion. The ideal is that of a stable, co-operative leader who is free from convention and inhibition. He is to have a humanitarian philosophy applicable on a world scale, yet once again, such altruism and optimism must be restrained by realism.

In commenting on Dr. Zweig's discoveries from the Canadian point of view, one registers surprise at the seriousness and the sense of responsibility of the Britons. Although the choice of an older sample doubtless strengthened the bias, it remains for Canadian students to test themselves against the standard.

I told him; Sid, dont go

by CALINESCU

Boy, it sure is a lot of Caesar, not Julius of course but Sid. I am speaking about the latest attraction at the O'Keefe Centre, LITTLE ME, starring TV comedian Sid Caesar in only seven parts. This musical comedy, based on a novel by Patrick Dennis of AUNTIE MAME fame, folded last season on Broadway and when it was decided to take the show on the road, the original cast agreed to try again.

The musical lampoons the endless string of autobiographies of former Hollywood greats and the attempt of 'Ghost Writers' to keep the 'Image' as clean as possible. In the case of LITTLE ME, Belle Poitrine is the girl who makes it, by way of seven husbands or 'almost husbands' from skid row in Venezuela, Ill. to a multi million dollar estate on Long Island. Belle's mother was a nurse, well not really, she only had the same aims a nurse has, to make people, especially men, feel good! Which of course, gave her daughter preliminary training for her future business, marriage.

Belle's story was the focus of Mr. Dennis' novel. And then along came Sid Caesar. And what may have been a vehicle for top comedienne, became a vehicle for a not so funny comedian. Mr. Caesar, who plays the seven husbands, has taken on a load that is a bit too heavy. His portrayals are fairly amusing but without any emotional involvement. He only shines twice during the evening — in his role as the chaphinesque Fred Poitrine, Belle's first husband, and in the part of Prince Cherney, the ruler of the only country that was ever defeated by Liechtenstein.

Sid Caesar and Virginia Martin star in Little Me at the beer barn.

The young Belle is engagingly portrayed by Virginia Martin, the girl who created the part of Hedy LaRue in HOW TO SUCCEED. Miss Martin has everything it takes to be a musical comedy star and provides us with the best performance of the evening. Nancy Andrews, playing a very 'Sophie Tuckerish' Belle of today, tries her best to make her part as narrator as effective as possible but is only partly successful.

The outstanding thing in LITTLE ME is the choreography. A fast moving, original number 'Rich Kids Rag' almost brought the audience to its feet, and the same pace continues throughout the evening.

The cast of LITTLE ME manages to overcome a weak script and a generally unexciting score and provides its audience with with an evening of unassuming fun.

A shocking view of anarchy

by RAY WYLIE

The University Alumnae is currently producing Count Oederland, by Max Frisch, the Swiss playwright. It is a highly interesting play, one of the most absorbing I have seen this year.

The plot centers around a successful Public Prosecutor somewhere in contemporary Europe, and investigates the repressed anarchy which lies hidden in every civilized man. Called upon to prosecute a meek bank clerk for the hatchet murder of a fellow employee, the Prosecutor sympathizes with this small man's desire for freedom and meaning in life. He abandons his profession and identifies himself with the legendary Count Oederland, who was said to have defended the weak against a cruel and despotic State.

Taking a poor peasant girl as his Countess, Oederland (the Prosecutor) murders three policemen with his axe, as they are the tangible representatives of the State. He then organizes a conspiracy of the underprivileged to overthrow the State and institute genuine freedom. The plot succeeds only too well, and confronted with the reality of what he has done, the Prosecutor is jolted back to his normal consciousness. Called upon to create a new State to replace the one which he has destroyed, he discovers tragically that his dream of unfettered freedom is but an illusion, and that civilized man cannot live without social organization. In the final test, he rejects personal power, and chooses to face trial for his murder of the three policemen and for his treason against the State.

Max Frisch has come to grips with a fundamental problem facing modern society — the delicate balance between personal freedom and organized society. While he believes that rigid State control is undesirable, he clearly admits that complete individual liberty is impossible. A compromise must be established if civilization is to flourish.

As the Public Prosecutor, Ken Pogue gives a powerful and sympathetic performance, and effectively dominates every scene in which he appears. Suzanne Bryant is successful in her triple role as the spark which ignites the Prosecutor to violent action. Eric Kosky, as the meek bank clerk, effectively portrays his role as a naive and helpless figure who is enmeshed in the web of State authority and is finally destroyed by it.

Patricia Carroll Brown, the director, has good control of her large cast, and is able to draw out the myriad of thoughts and emotions contained in Frisch's script. There are minor criticisms, but they are overshadowed by the overall effect of the drama.

The Alumnae have a success on their hands; Count Oederland is a powerful and somewhat shocking play.

The sound of surprise

By DAVID JACKEL

The critical rating of any practitioner of any art form is never an easy matter. But in jazz this matter is further complicated by the necessities of the music, which require the soloist to contribute improvisations which are original in a style which is distinctive. Those musicians who most consistently produce the unexpected in their solos can be called very good, or perhaps even great. Those who never make a mistake, but at the same time never transcend the boundaries of an accepted style which is not their own, can only be called good. And in jazz, to be merely "good" is to be one of many musicians.

Modern jazz piano has produced a handful of stylists who are very good, and perhaps even great. Bud Powell, Oscar Peterson, Thelonious Monk, these are artists whose distinctive musical personalities have made them instantly recognizable to the listener, and sources of plunder for hordes of lesser talents. There are also numerous "good" modern pianists, whose talents are not quite enough to lift them into the higher category, yet who have a certain appeal for the listener.

Such a pianist is Ramsay Lewis, currently occupying the Friars bandstand with his trio. Lewis' style is eclectic, a mixture of single-note lines, gospel chords, and Ahmad Jamal-like tinkling and pausing. His solos, particularly on blues numbers, are nearly always predictable, tending to wind up as a rhythmic repetition of churchy chords which swings very hard but doesn't go anywhere. In spite of this, he is a crowd-pleasing pianist, whose relatively uninvolved solos and occasional beautiful statements of ballads have obtained for him a large following.

But it is still necessary to make the statement that Lewis is only a "good" jazzman, whose solo work does not compare with that of other pianists, and whose style is hard to identify as distinctively his own. As an entertainer, Lewis is something else again. His blues playing and his rhythmic strength are captivating in small doses, and his support includes the hard-swinging bass work of El Dee Young, one of the best in the business. Drummer Red Holt is a colorful, if unsteady, percussionist, whose talents include a surprising facility with the tambourine. The latter instrument is an integral part of the trio's version of Little Liza Jane, which turns out to be a stomping gospel blues. For sheer entertainment value it's hard to beat. At least it's breaking them up down at the Friars.

As a public service warning, it is suggested that you try to avoid the intermission vocalist at that particular establishment. His specialty is imitating other vocalists. He should hope they never hear him. You should hope you never do.

GOOD TIME JAZZ

At the Colonial, Buck Clayton and Buddy Tate have been replaced by the Saints and Sinners, a sextet headed by pianist-singer Red Richards. The group stays mainly in the mainstream idiom, using brief unison ensembles as springboards for solos which are generally very good.

Buster Bailey's clarinet playing is particularly impressive, and so are the often-humorous trombone solos of jazz great Vic Dickenson. Richards' piano and vocal work is competent but won't live on in your memory, and some of trumpeter Herman Autry's solos are a bit ragged. But Autry can still play obligattos behind a vocal in the inventive fashion which seems to be dying with the swing era. Earlier this week he played an accompaniment to the lyric of Easy Livin' which was as good as anything he ever did with Fats Waller 30 years ago.

Occasionally the sextet switches to a dixieland style to play numbers in that idiom. Here Bailey is the most inventive of the soloists, although everyone tends to look somewhat bored when yet another request arrives for When the Saints.

COMING CAMPUS ATTRACTIONS

On Wednesday, noon-hour concerts will resume at Hart House with what promises to be one of the best presentations of the year. Pianist Lorne Tepperman is scheduled to lead a large all-star group through arrangements from his own pen, and from that of saxophonist Phil Branton. The musicians, in addition to Tepperman and Branton, will include saxophonist Bryan Barley, trombonist Russ Little, and bassist Johnny Amadio.

Some of the most impressive solo performances of the past term were turned in by these musicians, and Branton's arrangements for his concert last fall were among the best modern writing done locally for some time. All of which adds up to a program which deserves a hearing from campus jazz fans.

The following evening Ron Collier will bring a ten-piece band into the Great Hall, for the purpose of displaying his own not inconsiderable arranging talents. Among the solo performers will be trombonist Butch Watanabe and trumpeter Guido Basso. Toronto's finest rhythm section (Bill Brito, Ed Bickert, Archie Alleyne) will also be on hand. Tickets (free) must be obtained for this concert, and women guests will be permitted.

Wax drippings form signature

by PAUL RUSSELL

Leonard Oesterle, is one of Toronto's most prominent sculptors. He arrived here in 1956 from Germany, and presented his first public exhibition in Canada in the Quadrangle of Hart House in the summer of 1957.

He is now back in Hart House gallery with a splendid exhibition which ranges from figurative pieces to abstract forms, employing materials as new as concrete and as traditional as granite.

Mr. Oesterle is best known in Canada for his small bronze works which are cast from wax models. His signature is the particular sort of rough textured surface, which he obtains by allowing wax drippings to fall on the finished sculptured form. The best example of this technique in the exhibition is "Bird of Flight". In this piece the Bird theme provides a groundwork for a study in swift movement. Only the essential elements are used to convey the image of flight. The solid bronze is intricately organized enclosing spatial voids so that these voids actually become part of the sculptural concept. This void-solid idea is carried less successfully into complete abstraction with the two FORM pieces in the centre of the gallery.

The HEAD studies bring us happily back into Mr. Oesterle's figurative work. In "SULKING", the figure seems to be the very essence of the stone, rather than an arbitrary face imposed upon the granite. The shape is alive, it seems almost warm and animated.

The sculptor moves to a larger with his relief series EPIISODES. Here Mr. Oesterle is narrative, figurative, and sentimental. The theme is traditional: the attraction between man and woman. The interest in these pieces, however, lies in the development of the abstract composition based on this theme. In EPIISODE 1, the sculptured forms are thrust to either side of the block presenting a divided composition:

in 2, these chunky forms become interrelated, culminating in 3 where the shapes are tightly integrated. The narrative union of the two figures in 3 is completed by the bend of the two heads and necks toward each other.

Two pieces in the gallery are proposals for monumental sculpture to be undertaken if possible at a future date. THE REVOLVING SCULPTURE FORMS arranged in a complex outdoor fountain would provide exciting decoration for any public institution. The VERTICAL METAL is the artist's, most successful statement on the solid—void problem, but of course it needs the monumentality of Mr. Oesterle's original conception.

The usual criticism has arisen concerning Mr. Oesterle, namely, that he is eclectic. There are elements in his work which can be traced to Henry Moore, Barbara Hepworth and Giacometti. But all artists are influenced by the masters of their period.

The variety of works on exhibit suggests an exploratory phase in the artist's development. On the whole, each problem explored is successfully solved.

The exhibition continues at Hart House until February 14.

They're better comedians than singers

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

Let's face it, Varsity Arena is not the best place in the world to present a folk concert — for performers or audience. The performers are cold and the audience has to be content with bad sound (music over a speaker system designed to announce hockey scores etc.).

But with that put aside, how was the Brothers Four Concert last Sunday night?

Enjoyable is my answer, but certainly not great. The Brothers ran the gamut of folk music from the "Ox-Drivers" to Bob Dylan's "Long Time Ago, Far Away." The latter song was probably inspired by the Kennedy assassination as it declares in an ironic tone, "Things like that don't happen anymore."

Any Brothers Four singing whether on record or in concert, is musically correct, but it doesn't have any life. Hard driving, rousing numbers become almost tiring. Slow, lyrical numbers become almost funereal.

Luckily there are some exceptions to this. No one does "Blue Water Line" or "Green Leaves of Summer" better than the Brothers. But the former of these two, was not even included in the concert.

Well then, what made the concert enjoyable? Mostly the Brother's comedy. They're definitely better comedians than folksingers.

A large percentage of the concert consisted of humorous songs, introductions and in-between patter. The Brothers Four realized that their singing alone would never make the concert a success.

Probably the best part of the evening came during the song "My Canary Died." Just as the singers reached the second chorus lamenting the loss of the little bird, a perfect canary warble came across the ice from one of the Tarheels visiting that weekend.

The rest of the song was an interchan between the "canary" and the Brothers Four on stage.

I must congratulate the Brothers on one thing: they didn't use the concert as an opportunity to run through all their old songs. The amount of new material was refreshing even if the performance wasn't.

A mouseketeer forever

University Men, Annette Funicello Wants You!

Ever since she was discovered nine years ago at a dance recital by Walt Disney and put onto television's Mickey Mouse Club, Annette Funicello has bewitched boys, big and little throughout America.

Last week, three "big boys", slicked themselves up, assumed their most masculine bearing and accosted Annette, who was in town to publicize her latest picture,

The Misadventures of Merlin
Jones. We unanimously concluded that Annette would suit even the most demanding U of T male.

First and foremost she is an extremely beautiful girl.
Hers is not the seductive beauty of Brigitte Bardot or a Sandra Dee which entices men to cast prudence aside and take by storm;
rather it is that beauty which sets a man to admiring, then to wondering how he can make himself noticed.

This particular quality of Annette's has attracted a large following of nine and ten year old boys who send her their rings and ask her to go steady. This creates problems for the campus suitor. How does one out-hustle a nine year old?

Once we fend off the youngsters our chances seem to be good. Annette prefers university men to movie stars because "On the whole your interests tend to be broader than those of the average professional man."

For the benefit of Commerce students the laws of supply and demand have definitely favoured Miss Funicello. She dresses in mink coats, drives her own purple Thunderbird, and is planning her third trip to Europe.

While Annette may be a heroine to the rest of America, her brothers appreciate her for different reasons. A few years ago they were selling her phone number for 25 cents to interested parties.
And she comes in handy for getting autographs from favorite baseball and football players.

But, queries the cautious bespectacled Artsman, "What is Annette Funicello really like?"

Her friendly attentive nature marks her as an excellent companion for the university man who likes to feel that his opinions are important.

With all her tangible, in-tangible, and entangle-able assets, Annette is our choice for Campus Girlfriend '64.

Canadian students are aloof

By JITENDRA KUMAR

A foreign student at the University of Toronto campus does face certain problems which are there in spite of the best intentions of the Canadians to receive foreigners in their midst and the keen eagerness of foreign students to meet Canadians.

I wish to point out that most students at this campus, whether they come from Asia, Africa, Europe America or Australia, do experience a certain kind of aloofness, of course, in varying degree depending upon their attitudes, preferences and prejudices.

The real frustration which a foreign student meets at the campus is of a social nature. At the social level he feels emotionally starved.
The Rotarian Week-ends organised by the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students are a sad commentary on our apathy toward this very real problem. The elderly, patronising gentlemen of the Rotary Club are no substitutes for lively, fresh and youthful students of the University. I have the feeling that these Rotary week-ends are organised more to satisfy the social vanity of a wealthy group than to satisfy the social needs of the foreign students.
In fact, the way Fros is operating hardly invites a stimulating participation among the Canadian and foreign students. I can recall not a single occasion when I met more than three Canadian students at a Fros Open House.

An effective international club, consisting entirely of the U of T students, should be a possible answer to the problem. Such a club, if it comes into existence, should not make a fad of "helping" the foreign students nor shall it be a place where foreign students will go to feel "foreign", or to be asked a set type of questions about their country and about the progress of their work at the University. It will not be a place where conversation must fluctuate between squeals of surprise from the mouths of kindly matrons at the foreigner's "wonderful, so wonderful English" and a hard-to-conceal embarrassment on the foreigner's face unable to determine if the remark was a compliment or only a sardonic observation of a half-spent lady of culture.

The club I am visualising is one which should accept the foreign student as one of the other students only with certain handicaps because of his past background. And there will be a provision for overcoming these handicaps.
If for example, he does not know how to dance he should be able to find some one willing to help him learn it.

If he cannot appreciate the Western music he will be able to find pleasant companions to initiate him into this new area of experience.
If he is not fluent in conversation because he comes from a non-English speaking country he shall find some one who would tell him that he need not feel inferior just for this remediable lack. My idea of an International University Club is where you meet students of both sexes and from all countries with no "artificial smiles" or "affected mannerisms." It should be a place where everybody feels equal and where awareness of diversity of backgrounds is merged in the immediate sense of unity and belonging toward the University. Is it impossible to have such a place?

Everybody knows or, at least, can know that there is a Canadian way of life. But knowing is not living. Let us give our foreign students a fair chance to know as well as live the Canadian Culture.
I doubt if at present there is any conscious realisation or concrete expression to meet the difficulties of foreign students on the part of the Canadian students of the University of Toronto.

Hart House men dominate the scene

By AL ACHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Physical and Health Education is going strong on all fronts of interfaculty competition this winter.

PHE cagers took over sole possession of top spot in Group I basketball Wednesday, defeating UC, 40-38. The Phys Ed water polo squad sports a 4-0 record that includes wins over all Group I contenders. And PHE also won the interfac wrestling gymnastics meets.

Only in hockey did it appear that the Hart House boys were headed for a dismal winter as they started the season with a smashing 0-5 record. But now, even the PHE shinny team may have a crack at a championship.

PHE edged Victoria, 3-2, yesterday to extend its win streak to three games and undefeated string to four. The latest victory moved PHE into third and last playoff spot ahead of St. Mike's and brought its record to 3-5-1.

Don Arthurs and Hugh Lynn scored for PHE before the game was three minutes old. After Jeff Maybee and Dave Wilson tied the score for Vic, Jack Thain counted the winner for PHE in the second half.

PHE basketballers broke a first-place tie with UC with their victory Wednesday. Wayne Wessell scored 10 for the winners, Ken Elashuk added 9 and Andy Klimas 8.

Pete Peskum stood out as usual for Redmen, netting 16, followed by Gerry Sternberg, 9.

Cagers win...

Forward Barry Mitchelson scored 17 points for Western, 11 in the first half before Bordas controlled him.

Under The Basket: Several Blues were annoyed at the refereeing. They felt Williamson was often given the benefit of the doubt, while they were charged on clean checks . . . Western shot 23.9 per cent, Blues 38.6 per cent.

Blues: — West (29), Ouchterlony (14), Bordes (13), Baronowicz (4), Kimel (4), Woloshyn (3), Neidre, McKenzie Sheldon.
Mustangs: — Williamson (25), Mitchelson (17), Barclay (4), Brown (3), Dick (3), Innocente (2), Rogers, Kreek, Stark.

Swim 'n' mat 'n' boxing

The wrestling and swimming teams from University of Western Ontario compete against Varsity Saturday as part of the Athletic Night which starts at 6:30 p.m. Blues boxers will also participate, fighting pugilists from the Harmonie Club and YMHA.

U of T's swim team should have little trouble against Mustangs whom they defeated earlier this year, 70-25. Western will be bolstered by the return of Glen Davis, who did not swim in the first meetings of the two squads, but his presence shouldn't be enough to turn the tide in favor of Bob Eynon's men.

Blues' wrestlers will be looking for a win after losing a meet to University of Buffalo in Buffalo Tuesday night. John Holt and Don Merker were the only winners for the Toronto squad, which bowed to Bulls, 23-8.

Varsity's three intercollegiate champions from 1963 highlighted the 12-bout boxing card. Mike Rapsey meets Julie Mandel of the YMHA, the Canadian amateur lightweight champion, while Ron McGregor and Ron Brooks take on fighters from the Harmonie Club. McGregor meets Helmut Zimmerman, the Canadian amateur light middleweight champion in 1963 and Brooks faces Wolfgang Haase.

This will be Blues final appearance prior to the unofficial intercollegiate boxing championships at Royal Military College February 15.

Blues bomb Warriors, 10-2

WATERLOO (Staff) — Varsity Blues took over undisputed possession of first place in the intercollegiate hockey league, blasting Waterloo Warriors, 10-2, here last night. Blues have 13 points in the standing, two more than McMaster Marlin's, who have played one less game than Varsity.

The Monteith brothers, Hank and Steve, paced Blues once again in the 10-goal onslaught, Toronto's most prolific of the season. The line of the Monteiths and centre Sonny Osborne, who replaced injured Stu McNeil on this unit, figured in six goals.

Hank Monteith, and Steve Monteith each scored twice and Osborne once. Hank Monteith, who has five goals and eight assists in his last three games, and Osborne each added three assists. Steve Monteith had two.

George Olah, with two. Don Fuller, Bob Awrey and Bobby McClelland scored the other Varsity goals while Tom Seath and Don Mervyn scored for Waterloo. Awrey also had three assists for Blues.

Blues arrived here only 20 minutes before game time after a 24-hour but ride through the snow storm that hit Southern Ontario. As a result, they were sluggish in the first period when they took a 2-1 lead. In the final two periods, when Blues outscored Warriors, 8-1, the Waterloo defence was practically non-existent as it has been most of the season.

The game was loosely played as 99 shots were fired at both goals. Many shots, however, were from well out, especially those by Waterloo.

Neither team exerted itself to any degree and the game was absent of excessive checking.

Blues will attempt to maintain their position atop the standings when they play McGill Redmen at Varsity Arena tonight. McMaster, meanwhile, plays at Laval tonight and at Montreal Saturday against Montreal Carabins.

Carabins lost a chance to move into a tie with Blues and Marlin's when they were defeated, 8-2, by Laval Rouge et Or Wednesday in Quebec City. Laval and Montreal are tied for third place, two points behind McMaster and four behind Blues.

Stray Shots: Blues outshot Warriors, 62-37. . . Varsity defenceman Peter Speyer suffered a bruised shoulder but is not expected to miss tonight's game. . . Hank Monteith moved into third place in league scoring with his five-point outburst. The rookie forward has 18 points, three less than leader Don Mervyn of Waterloo. Steve Monteith, last season's scoring champion, jumped into fourth place with 15 points.

New-found confidence for Mac game

Cagers gain 'sweet' win at UWO

By PAUL HENDERSON

LONDON, Ont. — Victories in sport are much sweeter when rare feats are accomplished and revenge is gained.

Varsity basketball Blues tasted the sweetness of such a victory Wednesday when they outplayed Western Mustangs in all departments to record a 67-54 win at Thames Hall.

The win was only the third registered by Toronto here in the history of competition between the two teams, and by it Blues avenged the overtime win snatched by Western at Hart House last week.

Varsity coach John McManus, elated over the win which gives Blues a 3-3 record, attributed it to Blue's domination under the boards. Forward Dave Ouchterlony grabbed off rebounds with amazing regularity, collecting 25 in a standout performance offensively and defensively.

When the ball was not going to Ouchterlony, centre Ed Bordas and rookie Ron Kimel corralled more than their share of rebounds. Blues garnered 70 off the boards and Mustangs, 38.

Unlike the previous contest against Western, there were more rebounds to be gathered, because Mustang star Tom Williamson was not sinking field goals with the accuracy he displayed in chalking up 43 points at Hart House. He was held to five baskets in 24 attempts by the determined defensive work of guards Bill Woloshyn and Vlad Baranowicz.

Varsity's offence was paced by Dave West, who scored 29 points, high in the game.

West hooped 7 free throws and 11 field goals, two of the latter coming on break-aways after he stole the ball.

Ouchterlony and Bordas capitalized on their rebounding to net 14 and 13 respectively. They scored 18 of these when Blues overcame a 28-26 half-time deficit.

Despite his poor shooting from the floor, Williamson's 25 points topped Western. He registered 15 of these on the foul line, where he missed the mark on only three occasions.

a letter...

Dear Sir:

I must take exception to some of the remarks levied by the Sport's Editor of The Varsity in his article concerning the "deplorable display that was perpetrated at the Arena Friday afternoon."

It would be fair, I think, to summarize Mr. Kollins' views as follows: (1) the reason that the game got out of hand was the referee's inability to nip "unjustified antics" in the bud, (2) order could have been restored by banishing at least two players for the remainder of the game.

In my opinion, the editor is inaccurate when he lays such responsibility at the feet of referee Bill Barry. It is not my contention that the latter refereed a flawless game; he didn't. Nevertheless, prime culpability for any "donnybrooks" rests in the attitudes and emotions of individual players. Just because Charbonneau flagrantly elbowed Ian Sinclair does not give Mr. Barry the authority to expel the Montreal player from the game. Similarly, the fact that Bob Awrey "shows a tendency at times to be more concerned with sitting in the penalty box than (with) winning games" does not give the referee any jurisdiction to order Awrey out of the game.

It appears to me that Mr. Kollins lacks sensitivity towards the nature of hockey and sympathy for its participants. Bob Awrey is an excellent hockey player and the strength of this excellence lies in his ability to be aggressive notwithstanding this aggressiveness sometimes leads to a multiplicity of penalties. I am sure that if Coach Kane could inject some of Awrey's spirit into others, he would.

Finally, the tone of your article with respect to Don Fuller is misleading. As I saw the incident in question, and as Fuller verified, the two players raced for the puck in the corner whereupon both sticks went high along the boards with the blade of Fuller's stick catching Charbonneau in the stomach.

I rejoice at the fact that despite the deplorable display, Mr. Kollins as one of the spectators "thoroughly enjoyed the wild and woolly show."

C. M. Speyer (II Law)

A REFEREE HAS THE POWER: HE SHOULD USE IT

THE QUESTION OF HOCKEY and rowdiness during games is an old one. In this space Monday I stated my views on what I thought referee Bill Barry should have done to control the game between Varsity Blues and Montreal Carabins at Varsity Arena last Friday.

Monday's column has aroused much protest. Typical of the criticism is a letter, which can be found elsewhere on this page, written to The Varsity by Chris Speyer, a member of Varsity hockey Blues.

Apologists for Barry's actions, such as Mr. Speyer, contend that a referee is not responsible for any donnybrooks that take place during a hockey match; "prime culpability . . . rests in the attitudes and emotions of individual players." It is true that emotions and attitudes of individual players are the source of rowdiness, but the referee still has the final responsibility for maintaining order.

All men have varying degrees of temperament. Some are prone to letting their anxieties get the best of them, others are not. A referee must prevent situations from arising in which these "weaker" men (and no man is perfect) have a chance for their tempers to flare beyond their self-control. Judgment of any situation in a game must be at the absolute discretion of the referee for he is the supreme authority while the game is in progress.

If a player shows by unjustified action that he has fallen victim to exuberant anguish and emotion, the referee should not hesitate to eject that player from the game for gross misconduct. For if any player becomes more concerned with assaulting opponents than playing hockey, it can be expected that the opponents (because of emotions and attitudes) will be aroused to retaliation.

Tell me, what sense is there in having a game deteriorate into a vendetta where the sole purpose of certain players is to avenge wrong-doings? If the first flagrant offender is ejected there would be no need for retaliation by others.

The letter states that "just because Charbonneau (of Montreal) flagrantly elbowed Ian Sinclair does not give Mr. Barry the authority to expel the Montreal player from the game."

Perhaps this might be true in the National Hockey League, where referees are controlled by team owners and game-misconduct penalties cost players part of their salaries.

But in intercollegiate hockey, which is not dictated by professional "arrangements," a referee has the legal authority, under the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association rule book, "to call a match penalty on any player who deliberately attempts to injure an opponent" or is "guilty of gross misconduct of any kind."

THERE'S ONE SET OF RULES FOR EVERYONE

IN FRIDAY'S GAME, it became evident that Pierre Charbonneau was not concerned with playing the game according to the rules. If he had been ejected, players, spectators and officials would have benefitted.

It has been drawn to my attention that, as one of the spectators, I thoroughly enjoyed the game. (I stated in Monday's column that "every spectator . . . thoroughly enjoyed the wild and woolly show.") Yes, I did enjoy it, but that isn't any justification for the deplorable display I have my moral weaknesses as do others. But I was wrong in assuming that every spectator enjoyed the game. It is a fact that more than one person left after the second period because "it was no longer a hockey game."

Mr. Speyer's letter argues that just because Bob Awrey of Varsity Blues is penalty-prone does not give the referee any jurisdiction to order Awrey out of the game. True, but the antics of any player during a game DO give the referee that jurisdiction. And as far as I know, throwing a fish at an opponent is not within the rules of proper conduct during a hockey game.

Awrey is certainly a capable hockey player and his aggressiveness can be considered the strength of his success. But again, just because one player is more aggressive than another does not give him the right to his own set of rules. Hockey players undergo trying experiences during a game, especially when subject to holding, spearing, elbowing, etc. Still, this is no reason for a referee to disregard tactics that could cause serious injury or to let a player go wild when he feels he has been taken advantage of.

To refer to Mr. Speyer's letter once again, it states that the tone of my column with respect to on Fuller is misleading. All I know is what I see and hear and it appeared to me that Fuller deliberately speared Charbonneau. After the game, I asked Fuller if he had "given the Montreal player his stick" and he replied "about 40 inches of it."

All of which leaves me with the conclusion that if Barry had ejected Charbonneau after his malicious attack on Sinclair, Awrey and Fuller would not have been provoked to pernicious actions that should have sent them to early showers as well.

Announce rules for new post-grad degree

Regulations for a third graduate degree were approved Tuesday by the graduate council. The University of Toronto will be the first in the world to grant the degree.

The degree, the Master of Philosophy, will be a two-year course after the master's degree. The degree was made statutory by the Senate last term but the regulations have yet to be approved at next week's Senate meeting.

The Master of Philosophy will not be a step between a master's and doctoral degrees, but rather an alternate course to be taken after attaining a M. A.

Students taking the Phil. M.—as it is called—will be devoted to a mastery of what is already known of a discipline, with some training in research. The PhD will remain primarily as a research degree.

Students obtaining a Phil. M. will be able to go on with two years credit toward a PhD. It will still be possible to obtain a PhD without taking a Phil. M.

The Phil. M. will usually require two years work after a honors B.A., or one year after a M.A. Minimum requirements of a 70-per-cent average and one language other than English will have to be met.

The new degree will be given in English, Romance Languages, Slavic Studies, Near Eastern and Islamic Studies, Philosophy, History, Political Economy, Sociology, Fine Art, East Asiatic Studies, Educational Theory, Anthropology and Classics.

CORRECTION

A news story in Friday's Varsity was erroneous in reporting that the academic council studying the proposed Rochdale College of the Campus Co-operative Residence Incorporated had recommended in its report that the proposed institution not be called a college.

The report, in fact, stated: "The council recommends that the proposal to incorporate Rochdale College be endorsed and recommended to the government and members of the parliament of the province of Ontario."

The report did advise that Rochdale College not be a degree-granting institution.

The suggestion that Rochdale be called rather a house or hall should have been correctly attributed to U of T President Claude Bissell. Dr. Bissell's comments were in no way a part of the academic council's written report.

The Varsity apologizes to the Campus Co-operative and the academic council for any inconvenience caused them by the error.

Brief blasts Ontario universities

A highly critical brief on Ontario's university education, which was submitted to the provincial government Dec. 19 by the Ontario Council of University Faculty Associations, was released Friday.

The 55-page report claims, generally, that the quality and quantity of university educational facilities in the province are insufficient, and that they will get worse in the future if vast changes in thinking and action are not taken.

The brief says the faults in higher education are due to a lack of knowledge on the part of the government, a poor administrative structure between the universities and government, and insufficient financial resources. Blame for much of the latter is laid at the feet of the Ontario government.

The report gives a detailed criticism of more than 20 areas of university problems. It points out that the higher education problem is more than one of mere numbers.

"The university teachers of Ontario are alarmed that many of the problems of universities are not well understood and that the province is not adequately equipped to inform itself on university matters," it states.

The brief was submitted to Premier John Roberts in December, but no reply was received.

Charging that universities are not able to supply sufficient graduates for government and industry, the report claims a shortage of graduate facilities will produce a shortage of teachers that will only further aggravate the situation.

Pointing out that for the 1963-64 year, university requests to the Ontario government were cut by 40 per cent, the brief charges that because of inadequate liaison facilities government does not really know what is going on in higher education.

It also recommended that, lacking the two committees, the government adopt a realistic policy on the different financial needs of the various universities, and that such policy be stated publicly to allow public examination and discussion.

Professor C. B. Macpherson, University of Toronto representative to the council, said last night the brief was not intended to be made public until discussions had been held with government representatives, but that a Toronto newspaper had obtained a copy and printed a story on it.

He denied reports in Toronto papers that the brief labelled Ontario universities as glorified secondary schools, and that it claimed the proposed department of university affairs would give the government control over university affairs.

Neither of the allegations could be found in the brief.

Included in points made by the brief were:

- While universities such as Harvard have a graduate to undergraduate ratio of at least 1 to 1, U of T has a ratio of about 1 to 9. It estimated that while by 1970 Ontario will need 5,800 additional university teachers, the current rate of graduation will only provide for 20 per cent of the needs.

- To derive fuller benefit from university, all, or nearly all students should be in residence. If every student were to spend one year in residence, 9,000 residence spaces would be needed now. On the same basis, 19,000 places will be needed by 1970.

- "It would be as undesirable to have the civil servants in the department of education, as constituted at present, responsible for university affairs, as it would be to have university teachers directing the secondary school system."

(Pertinent parts of the brief will be reprinted in The Varsity Friday.)

Representations by students, staff may be welcome

Student and faculty representations to the new department of university affairs would probably be welcomed by the department, J. R. McCarthy, secretary of the Ontario government advisory committee on university affairs, said Wednesday.

Because all persons affected by a decision should have a chance to be heard, such representations would be in order, Mr. McCarthy said.

But representations from individuals or single university groups would probably not be accepted unless they concerned all Ontario students, he said.

Students and faculty members should not expect the government to dictate to the universities, he emphasized, as this would be an encroachment on the independence of the universities.

Last month the Ontario region of the Canadian Union of Students elected Doug Ward as president for the express purpose of making representations to the new department.

The Canadian Association of University Teachers is not formally organized on a provincial basis.

Mr. McCarthy said the problem of numbers now facing higher education must be solved by university initiative. The universities must recognize it as their problem and ask the government for aid in implementing proposed solutions. If the problem is handed over to the government, the universities are only asking for a loss of autonomy, Mr. McCarthy said.

The duties of the new department would include analyzing trends, making population surveys and co-ordination. Mr. McCarthy illustrated the latter by pointing out the co-operative buying system for libraries now being organized, which is expected to save $1,250,000 by 1967.

Crusader wanted

"I'll give $10,000 to anyone who can prove my analysis wrong," said Harry Hallatt in a telephone interview with The Varsity last night.

Mr. Hallatt, a retired manufacturer of tile and brick, has been running a series of advertisements for the last week in The Varsity trying to interest "Students of Varsity" in his economic theories.

He is trying to find out if students are interested in finding out what's wrong with Canada's economic system. He wants to get some one who can take over his crusade to reform the economy because he is getting old, and doesn't know how many years he has left.

"Young people are the only solution."

The Varsity reporter was the first student to call him.

Book drive big success

"It's the first time it's been tried on the U of T campus, and the response has been just marvellous," said Louise Laing, World University Service chairman, commenting on the results of the recent University book drive.

Barrels placed at 28 depots on the campus between Jan. 20 and 24 collected a total of 6,000 books in a drive for used textbooks for overseas universities.

The Toronto total is 1,000 books behind the University of British Columbia total. In a campaign opened by a 40-mile bed-push the UBC netted a total of 7,000 books.

The books, now stored on shelves in the Bancroft Hall basement, will be shipped to Geneva where they will be relayed to other universities. Shipping costs will be covered by a combination of funds gathered in the campaign and profits from Treasure Van.

Their appearance on campus is being sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council's Canadian-Canadian committee.

Land named library director

University President Claude Bissell yesterday announced the appointment of Brian Land, University of Toronto graduate, as director of U of T's library school. He will replace Berta Bassam, who retires June 30.

Mr. Land has been research assistant to Mr. Walter Gordon, minister of finance, this year while on leave from the university where he is associate librarian.

Before joining the U of T staff in 1959, Mr. Land was associate editor of Canadian Business magazine, and was previously involved in various divisions of library work.

Miss Bassam, a graduate of Queen's University, the Pratt Institute, and Columbia, in New York, has been director of the Library School since 1951, and has taken part in all the school's developments since 1928.

Hooten' and uken' and stuff

If you're tired of hooten' you can try uken' in the Wymilwood music room tomorrow at 5:30 p.m.

Authentic European folk-singing with student minstrels is on the "Ukenanny" program of the University of Toronto Ukrainian Week on campus.

Ihor Steciura, a recent architecture graduate now working with the U of T's planning committee, will be singing and strumming a unique 32-string bandura, a 15th-century Cossack guitar-like instrument.

And some members of the Ukrainian Students' Club choir will also be warming up for their annual concert on Friday at Central Technical School.

Valuable historical maps of eastern Europe owned by U of T librarian Andrew Gregorovich are on display all week in the Sigmund Samuel library and lectures are part of the wide plan to inform other students about Ukraine.

Bitter Ash still held

Here's the latest on Bitter Ash, the controversial B.C. movie that was to have been shown on this campus.

It was seized during a showing at Carlton University last week and its fate now is in the jurisdiction of James Auld, Ontario Minister of travel and publicity.

Mr. Auld has written a letter to producer Lawrence Kent telling him to take the film back to B.C. or let it be censored by the Ontario Board of Censors.

Mr. Kent has not replied.

The Carlton seizure is still being investigated.

Integrate married quarters

AUSTIN, Tex. (Special) — The University of Texas board of regents Saturday approved biracial housing for a proposed married students dormitory and for summer seminar participants.

The board's action left only one large area of student life where segregation exists — general campus housing, which is presently under a court attack. The regents have said no action will be taken in that area until the courts act.

The university, the state's largest with an enrolment of 22,000, has some integrated men's dormitories, but no women's housing is integrated. All campus eating facilities are integrated.

the religious question

Applicants for admission to the University of Toronto are asked to state their religious preference on the application form.

They have their choice of "Anglican, Presb., United, Baptist, Lutheran, Unitarian, Christian Science, Roman Catholic, Jewish, or Other (be specific)."

During the past few weeks the Hillel Foundation has been distributing pledge cards to all Jewish students for the United Jewish Appeal campaign.

Last week E. M. Davidson, assistant registrar, said it is the policy of the registrar's office to compile lists of all students according to religion.

The lists are drawn up for nine major religions and distributed upon request to the religious organizations on campus. It is assumed these organizations will exercise discretion in the use of these lists.

Mr. Davidson said the Hillel Foundation has acquired its list of Jewish students from his office. He admitted the use made of the list constitutes possible abuse of practice.

Mr. Davidson added that it is permissible under the Ontario Human Rights Code for a student to omit answering the religious preference section. But he said most students are unaware of this.

As the code maintains, it is wrong to ask a person his religion before he is accepted for whatever he is applying.

While we do not accuse the university of discriminating on the basis of religion, it is obvious that inclusion of the question allows for such discrimination and is therefore repugnant to the ideals and aims of a university.

But even worse is the compilation and distribution of lists. While the question itself may in some way be justifiable, providing lists of students' religious affiliations is a breach of the confidential nature of an application of admission to the university.

A person's religion is his own business. If he consents to provide such information, it should be held in confidence.

In addition, if the student wishes to affiliate himself with a religious organization at the university, there is nothing to prevent him from doing so. By the same token there is nothing wrong with religious organizations' approaching students to determine if they have an interest in that organization.

But when the university provides the religious organizations with lists of students' religious preferences, a condition of human rights has been violated.

Presumably the university has provided the lists to make easier the task of the religious organizations in providing services for the students.

If this is so, then Hillel has violated the trust.

If the logic behind the practice of providing lists to religious organizations was applied to political organizations, the campus political clubs would then have access to the political beliefs of students. The abuses possible in this situation are obvious, yet in principle they are no worse than those possible in the religious situation.

Under the circumstances, the university must remove the religious preference question from the application.

Financial:

College councils vary greatly

By BOB AARON

In view of the constitution changes requested by the Students' Administrative Council and now being prepared for presentation to the board of governors, a review of the major student college governments illustrates the wide disparity between the degrees of autonomy of the respective colleges. The first article deals with the financial autonomy of the organizations, and a second will compare policy making.

The five governments concerned were: the Engineering Society, the St. Michael's College Student Administrative Council, the Trinity College Board of Stewards, the University College Literary and Athletic Society, and the Victoria College Union.

All student councils on campus are financed either directly or indirectly by student fees. The Engineering Society receives a grant from student fees of more than $7,300. The grant, on the basis of $5 per head, is jointly determined by the faculty and the students, and accounts for 40 per cent of the budget. The Society receives, in addition, a net profit of $4,000, from the operation of the student-run Engineering Stores.

The budget is drawn up annually by the treasurer and covers items such as office expenses and salaries, Cannonball, the Float Parade, and the Toike Oike. The budget is submitted to the students executive for revision and is then approved by the society.

Only after the budget has been passed is a copy sent to the faculty committee to which the society is constitutionally responsible. Although a constitutional veto does exist on financial matters, it has never been used, and society President Don Munro stated he does not expect it to be in the future, despite the fact that the last three budgets have all involved deficits.

The budget acts as a guide in that it can be changed in mid-year by approval of a motion at an executive meeting.

The St. Michael's College student administrative council receives its financial support in the form of a $14 fee paid by each student to the college bursar, in addition to his fees. The society fee is set arbitrarily.

The total annual budget of the council is more than $18,000, the highest next to the U of T SAC. The figure may seem high in relation to the number of students (more than 1,300), but the council underwrites to a large extent certain activities and lecture series for which additional charges would have to be made.

The disposition of the money is left entirely up to the council, subject to an administration veto. The council runs on a surplus every year which is used to sponsor a lecture series.

Each fall, the various clubs, organizations and guilds submit their budgets to the St. Michael's SAC Treasurer. He then includes them in his own budget which is submitted to and ratified by the council. The budget is subject to veto by the council faculty advisor.

Students of Trinity College have included in their fees a per capita levy of $2.25 which goes directly to the Trinity College Board of Stewards. This is the student government of Trinity College, under the leadership of Bruce Stavert, head of college. The board is not responsible for financing the various societies in the college, and if it were, the per capita grant would be about

The budgets of the literary, dramatic and athletic societies, the Trinity Review, and other activities are determined by the college administration. The funds are paid directly to the organizations, and not through the board of stewards. A budget change for any group must be approved by a general meeting of the students.

The budget of the board is drawn up by the treasurer, and approved by the 13 board members. The $2.25 fee for each student gives the board a budget of approximately $1,800, which is used for office expenses, year parties, the Blue and White committee, and the house committee. A change in the amount of money allotted can be made by the dean and provost of the college.

The board handles its own banking and signs its own cheques. A small additional income is received from investments and the sale of crests. The Buttery cafeteria is run by the college, and the board has no financial responsibility there.

The University College Literary and Athletic Society operates on an approximate budget of $16,000. The money is raised by a student levy of $7 for men and $6 for women. The money is transferred from Simcoe Hall to the Lit Treasury in a lump sum.

The budget is drawn up by the treasurer on the basis of requests received from the various clubs and organizations. The only approval required for the budget is from the students at an open meeting. (Average attendance at open meetings, however, is about three per cent). With the adoption of the new constitution next week, a budget change would be permitted in mid-year solely on approval of the executive.

The Lit handles its own banking, and receives income from reserves of $500 annually. Additional income is received from the rental of the JCR snack bar, the UC Follies, and the Undergrad. Income from the snack bar will cease next year with the opening of the new wing, which has been financed by the university and not the college.

According to the constitution, the treasurer cannot budget for a deficit, but for the last few years, the Lit has been operating at a loss which is met by the UC alums. Reserve funds cannot be used to balance the budget: they are kept for capital expenditure, such as on the UC Players' Guild.

Unless expenditures can be tightened, the Lit will be forced to increase fees by $1 next year.

Incidental fees paid by Victoria College students are divided between Athletics, the Student Union Building (Wymilwood), and the Victoria College Union. The annual budget of the Victoria student government is about $8,000, based on an allotment of $4 per student. In addition the per capita athletic charge is $1.25 for women and $3.73 for men, and the charge to both for the upkeep of Wymilwood is $7. The VCU does not administer the last two, but the athletic budget is submitted to and ratified by the union.

The money is spent on office expenses, musical productions, the Drama Club, the year executives, and other college interest groups. The budget of the VCU does not have to be approved by the bursar or the finance committee of the board of regents. However, the books are audited annually, as they are with all other campus student governments. The audit is then submitted to the board.

Student voice on B of G?

Miss Fearman's article on the request of the University of Manitoba Student Union Council for representation on its board of governors is of particular interest to those of us who have been associated with a like movement at U of T. Understandably, university administrators are surprised — and even shocked — that such a request should be made. They themselves are members of the depression generation that was thankful enough to even get an education, and therefore are generally unaware of the special responsibilities of a student for the nature and character of the alma mater into which he has been grafted. Times have changed. The recent action of the Quebec Legislature extending the franchise to 18-year-olds is a recognition by our political leaders of the maturity of contemporary young adults, and a recognition of their responsibilities toward the institutions of our society.

Last week, at Simcoe Hall, a highly placed official of the administration said to a group of student leaders that in his opinion the students have no greater rights to representation on the board of governors than does the faculty; the faculty is not represented; the students cannot expect more. It is certainly an incredible state of affairs that our mentors do not have representation of the board; but we may assume that they can look after their own interests from the olympian heights of the Primrose Club.

Students are in a different position (and this is something that the hard-headed businessmen on the board should certainly be able to appreciate) because we are the only group within the

Only love can unite Canada

By BONNIE MacLACHLAN

Madame Solange Chaput Rolland, co-author of "Dear Enemies" or "Chers Ennemis" will speak Tuesday at 4:15 p.m. in Rm. 215, UC.

"My own feeling is that nothing but a sense of love and of brotherhood can unite this disunited country."

So writes French-Canadian journalist Solange Chaput Rolland, co-author of Dear Enemies. In a series of letters exchanged with novelist Gwethalyn Graham, she confronts the problem facing Confederation.

The book is a dialogue, "human and simple", she writes, "... an effort to find out, simply and amicably, why it is so difficult for French and English speaking Canadians to have any real sense of unity".

Mme. Rolland possesses a keen insight into the strengths and weaknesses on both sides of the Anglo-French struggle. She is a French-Canadian, not an extremist, yet intensely proud of her identity. "I am neither a separatist nor a nationalist fanatic, but I am passionately attached to my French identity and relentlessly determined to defend it against anyone who would try to make me live in English."

The book is realistic. Both writers recognize the great potential of a bi-national state, but honestly face the formidable groundwork to be done to establish this. In her first letter Mme. Rolland writes, "The two cultures vegetate side by side; they grow poorer on a diet of French and English imitations and American butoonery because they have not yet discovered the richness of their own thinking".

Writing from broad educational backgrounds coupled with extensive personal experience, these two women cover many issues currently dividing Canada.

The separatist's goal, according to Mme. Rolland, is "as derisive as it is economically impossible to realize". The Quebecois owe to these movements, however, a sense of self confidence, and the exposure of their grievances in compelling terms.

She echoes Levesque's "too little too late" reaction to ceremonial biculturalism. "Our exasperation won't be alleviated by a few small concessions thrown at us like bones to a famished dog."

On church-state relations and education in Quebec she expresses honest concern lest freedom, "too much too soon", be misused.

In the field of politics Canada needs some political philosophers. We lack the initiative and audacity of the Americans and have been "lulled by centuries of conformity and a sense of superiority".

To increase understanding between the two ethnic groups these authors offer enlightened suggestions. They stress the importance of literary exchange between the two cultures. Grants should be offered by Canada Council for the translation of current representative literature. Both recognize the potential of the CBC, as a bulwark for Canada against cultural domination by the U.S., and as a unifying force within. Money now being spent on nuclear arms should be used to double the budget of the CBC. "Perhaps the best defense of Canada is the unity of Canada."

For the Anglo-French struggle Mme. Rolland is grateful: "We people of Quebec have been lucky enough, if you will forgive this unkindness, to have to fight against you, and this fight is a unifying force; it gives us an identity and to a certain extent enriches us."

This book is a meeting of two well-informed and perceptive minds and of two sensitive people. Solange Rolland and Gwethalyn Graham are a microcosmic representation of a divided country. Their friendship surmounts their ethnic differences, yet throughout these basic characteristics are preserved. Equality in presentation they offer; equality in recognition they demand.

U of M prof to speak on Quebecois survival

By CHARLES BEER

Professor Michel Brunet, head of the history department of the University of Montreal, will speak in Rm. 215 UC at 4:15 p.m. on the subject "Canada's Unity and the French Canadian survival."

Prof. Michel Brunet, head of the history department at the University of Montreal, will be on campus this week to speak on the subject "Canada's Unity and the French Canadian Survival".

Prof. Brunet is a noted Canadian historian best known for two works: Canadiens et Canadiens and La Presence Anglaise et Les Canadiens. In both books he deals with the problems facing a minority in its attempts to survive as a collectivity. He demands of his reader that certain blunt facts be realized by French and English Canadians. No more hazy dreams or false bonnetentism will do.

Essentially within Canada, there are two Canadas, and two nationalisms. One represents the majority English point of view, the other depicts the minority French outlook. Canadianism and canadienisme are not synonymous and never have been. He claims that the Boer War and the two conflicts over conscription can be seen as evidence of this. And whenever such a struggle takes place, it is inevitable that the majority's wish will prevail.

The Federal government is always the prime exponent of more centralization and in effect more Canadianism, which can only be countered by the Quebec government's demand for more autonomy, and more canadienisme to safeguard French Canada's collectivity.

Professor Brunet is not suggesting evil designs on the part of the Federal government, but simply shows that the strong centralization tendencies of the post war years were encroaching upon French Canada's ultimate future as a separate and non-assimilated entity. Thus although many English-Canadians feel that Ottawa should give more aid to the universities, the French-Canadian reaction is to seek more fiscal autonomy so that this aid can be given by the provincial government. The latter is canadienisme, the former Canadianism, and the difference for French-Canadians is not just a semantic one.

Behind it is Brunet's favorite theme of French Canada's survival as a collectivity, as a "nation". A strong provincial government can give the French-Canadian a pride in his people, and his sense of inferiority vis-a-vis the English-Canadian will disappear.

In 1958 Prof. Brunet called for action to rekindle the strength of French Canada in Canadian life. This could best be done by altering Quebec itself. "The hour has come for French-Canadian patriotism to free itself from the wordiness and exclusively cultural and mythical preoccupations of a romantic era. It must be living doctrine which is conducive to collective and useful action. The people are waiting for leadership. Will they be deceived once more?"

Prof. Brunet states that the stronger French Canada is, the stronger is the union: "For the common good of the country and of the French-Canadian nationality itself, it is necessary that this nationalism be channeled towards provincial objectives. The tranquility of the two Canadas demands this."

university community which pays directly towards the costs of the institution. Faculty and administration are in effect subsidized by our contributions.

As every British schoolboy knows, in a democratic society there should be no taxation without representation. Is it presumptuous for 15,000 students to ask for official representation at the only place where it really counts — the board of governors? The student simply wants the right to influence significantly the environment in which he must "live, and move, and have his being" for four important years of his life. It is a responsibility too precious to commit entirely into the hands of businessmen and bureaucrats.

Student committees run Hart House

By BRUCE LEWIS

"Who runs Hart House?" said the stranger.
 "The warden," said the student.
 "Who are all these fellows running around the house doing this and that?" said the stranger.
 "Oh, various hangers-on and busybodies who wander around looking important," replied the student.
 The above conversation exemplifies some thoughts a student might have on this topic if he has any thoughts at all. In fact, however, there is a great deal of variance between this position and the truth.

On paper, the house is operated by five standing committees (house, library, music, art, debates) and nine club committees (e.g., archery, bridge, chess).
 The club committees are in effect executive committees of the respective Hart House clubs. They organize activities and lead their groups in the same way as executives of college, faculty, SAC, or independent clubs. They are elected in the same way by the members.

The standing committees are each separate legislative bodies in charge of a particular sphere of activity within the House. They choose books, magazines, paintings, or records to be bought; arrange library evenings, concerts, art shows, or debates. Each committee also makes regulations governing the use of the parts of the House under its authority.

Other rooms and other activities are under the care of the House committee (the senior committee). (The Athletic Wing and athletic activities all fall under the jurisdiction of the University of Toronto Athletic Association.)

Committees are comprised of one graduate representative, two faculty members, one Hart House staff member, the Warden, and 11 students. Eight of the students are elected directly by the members of the House on a combined basis of faculty representation and popular support. The other three students are elected by the retiring committee from among its members in order to obtain continuity and experience for the new committee.

Nominations for the eight undergraduate members of each of the Hart House standing committees are open until 6:00 p.m. next Friday. Elections are on Wednesday, February 26. Further information is available from the undergraduate office or the bulletin board in the main rotunda of the House.

Decisions of the committees may be overruled by the Board of Stewards. (They seldom are.) Budgets must be approved by it. The only higher authority is the Board of Governors of the university, but nobody can remember an occasion on which the Stewards have been overruled.

There are nine non-students on the Board of Stewards. Two of them (the President of the university and the nominee of the board of governors, Vincent Massey) do not attend. There are eight students: representatives from the SCM, the Athletic Directorate, and the SAC; and the secretaries (heads) of the five standing committees. Thus, students effectively outnumber non-students in the supreme governing body of the House.

After this idyllic picture of student government, one wonders what the role of the Warden actually is. It must be remembered that he has no veto power and no independent decision-making authority. Nor do the members of the staff of the House have such authority.

Three main forces can be discerned in the operation of the House: the committees (almost entirely a student force), the Warden (and the staff), and tradition.

The fact is that there are no burning issues in the government of Hart House (except perhaps the admission of women and this is out of the hands of the members and the administration. When something has to be decided in a committee a student member may very well ask what the policy has been in the past. The Warden or another staff member will then explain.

The Warden's personal influence affects the working of the House in the same way. He and the members of his staff have a concern for the House, which is longer-lasting, more constant, and more pressing than that of the undergraduates.
 It is natural that his "guidance" (as the Founder's Prayer puts it) should leave its mark over the years on the character of the House.

But this is only guidance. Authority, responsibility, and power remain with the students in the committees.

Graeme Barber shines as Blues break record

By SHEL KRAKOFKY

Varsity swim Blues broke the native Canadian record for the 400-yard medley relay en route to defeating University of Western Ontario, 69-25, in a dual swim meet at Hart House Saturday.

Three of Western's top swimmers, Pete Fowler, Glen Davis and John Arblaster, were not at the meet but that didn't take away from the personal performance of the Varsity swimmers. Graeme Barber, Tom Verth, Pete Richardson, Rob Campbell, John Weekes, Stan Walker and Jim Parker all turned in their best times in at least one of the 10 swimming events.

Barber recorded his fastest time ever on his butterfly leg in the medley relay and was instrumental in the record breaking swim of 3:56.0, which broke the old record held by UWO by 1.4 seconds.

Varsity now holds every native Canadian relay record in the book over a short course pool (25 yards).

One of the veterans on U of T's team. Barber is improving every year. Western's Pete Fowler, rumored to have more years than Carter's has little pills, has beaten Barber in the 200-yard butterfly over the years. Saturday, Barber swam the distance in 2:13.3, 6 seconds better than his previous best time and 3½ seconds better than Fowler's best.

John Weekes was another impressive U of T swimmer as he finished second to Varsity's Tom Verth in the 100-yard free style by 1.8 seconds and was a member of the winning 400-yard free style relay team. In the 100-yard free, Weekes led for almost three-quarters of the race.

Mustangs only won two of the 11 events and both these events were decided by the judges. Alan Guthrie and Tom Verth were both timed in 23.2 seconds in the 50-yard free style, with Western's Guthrie getting the judges' nod. Verth, who is a middle distance swimmer and swam in the sprint event "just for fun" recorded his best time ever in losing.

Rod Govan beat Varsity's Pete Richardson in the 500-yard free style by a finger nail. Both swimmers were timed in 5:32.5.

100 yd. free style — 1. Verth (T) 2. Weekes (T) 3. Fanning (W). Time: 51.8.
200 yd. backstroke — 1. Wheeler (T) 2. Walker (T) 3. Fanning (W). Time: 2:21.7.

300 yd. free style — 1. Govan (W) 2. Richardson (T) Donald (W). Time: 5:32.5.
200 yd. breaststroke — 1. Chapelle (T) 2. Parker (T) 3. Graham (W). Time: 2:28.9.

400 yd. free style relay — 1. U of T (Barber, Weekes, Campbell, Richardson) 2. Western. Time: 3:33.4.
Diving — Smooga (T) 2. Carlyle (W) 3. Wagner (W). Winning points 170.45.

400 yd. medley relay — 1. U of T (Wheeler, Chapelle, Barber, Verth) 2. Western. Time: 3:56.0 (Canadian Record).

200 yd. free style — 1. Richardson (T) 2. Campbell (T) 3. Govan (W) Time: 1:57.2.

50 yd. free style — Guthrie (W) 2. Verth (T) 3. Ashenurst (T). Time: 23.2.
200 yd. indiv. medley — Chapelle (T) 2. Makosky (W). Time: 2:22.6.
200 yd. butterfly — 1. Barber (T) 2. Finlayson (W) 3. Campbell (T). Time: 2:13.3.

pions Windsor Lancers came close to having their two-year undefeated streak ended when they scraped by Queen's Golden Gaels, 83-78, Friday night in Kingston. Lancers had to rally in the second half to overcome a 43-31 half-time deficit.

Lancers then extended their league lead to four points by swamping winless McGill Redmen, 107-47, Saturday in Montreal. Second-place Waterloo Warriors stayed right behind Lancers but not before they were pressed into overtime to defeat Western Mustangs, 70-66.

Bob Horvath scored 19 points and Bernie Friesmuth 15 as Lancers bounced back against Queen's. Larry Ferguson had 18 and Doug Evans and Ted Waring 15 each for Gaels.

Friesmuth and Horvath led Lancers over McGill the next night, each scoring 16 points, while Gerry Horner and Bill Hassett scored 15 and 13 respectively. Bruce Randall of McGill was the game's top marksman, netting 23.

Warriors overcame a 15-point deficit against Western at Waterloo Friday to send the game into overtime. Jerry Raphael again led Warriors, scoring 21, Dick Aldridge had 15. Tom Williamson of Western dropped to third place in league scoring as he netted only 5 while Ken Barclay had 21 and Barry Mitchelson 19 for Mustangs.

Helmut Microy's win gives duellers title

The magic sabre of Helmut Microy has kept Varsity Fencing Blues on top all season, and this weekend the D'Artagnan of Hart House did it again. At the OQAA championships at McGill Saturday, Microy fought back from a 3-0 deficit in a sudden-death final bout to win 5-4 and give Blues the championship.

Microy's dramatic victory climaxed an undefeated season for Imre Hennyey's duellers. In winning, Blues upset defending champions Université de Montreal by a slim 55-54 margin.

Blues' strength is in the sabre and epee competitions, and this is where they earned most of their points. Both Microy and Nansung Ho compiled 8-1 records in the epee and Microy defeated his teammate in the final barrage to cop the individual championship.

In sabre, Peter and Matry Moskovits shone, both winning seven of nine bouts. Urban shared honors with McGill's Aldo Bensadoun as the meet's best sportsman.

Vladimir Hartschinski and Tony Advokaat contributed nine and three wins respectively to give Blues an overall total of 55 wins in 81 bouts.

Matmen pin 'gridders' but lose 21-20

Three members of Western's football team wrestled Varsity Saturday at Hart House but their gridiron savvy wasn't enough.

Jack Cowin, first draft choice of Winnipeg Blue Bombers, was the only victorious Mustang griddier as he pinned Ray Seto. Blues' Don Merker pinned Rob Campbell and Rick Riley pinned Dave Garland.

Western won the meet however, 21-20.

Other winning Blues were Clive Good and Alvin McKenzie.

123 lbs.—George Schnell (W) defeated Wayne Carney (T). 5-0.
130 lbs.—Clive Good (T) pinned John Eberhart (W).
137 lbs.—Al McKenzie (T) pinned John Watts (W).
147 lbs.—Ra. Shulman (W) defeated Bob Griggs (T). 4-2.

Do you agree that mass unemployment in a country like Canada, with its abundant resources, does not make sense?

You must agree that a large percentage of our citizens never have had decent homes, and are and have been living in poverty. President Johnson says that there are 40,000,000 Americans in this category - in the richest nation on earth.

Do you see any hope of persuading the Communist that we have a better system as long as such conditions prevail in North America?

Do you realize that we have thousands of millions of dollars lying idle in our banks on which we are unnecessarily paying hundreds of millions of dollars in interest annually in taxes? Do you realize that we are unnecessarily paying additional hundreds of millions of dollars in unearned interest on bonds, in taxes, and by cheapening our dollar through deficit financing - watering our money supply?

Do you agree that improved methods of production have given us such improvements in our standard of living as we have had - that production is our wages? Does it make sense to blame automation for housing, school, hospital, municipal service and other shortages?

If our economists, bankers, politicians knew what to do about our economic difficulties, wouldn't something have been done long since? We have had a dozen booms and busts in my lifetime. Wars and depressions - not brains - have been our only "saviours".

If you may be interested in a plan that will enable us to change the whole economic scene as from darkness to daylight without adversely disturbing any of our private enterprise constitution call-

Two late goals gain 2-2 tie

By GORD BELLMORE

Varsity hockey Blues increased their league lead to three points by playing to a 2-2 tie with McGill Redmen at Varsity Arena Friday night.

Blues have earned 14 of a possible 18 points in the standings and now have the biggest first-place lead enjoyed by any team so far this season. Varsity's closely-matched rivals, McMaster Marlin's, Laval Rouge et Or and Montreal Carabins, are tied for second place with 11 points although Laval and Montreal have played one less game than Toronto and McMaster.

With only three or four games left to play for each of the contenders, it promises to be the most exciting stretch drive on record. All four teams still have excellent chances to win the Queen's Cup.

Even with their present three-point lead, Joe Kane's Varsity crew is a long way from being a shoo-in for the title. Blues must still virtually win all three of their remaining games to be assured of their seventh Queen's Cup in 10 years, and two of those games are against McMaster and the other against red-hot Laval.

If Blues falter, Montreal Carabins, the Cinderella team of the year, have the best chance to walk off with the championship. Carabins are the only top team which does not meet one of the other contenders in their remaining games.

In Friday's game, Blues had to come from behind to salvage the tie with Redmen, their second with McGill this season. Defencemen Peter Speyer and Ian Sinclair scored within 24 seconds in the last four minutes of the game to overcome a 2-0 McGill lead.

Blues, who were late returning to Toronto after their game at Waterloo Thursday night, were obviously tired. Until they scored the two quick goals their play was sloppy and disorganized. This fact, combined with soft ice, made the game a sluggish, close-checking affair, and the home fans spent most of the night sitting on their hands.

Goals by Leon Abbott and Rick Gordon early in the third period appeared to be enough to give Redmen a big upset. But then Speyer scored at 16:15 on a picture effort that reminded one of the famous Bill Barilko goal that gave Toronto Maple Leafs the Stanley Cup in 1951.

Speyer took a pass from George Olah and fired a rising shot from about 30 feet out just as he was tripped. The puck grazed the inside of the goal post before goalie Ken Walters could catch it.

Sinclair then tied the count with a low drive from just inside the blues line. The puck travelled through a maze of players and caromed in off a leg.

Stray Shots: The three stars were McGill forward Johnny Taylor, Peter Speyer and Ian Sinclair. Taylor, a former Montreal Canadian Junior, had two clear chances for goals but shot wide once and was outguessed by Varsity goaltender Gary Aitken on the other.... George Olah had a finger dislocated but returned to the game. Olah was wearing the same gloves that Ward Passi and Stu McNeil wore when they were injured... Bryan Tompson took six stitches to his eyelid, Dave Kerr of McGill had eight stitches in the chin....

College Roundup

Marlins' bubble explodes

Until the past nine days, McMaster Marlin's had a most enviable record in intercollegiate hockey. Since entering the Senior Intercollegiate League two seasons ago, Marlin's had been undefeated in 30 straight games, winning 29 and tying one.

But Marlin's discovered during the past nine days that playing in the expanded seven-team league is not the same as playing in the old Western Division with weaker clubs. The defending national champions had their bubble burst and their hopes for another Queen's Cup deflated when they lost three games in a row, including two during the past weekend.

Laval Rouge et Or, the hottest team in the league at present, bombed Marlin's, 6-1, in Quebec City Friday and Montreal Carabins defeated them, 5-3, in Montreal Saturday. Carabins had taken a 7-6 decision a week before in Dundas, Ont.

The results moved Rouge et Or and Carabins into a second-place tie with McMaster, three points behind first-place Varsity Blues.

Harold Martel and Pierre Lachance each scored twice for Laval against Mac. Marcellin Tremblay and Gerard Guy added the others with Bob Pond counting Marlin's only goal.

Hard-rock centre Pierre Chabonneau sparked Carabins Saturday, scoring two goals in the second period to put Montreal ahead 3-2. Marlin's led 2-0 after the first period.

Jean Delorme, Gilles LeFort and Jean Cusson scored the other Montreal goals. Bobby Apps scored two for

Dave West takes over league scoring lead

Cagers play poor game, still score 103

By PAUL HENDERSON

Varsity basketball Blues exceeded the century mark for the first time in intercollegiate competition this season when they defeated McMaster Marauders 103-81 at Hart House Saturday.

But, paradoxically, Blues played one of their worst games of the year in posting the victory. Poor shooting and passing by both teams prevailed in the contest featured by fast but scrawny end-to-end action.

Blues caused much of the confusion by harassing Marauders with a press through out most of the game. Varsity coach John McManus used the press because Blues had the height to control the backboards and he wanted to force McMaster into inaccurate shooting.

Blues' six-foot, six-inch centre Ed Bordas collected his share of rebounds, particularly in the first half when Blues forged to a 49-30 lead. Bordas also scored 29 points, tops in the game, before fouling out with seven minutes remaining.

Dave West netted 28 points, many of them in the final minutes when Blues strove to gain the 100-mark. West scored only nine points in the first half and shot poorly in the late third and early fourth quarters.

His surge at the end, however, lifted his average to 24.6 points per game and moved him into first place in league scoring.

Varsity forward Dave Ouchterlony maintained the improved form he has shown in recent games to score 16 points and play well under the boards.

McMaster's Peter Ewing and Court Heinbuck hooped 17 points apiece to pace McMaster. The two shoozies shot well in the fourth quarter when McMaster outscored Toronto 35-25 after Blues threatened to turn the game into a rout. Jim Saddler added 16 for McMaster.

John O'Neill returned to action after missing three games with a leg injury and scored 13 points before fouling out at the end of the third quarter.

With Bordas and O'Neill out, Marauder centre Al Irwin collected more rebounds to keep Blues total down and enable McMaster to reduce the deficit. Toronto helped McMaster's cause and almost ruined their own chances or scoring 100 by losing the ball on a number of occasions before hitting the evasive mark with only 40 seconds left.

Under the Basket: — The game became so scrawny in the latter stages that referees Irv Salsberg and Ron Pleasance could not follow the action and differed on several calls.... Guard Bill Woloshyn's average dropped from 12.0 per game to 9.3 after his 3 points against Western and 2 against McMaster.... There were numerous empty seats in Hart House gym, the first time this situation has arisen for a weekend game in some time.... Jerry Raphael of Waterloo moved into second spot in league scoring when he picked up 21 points against Western. Raphael is averaging 22.9 points per game and Williamson 22.3. Williamson has played nine games and West and Raphael seven each.... Ed Bordas passed Bob Horvath of Windsor on the weekend. Bordas has an average of 17.80 for 4th spot and Horvath 17.75 for 5th.... Blues face their two toughest games of the year this week. They play second-place Warriors in Waterloo Wednesday and journey to Windsor to play the league leaders Saturday.

Blues: — Bordas (29), West (28), Ouchterlony (16), O'Neill (13), Baranowicz (5), Kimmel (4), Neldra (4), McKenzie (3), Woloshyn (3), Andrew. Marauders: — Ewing (17), Heinbuck (17), Saddler (16), Irwin (10), Daly (9), Baird (8), Stokus (4), Allingham, Wilson, Vederboncourt.

Says English awakening

While violence is deplorable, it took a few bombs in Montreal to awake English-Canadians to the plight of the French-Canadian nation, noted author Madame Solange Chaput-Rolland suggested to a concerned audience in University College yesterday.

And the bombs have had some effect on the causes of separatism, the French-Canadian collaborator of Dear Enemies explained.

Separatism is the outcome of the reluctance of time-honored English families in Montreal to speak or even learn the French language, Mme. Rolland argued, and such antagonisms between the "ghettos" of Montreal have pushed many young French-Canadians into separatism.

Mme. Rolland pointed out that in places like Quebec City, where the few English Canadians there get along cordially with French-Canadians, separatism is almost non-existent.

But since the FLQ bombings, the large number of Westmount Cadillacs outside the Berlitz school and the ever-increasing English circulation of Le Devoir are evidence of the efforts of the English to come to terms with their FC neighbors.

English Montrealers must be applauded for their patience with us during last summer's terrorism, Mme. Rolland added.

As for the question of bilingualism, the ebullient Mme. Rolland admitted she is simply "fed up."

"Why should English Canada be afraid of the French-Canadian language?" she pleaded.

French is not the guise for Papism, nor is the understanding of a language totally necessary for the understanding of the country, she argued. But she resents being ordered to speak English, she admitted — "it hurts."

Mme. Rolland went on to contend a strong Quebec is not incompatible with the principle of federalism, not "my country is Canada."

The second half of this lecture series on French Canada sponsored by the Canadian-Canadian Committee will be Thursday, when University of Montreal Professor Michel Brunet speaks on "Canada's Unity and French-Canadian survival."

CUCND pickets braved the cold winds of University Avenue to protest to U.S. consulate treatment of Canadians in Georgia.

High mental quiz response

The Students' Administrative Council announced last night an unprecedented 60-per-cent response to a student mental health questionnaire sent out last week to 500 U of T students.

Usually people conducting surveys consider a 15 per cent response a good one.

"But we would like as many more returned as possible," said SAC Vice-President Mary Pat McMahon.

"This will provide a broad base for discussion and will lend force to our suggestions, so it is very important."

The idea of the questionnaire was to provide an up-to-date factual look at the existing situation at U of T as seen by students.

The results will be tabulated by Canadian Facts, probably this weekend, and will be used at the mental health symposium at Trinity College Feb. 22.

Congress sees CUS petition

WASHINGTON (CUP-Special). A petition signed by 15,000 Canadian students has been brought to the attention of a United States Congress committee.

The petition, which calls upon Congress to pass the Omnibus Civil Rights Bill as a tribute to John Kennedy, was presented Monday by Greg Gallo, national president of the United States National Students' Association.

Mr. Gallo also presented messages and telegrams from 20 national unions of students.

He said: "This shows the world-wide interest and concern for the rights of the Negro in the U.S.A." He said he was particularly proud to be able to present the petition from Canada.

Alex Corns, USNSA rep for international affairs, telephoned Canadian Union of Students President Dave Jenkins in Ottawa to inform him of the presentation of the petition.

Mr. Corns stressed the value of being able to demonstrate "international student concern" on an issue of this nature which transcends national borders.

Jenkins, commenting on the presentation, noted that there were some individuals among Canadian students who feared this petition might be an infringement upon U.S. sovereignty.

"I hope that the reaction of the USNSA puts an end to these fears."

Increase civil rights group's scope

About $500 has been raised in three Ontario universities to aid three students who have been charged with subversive activities in Bloomington, Indiana.

The bulk of the money has come from University of Toronto contributions through the Committee to Aid the Bloomington Students.

But at the organizational meeting on Monday, C.A.B.S. decided to step up operations to collect more money. No specific goal was set.

The committee decided to enlist 30 or 40 professors to sponsor the committee as well as to make capital contributions. Several professors have already indicated their willingness to help.

C.A.B.S. plans to send protest letters and petitions to the Bloomington and Indianapolis newspapers.

Tom Morgan, one of the three students accused of sponsoring a meeting at which the guest speaker advocated Negro violence if necessary to gain civil rights, said earlier he thought pressure from Canada would be especially effective.

SAC President Doug Ward is chairman of C.A.B.S. He is planning to write letters to other Canadian universities asking them to join in the movement for academic freedom.

The committee is applying for Caput recognition to become an official campus organization.

A meeting of students and professors Tuesday decided Canadian academic opinion could be brought to bear most directly by letters written to the Bloomington Herald-Telephone protesting this alleged infringement on academic freedom.

Fourteen professors have already given their sponsorship to C.A.B.S.

CUCND stages embassy protest

Twenty-five members of the Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament picketed the U.S. Consulate General on University Avenue Monday afternoon.

The picketers passed out notices saying they were demonstrating in sympathy with seven Quebec-to-Cuba marchers jailed last week in Albany Georgia for picketing Turner Air Force Base near Albany.

Several leaders of the CUCND demonstration were admitted to an interview with the public affairs officer of the consulate, Edward Killeen, who heard their protest.

Ian Gentles (SGS), president of the Toronto CUCND, said later that with their protest they presented reports of police brutality to several of the marchers, but that Killeen said he had a statement from the Albany police chief that there had been no brutality.

"The officer had only one news report, a week old, and seemed very ill-informed on the case," Gentles said.

Killeen said that as far as he knew, there had been no brutality involved. He added that his information indicated that the arrests had been made because the marchers had refused to conform to a parade route laid down by the police chief.

Buvez - vous? ...

By BOB AARON

Prof. C. E. Rathe of Victoria College presented a lighthearted lecture entitled "Destination Europe en France" to an overflow audience at University College yesterday.

Prof. Rathe cautioned that the tourist in France should use the vernacular at all times, and always preface his remarks with an apology for his "abominable French."

Commenting on the infrequent use of English, he explained that the French are not willing to sell their "linguistic soul" to American tourists.

The French people are basically impatient and indifferent to politeness, especially with tourists, he continued. "The French nation can be described as bitchy because they are," he said.

The enthusiastic audience was advised to learn to tip sensibly and graciously, as tipping is a national institution in France. Prof. Rathe advised the prospective tourists to "tip as if you've always done it."

The professor warned that all guided tours in France should be avoided, except two. He recommended, first, a tour near Dijon, on which the tourists may enjoy samplings all day long at many of the Burgundy wine factories. The second tour which should not be missed, according to Prof. Rathe, is the Paris night club tour.

He advised his audience to be mature about drinking in public in France. He said that "Buvez-vous?" is a silly question in France.

We are not putting first things first in developing our country. We are putting jobs for money ahead of jobs for men. We've got bees in our bonnets — bbb — bankers and big business.

We have been brain-washed into believing that money works; that we must have money before we can produce something, anything, that can be sold for money, and that we will then have the money to buy what we want.

We have given the right to create money to private bankers, so the only money we have is borrowed money. If we paid our debts to the bankers we wouldn't have any money — there wouldn't be any for the public.

We have been brain-washed into believing that we must export or die; that we sell our exports for money with which we can buy Canadian products. This is not true. We don't get money for our exports. We don't get paid, as a nation until we take imports in payment of our exports.

We are depleting our God given resources in exchange for manufactured goods we should be producing ourselves. The real purpose of foreign trade is to import products we need and desire to enhance our standard of living — products not native to our country and that we cannot yet produce economically.

Money should not and need not be a problem in producing and distributing our needs more than milk tickets are a problem in producing milk. As electric current is generated simultaneously with the use of power, so "currency" can be created as evidence of — a certificate for produced wealth.

But we are still being brow beaten with the fiction that we must have gold behind our money so the money manufacturers can charge as much for creating money as if it actually were gold. Our private banker system is one of creating and cancelling — manufacturing and destroying money a half dozen to a dozen times in processing, completing and distributing every article we consume — the most haphazard and costly system imaginable.

I have developed a practical, economical, politician-proof system of issuing and controlling the volume of our required money supply which in no way interferes with the private lending of the people's savings in private enterprise, but which will enable us to end poverty in the midst of potential plenty.

Audience participation helps merrily-blazing pestle

By ERIC RUMP

The Knight of the Burning Pestle is an excellent play for any college group to perform. It has an abundance of action, humor of the broadest nature, songs and jigs, and parts which only require the actor to let himself go.

Its structure is interesting, being a play within a play, and, for the more literary, provides a study in mock-heroic, draped over a potential class-conflict, that gift to English dramatists, from the mystery cycles to John Osborne.

The play moves on three levels. At the centre is the play which the acting company is trying to perform. This is a tragedy-comedy involving two families, the Venturells and the Merrythoughts.

The audience, however, has different ideas of what sort of play they wish to see performed. The ones that enter the action are grocers, and they wish to see a heroic play that celebrates the nobility of the grocers trade in terms of knightly adventure.

Consequently, a grocer's son, Ralph, is brought out of the audience and put upon the stage. Having proved his competence by speaking a "huffing part" (a mangled version of Hotspur's speech on honor) he then gets dressed in his armour, and taking with him the two required companions, a squire and a dwarf, sets out into the deserts of Mile End to prove himself in knightly deeds.

These he finds, by fighting bravely, defeating the dreaded knight Barbaroso, and rejecting the love of Pompona in favour of his own Susan, the cobbler's daughter in Milk Lane.

He dies bravely at the end with an arrow in his head.

The audience provide the third level of action, both in their comments among themselves, and in the way they shape and alter what is going on stage.

Here the director took some liberty with the text, increasing the audience in size and nominally updating them to an Ontario audience of the 1840s. As this only meant a change of costume, not of language, the effect was negligible.

The play, if it had any locality, remained firmly in London, England, and not its counterpart.

Much of the comic effect depends on Ralph, the grocer turned knight. Ralph Heintzmann proved himself quite competent to deal with the part, growing in confidence as the play proceeded. He has a good voice, if he checks himself from straining, and a confident and reassuring presence on stage. He was at his best in the two set speeches, as the spirit of May and as a Henry V type figure addressing his bedraggled troops, though his death speech would have been more effective if the director had allowed him more agony but perhaps he wanted to avoid comparisons with Miller dying in Beyond the Fringe. Luce (Beth Morris) is clearly a well-trained actress and provided some nice touches in her playing of the part. Her father (Fletcher Stewart) looked sufficiently villainous and dried up inside, and produced a good series of comic rages. Merrythought (John Erb) is the oddest part in the play. He is the epitome of jollity, breaking into song at the slightest provocation.

At times the effect is slightly grotesque, as though one had suddenly wandered off into the drama of the absurd. John Erb looked superb — a rather tipsy Santa Claus — but I doubt if any of his songs could be heard beyond the first few rows of Hart House.

The direction was in the sure hands of Robert Christie, who clearly brought his years of professional work to bear upon the play. The group scenes were well-rehearsed and thus became an effective part of the whole play rather than a noisy nuisance on the side.

He kept the humor from descending into slapstick, except in the case of Humphrey (Nick Ketchum).

It seemed unnecessary to make him such a willow character, an Osric gone mad. The setting was neat and well designed, so no time was lost in suggesting a change of scene.

Finally a word of thanks for the four elegantly dressed musicians, who produced a jolly version of the Queen, and who played valiantly thereafter.

Photo exhibit opens

There have been numerous attempts made to create an international language. However, even the best known one, Esperanto, is far from being universal.

After the Second World War a new medium of expression made a rather successful bid to become an international vehicle of thought, as is shown by the great upswing in the number of international photo salons.

Most of these are advertised in large photo publications, and anybody may submit prints or color slides to have them exhibited (if good enough) along with the best work submitted from all over the world.

As pictures do not require translation, the viewer can appreciate the photographer's work directly.

Naturally the photographer will do his utmost to make a technically perfect print of a supposedly meaningful photograph. It is not uncommon to spend four to six hours on an exhibition print. A fair percentage of the pictures in the Hart House Camera Club's exhibition will be of international salon calibre. Several of the exhibitors have won awards or honorable mentions in international competition.

The 42nd Annual Exhibition of photographs will open in the Hart House Art Gallery February 17.

Correspondent to speak

Bert Whyte, foreign correspondent in China for the Canadian Tribune for nearly four years, will speak on "China Today" Thursday at 4 p.m. in Rm. 104 UC.

Mr. Whyte, whose speech will be sponsored by the U of T Communist Club, was in China from March 1960 to November 1963. He lived in Peking but travelled extensively throughout the country, visiting major cities and rural communes. Among the many interviews he obtained was one with Henry Pu Yi, the last emperor of China.

He also visited North Korea, North Vietnam and Mongolia, in each case interviewing the heads of state.

Bi-cultural debate

A panel discussion on bi-culturalism and federalism featuring two noted Canadian constitutional authorities will be held Monday at 8 p.m. in the Debates Room, Hart House.

Dean Ivan C. Rand of the faculty of law, University of Western Ontario, will join with Jacques-Ivan Morin, associate professor of law at the University of Montreal, in a discussion on "What Can We Do About Canada?" "The Bicultural Problem and the Future of Canadian Federalism".

Both men are noted for their knowledge of Canadian constitutionalism, Dean Rand having served as a justice of the Supreme Court of Canada until 1961, and for representing respectively, the English and French Canadian points of view on this subject.

academic co-operation

One of the suggestions made in the brief submitted to the provincial government by the Ontario council of university faculty associations was that there should be increased co-operation between the Ontario universities.

The brief went on to point out that "the luxury of completely separate and independent existence (for individual universities) is no longer possible."

The need for such co-operation has already been recognized by several groups, including faculty associations. The committee of presidents of provincially-assisted universities and colleges of Ontario has provided co-operation on the upper administrative level for several years.

The Ontario region of the Canadian Union of Students last month established a strong regional structure to provide a co-operative approach to provincial problems of students. One of the aims of the Ontario CUS group is to deal with the new government department.

The exhaustive brief submitted by the Ontario faculty associations is ample evidence of the teachers' collective concern with the provincial situation. While the brief was one of the most comprehensive reports ever compiled on the problem of higher education in Ontario, it was admittedly lacking in many areas.

One of the teachers' recommendations was that a permanent academic advisory committee be established to study higher education problems on a systematic and continuing basis.

The substance of the co-operation mentioned by the brief already exists, but so far it takes an unorganized and isolated form. Each of the three groups has established its own co-operative structure, but there is no co-operation among the three groups.

Until such co-operation exists, each of these groups will be dealing separately with the government.

Last summer President Claude Bissell said one of the greatest guarantees for university autonomy depended on co-operation among administrators, teachers and students within the university.

By the same token, the independent position of the Ontario universities will be largely dependent upon co-operation among the three groups on the provincial level.

The above editorial outlines the co-operation which exists, and the co-operation needed, between groups concerned with higher education in Ontario. There is only one group missing—the boards of governors of the provincial universities.

It has been pointed out that the present trend is one of increasing negotiations between university administrations and the government, with the boards of governors being bypassed in the business dealings.

One of the principal roles of a board of governors was originally to provide a buffer between the university and the government. Another has been to provide funds for the establishment of a new university.

Because it is improbable that many more new universities will be founded in Ontario, the last role is of decreasing importance. The first role would be eliminated by establishing the type of intermediary council suggested by the Ontario faculty associations.

Further, the boards of governors of most Ontario universities have recently frustrated attempts by teacher and student groups to obtain a position of increased autonomy in the university community.

This is particularly true at the University of Toronto, where the board is unwilling to grant more student autonomy, and where it will not even recognize the existence of the faculty association.

As Dr. Bissell has pointed out, co-operation within the university is needed. But there cannot be co-operation where there is not at least some degree of equality.

In view of all these developments it is obvious that in the future the boards of governors will become even more anachronistic than they are today.

Ignorance may excuse SAC cancellation of Jargon

By PHIL MAUDE

The SAC, renowned for its strict adherence to the cherished parliamentary traditions of indecisiveness and conservatism, added inconsistency and shocked a lot of students last year by cancelling Jargon, the campus literary magazine.

What prompted this decision remains a mystery.

A former Jargon editor suggested that the SAC was unhappy with the 1961-62 edition of Jargon which did not appear until the spring of 1963.

He said that the delay was due apparently to a rather cautious printer who felt that certain of the content was unprintable.

Another printer was found but by this time the summer had arrived and all the students had gone to Europe.

However the 1962-63 edition of Jargon came out nicely on time and everyone was happy, so it seemed.

Campus writers, having hibernated in their ivory towers, failed to realize that the cruel SAC had plugged the only outlet for their creative outpourings.

Imagine these poor, scruffy writers creeping out on groundhog day to see if their poems and short stories were in this year's Jargon, a meagre reward for endless hours spent rhyming in garrets.

Consider their consternation on learning that there would be no next year, no chance to rewrite. They must die unpublished. The Varsity? Never.

How many of these people resigned from university in disgust? How many petitioned to switch to Forestry, discarding their pens forever in hasty rage? How many applied for creative writing courses at Western or an American university?

COMMENT

Obviously no one really cares, least of all the SAC.

And so this year The Varsity devoted one issue to creative writing because it was felt that there should be some outlet for aspiring campus writers.

Surprisingly enough there were a large number of submissions and the editorial board published what it deemed most worthy.

Three letters were received commenting on the literary issue.

Perhaps it will be argued that the various College literary magazines are enough. These magazines attain a limited circulation within the specific college.

Management of these magazines often seems cliché and discouraging to the fledgling writer. And then, what if you have switched to Forestry and change your mind?

But it is not the place of a newspaper such as The Varsity to undertake the responsibility of providing students with a campus-wide literary magazine.

It is the responsibility of the SAC. By discontinuing the publication of Jargon the SAC has deprived students of a longstanding privilege and a valuable opportunity.

Would-be politicians have the Model Parliament, cultural exchangers have their weekends down south and music lovers have the Brothers Four but any future Leonard Cohens that may exist will have to be content with the washroom walls at Sidney Smith.

Peter Gzowski, managing editor of MacLean's Magazine, recently told a group of students in a Hart House speech that the university discouraged creative writers.

One can only imagine the surprise with which Mr. Gzowski would greet the news that the student body, as represented by the SAC, was not going to be outdone in this respect.

This year's SAC is not entirely to blame since it was not responsible for the original cancellation. But by letting the decision stand the present SAC is guilty of complicity.

In this case ignorance may be some excuse.

Student councils have wide powers

By BOB AARON

An investigation of policy and administration responsibility in the five student governments shows wide differences across the campus.

The Engineering Society, under its seven-man executive, has almost complete autonomy in policy matters, and is one of the most financially independent student organizations on campus.

Constitutionally and in practice, the society is responsible to the Engineering Society sub-committee of the faculty council. The committee is composed of six staff members and is the liaison between the faculty and the Engineering Society.

The society has complete control over policy decisions, such as its support of the March for Canada, the Hart House Art Gallery, and the Canadian Heart Fund. Matters of student discipline are usually referred to the society by the administration.

The St. Michael's College student administrative council, under President Rick Patrick, is subject, in effect but not constitutionally, to the veto power of the St. Michael's College senate. This veto has never been used.

The 15-member council also has a non-voting faculty advisor to act as liaison between students and administration. Council members are given portfolios, such as Fine Arts, which is concerned with the St. Michael's Music and Theatre Guilds. The portfolio-holders administer the various departments and are responsible to council for the area in concern.

Recent intervention by the faculty in matters of student policy probably accounts for the absence of a Combined Universities Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament organization on the St. Michael's campus. The council president believes, however, that the St. Michael's SAC has a good degree of autonomy in policy matters.

The Trinity College Board of Stewards is the student government under the leadership of the head of college and the head of arts. The board is chaired by a member of the faculty, who is chosen by the students to act as a liaison between the staff and the student government.

Many major changes in the operation or policy of the board must be approved by a general meeting of the students of the college. The board, without the staff member, is called the discipline committee, and is delegated authority in all disciplinary matters within the college. Constitutionally, however, the board is responsible for all its actions to the Trinity College administration.

The University College Literary and Athletic Society, under President Phil Epstein, is responsible to no one other than the students of UC. The Lit has entire control of student-run activities at the college and has complete control over policy decisions.

Although not specified in the constitution, the executive of the Lit works in close co-operation with the principal of the college and the college council. As a rule, there is no interference with Lit activities, but the executive does consult on a co-operative basis with the principal on matters such as freshman weekend.

A new constitution is scheduled to replace the old, unworkable document next week. It will make the executive supreme, subject only to the actions of an open meeting, called by petition. The general feeling is that the Lit should not have to call time-wasting open meetings on any slightly controversial matter.

The Victoria College Union, under President Sandy Burnett, is constitutionally responsible to the student body. There is, however, a de facto control by the board of regents of Victoria College in that major financial changes must be approved by the board, and any change in physical facilities must also be approved.

The VCU has wide control over policy matters. Open meetings are called over controversial issues or upon petition. At open meetings, policy can be reversed or members impeached.

The board has no constitutional veto over the activities of the union. Matters of conflict are usually negotiated outside of meetings.

B. A. burlesque queen to talk on stripping

By BOB SOROKOLIT

Libby Jones, one of the most successful of the 7,000 strip-teasers in the United States, is also one of the most unusual.

She is writing a book called Barely Speaking—about burlesque of course; she is finishing preparations for her own Broadway show called Burlesque Goes Legit; she plays chess; she gives lectures; and—get this—she has an arts degree in English literature from the University of Washington.

She's appearing now at Toronto's Victory Burlesque Theatre.

"Like many young people I was irritated with society and stood on every soap-box at university defending whatever minority group that was being attacked. For some reason Americans must hate, and there are minorities everywhere that they must hate," she told a Varsity reporter.

"But the beautiful paradox is that now, just because I am a stripper, people listen to what I have to say. It astounds me."

Libby attacks hypocrisy: "People condemn burlesque, yet the stripper is there by public demand only. . . . and I am against any kind of censorship of morals since no one can really legislate them."

Libby loves books: "I enjoyed Fanny Hill immensely, except that it became repetitious . . . but I hated Chaucer in college, he was a tedious writer with no flair in a terrible era . . . and I've got to be spicy and hot, discuss promiscuity and the lesbian element in my own book according to my literary agent in order to sell, with all the other hot competition presently."

Libby philosophizes: "I think we are in the second sex revolution—the first was in the 20s—but the vast element of sadism which now seems to be replacing it is quite decadent."

But Libby is still a strip-tease dancer who comes on with her sophisticated long leggy look and a slinky shape that stacks up to 36-24-36, in round figures, true to her billing as the "Park Avenue Play Girl" and takes off on the run-way as if she enjoyed it.

And she does.

"It's great fun, and I love to entertain people. I have travel and money, and I'm a social out-cast, which just delights me. There is no conformity, and I can think and act freely. Performing is in my blood now and I'll probably perform until I am 80, but I have my eyes on comedy since my figure will probably give out by then."

She was married for her last two years at college, but is divorced now and has no more desire for marriage.

"I adore men; they're fine and I love going out, but marriage is not for me."

Like one of the other strippers I talked to at the Victory, Libby admitted that she was an "active nudist."

"An inner-sanctum group had this kick at college, and I found it a pleasant experience. Now it's a convenience."

The a-peeling Miss Jones said she became a stripper like a snowball becomes an avalanche; "It came out of the blue. I was an aeronautical secretary, unhappy with life in the doldrums like many young people. One day I went with some friends to a Portland strip-theatre, they challenged me, and that night on a dare I was on the stage. Before I came on, the other girls (one was Tempest Storm) gave me the mechanisms (stripping movements). But I was so nervous that I took my clothes off almost before I got on-stage."

She smiled as she recalled a "horrible experience" in an audience-participation show in a Catskill night-club, much like the strips in Paris' famous Lido.

"I was late and I hurriedly pinned my leg-socks to my panties before I came on. But once I started dancing, the laws of tension and gravity took over. It was embarrassing. I looked down and I was completely nude. My drawers had been pulled down by my hose."

Libby said she started crying and then ran off in tears. It was only the third month that she had been disrobing publicly for fun and profit, and she wasn't supposed to finish her act with a body-wide bare cheek.

"Now I just use lingerie and there are fewer gimmicks to worry about."

Libby gives the impression of a frank girl-next-door who honestly is true to herself and others and really loves what she does.

But she still has the glamor which every entertainer must have: mink coats; a family of miniature poodles; expensive spectacular clothes; a New York suite; and a 700-record collection from Bach to Bartok which she used to take on the road with her until the springs of her convertible gave out.

Yet she is an exciting personality who has spoken at doctors' conventions, to 1,200 New York police men, to a sociology class at Columbia University, and a Rotarians' meeting in Toronto last Tuesday.

Asked to speak at the University of Toronto. And happily she agreed.

So if you should miss her show this week, you can see and hear Miss Libby Jones B.A. on a topic which one Las Vegas newspaper man labelled "The Sociological and Psychological Aspects of Strip-Teasing".

Libby has tentatively consented to delay her trip to an engagement in Buffalo Friday night, and she will appear in civilian clothes, and not in her working attire, in Rm. 2102 at Sydney Smith Hall, Friday at 1 p.m.

Berton bombasts Co-ops

A reporter's job is to report the facts and not the truth. Sometimes you have to take the chance of being sued. The space some newspapers give some parties is due to unconscious bias.

Pierre Berton aired all these views at a Campus Co-op coffee break last night, answering questions on "journalistic freedom."

Sued for libel four times, twice for $250,000, and all defeated without retraction or out-of-court action, Mr. Berton criticised present obscenity laws and "sacred cows," such as capital punishment, that prevent frankness in the printed word.

"The law should say that anyone can read whatever they damn well please in this country," he said in answering a query on the recent Fanny Hill book seizures.

Mr. Berton said he left the Toronto Daily Star without "pressure". He said "had never gone out of (his) way looking for controversy" for his Star column.

Sidestepping any strong comment on his leaving Maclean's Magazine after a controversial column on sex last May, Mr. Berton termed the incident an "unsuccessful experiment... the article was simply submitted and printed." He said he was out of town during the time complaints were being made.

He added that he was pressured from "all fronts" after the article was printed. Radio station CHFI's sponsor for his program withdrew after saying they would stay for three months, he said.

He also received pressure from Catholic and Anglican lay groups, he said.

SUE FIRTH FIFTH AS U OF M WINS SKIING

Louise Thibeault of the University of Montreal and Martha Shearer of Bishop's University rocketed their teams to slalom and downhill victories in the Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Union Ski Championships at Lennoxville, Que. Saturday.

Varsity placed fourth in the overall team standings with Sue Firth gaining fifth spot in the combined downhill and slalom events. The 19-year-old skier, a former Ontario Junior Champion and recent winner of the Southern Ontario Women's "B" Class Combined title, ran a cautious downhill race to place eleventh with a time of 38.4, 3.7 seconds behind Miss Shearer.

The icy slalom course took its toll of seven of the field of 30, as Miss Thibeault "Christied" her way to a 64.4 second win. Miss Shearer came close behind and thus tallied 5.16 F.I.S. points to take the combined met title.

Despite Miss Shearer's superb effort, Bishop's University was only able to take third place behind University of Montreal and McGill, placing first and second respectively.

Also skiing for Varsity were Natalie Bandera—Sue Foster (both recent Class "C" qualifiers), Penny Findlay, and Jane Dennison.

In other action on the weekend, Varsity teams hopped to Montreal and lost a squeaker to Queen's in basketball but gained redemption by copping bowling and fencing titles.

The 38-31 basketball fiasco proved as exasperating to the spectators as it did to the players. Sloppy ball handling and inaccurate shooting seemed to be the theme for the night.

Jo Bascum led the goal-hungry Queen's pack with 19 points. The only other player to make double figures was Varsity's Judy Archer, who had 14. Sharon Dandy's usually large jump-shot-output was limited to 3 goals while Tina Cameron registered a solid 4 along with outstanding backboard activity.

Toronto bowler's Dianne Lord, Anne Yonson, June Murphy, Maureen Thomson, and Joan Richards defeated teams from McGill and Queen's. Miss Richards highlighted play with top triple score, 777, and top single, 351.

The fencing results, based on Federation Internationale d'Escrime Rules, required IBM machines to finally crown the Toronto team. Although the Varsity girls were defeated by McGill, 10 bouts to 6, they were able to salvage the title on the basis of only 78 hits against while McGill had to admit to 90 against.

Jean Mackworth showed the best win-lost record 7-1. Carolyn Hale and Betty McRae each won 3 while Debbie Webster registered 5 victories.

This weekend Varsity hosts the Intercollegiate Archery Tournament while the basketballers travel to McGill and the hockey team to O.A.C. for the first phase of their two-week-end tournament.

It's a mad, mad, mad, mad scramble

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

The supposed havenots of the interfaculty Group I hockey circuit seem to have "it" after all. Recent action has turned the group into a five-team scramble and every team now has a chance at the Jennings Cup.

Meanwhile, there are ominous rumblings from Group II, which has a strong contender in the Trinity A team that won eight straight after losing its opener, 3-2 to Vic II.

School of Practical Science Seniors added another Group I upset to the pile, smearing defending champion Victoria College, 3-0. Keith Bowen potted two for the engineers, Bryan Elwood added a singleton.

Earlier, goals by Dave Conway and Barry MacDougall gave St. Mike's A a 2-0 win over Sr. Skule and a one-point edge over PHE I for third place.

Trinity A won another pair, knocking off Dentistry A and Victoria II by identical 4-0 scores in Group II. A third encounter saw Medicine A keep a firm grip on second spot with a 3-2 squeaker over St. Mike's B.

The last undefeated team in interfac competition bit the dust Monday. Sporting five wins and a tie in six outings, Law was shut out 2-0 by Forestry on goals by John Powell and Harry Struik.

BASKETBALL

A pair of upset victories have moved Sr. Skule into a third-place tie with St. Mike's A in Group I. Grant Leishman was the difference in both games, potting 18 points in a 44-41 win over SMC A and 15 in yesterday's 35-32 squeaker over UC I. Alby Garbe led Redmen with 11.

Jr. SPS moved into a first-place tie with Medicine A with a pair of wins, 29-25 over St. Mike's B and 32-20 over winless PHE II. Meds A scored its seventh win in eight games, edging St. Mike's B, 49-46. The doctors now have two games in hand over Jr. SPS.

UC's junior Redmen made it six wins in seven starts with wins over PHE (31-25) and Law A (33-29). Elsewhere, St. Mike's B plastered Dents A, 55-22.

There is a three-way tie on top of Group III. Pharmacy A, Meds B and Vic I each have 10 points, but Vic has played two extra games. Meds B took Architecture A 31-21, but the architects bounced back to upset Vic I, 36-32, on a 16-point effort by Richard Track.

WATER POLO

Victoria College put the first blemish on PHE's perfect record, holding the natives from Hart House to a 7-7 draw. Don Wheeler scored a hat trick for Vic.

A hat trick by Mike Chapelle paced Sr. SPS to a 7-0 win over winless UC, while a four-goal effort from Graeme Barber helped Meds I yr. upset Meds IV yr., 5-4.

Dentistry ran its record to 3-0 atop Group II with a 10-4 triumph over winless Meds II yr., while New College kept pace with a 12-3 rout of SPS II featuring a seven-goal outburst by Ron Kellerman.

Jurgen Kontor scored nine in Pre-Meds II yr.'s 17-0 pasting of Trinity B. Trinity A whopped Vic II, 10-1, as Mike Treadwell hit for seven.

Gimme back that silver medal

By UNCLE MAX

Third-year economic student and part-time runner Bruce Kidd gets a chance to balance the books against a red-hot rival when he encounters Australia's Ron Clarke in a two-mile run at the New York Athletic Club Games Thursday. It was Clarke who nipped Kidd for the silver medal at the end of the long stretch of the British Empire Games three-mile at Perth in 1962.

Clarke comes to North America on the crest of a fine summer season Down Under in which he chalked up several excellent times, including world records in six-mile and 10,000-meter runs.

Two weeks ago the Melbourne school teacher handily beat recent Toronto visitor Albie Thomas in a 5,000-meter run. Clarke's time was a sparkling 13:45.4.

Kidd will be shooting for his third consecutive two-mile win at the NYAC Games. A year ago at Madison Square Garden, the Varsity ace ran 8:39.0 to set both meet and Canadian records for the distance.

Hart House teammate Bill Crothers will be out to dispel the Sports Illustrated jinx which struck him down last weekend at the Los Angeles Times Meet. If the early pace is sufficiently fast, Crothers should set a new world record for the boards 880-yard run.

RMC backs out of boxing meet

Tony Canzano and his Varsity boxing team was dealt a disappointing blow when Royal Military College announced this week it will be unable to compete in the unofficial intercollegiate championship at Kingston Saturday.

Major Danny McLeod, head of athletics at RMC, said RMC's boxing team has been depleted by injuries and academic difficulties and would not be prepared for the meet.

Canzano has been training his boxers in anticipation of the RMC meet. When Queen's dropped out of intercollegiate boxing competition last year only U of T and RMC were left with Canadian college teams. Now Varsity lacks even one Canadian opponent.

Since RMC is not a member of the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association there was to be no official intercollegiate championship this year. But the meet with RMC was to be regarded as an unofficial championship.

McLeod said RMC may possibly be ready to face Varsity Jan. 29 at Kingston.

A promoter's dream

Four teams still in trophy race

By GORD BELLMORE

The best feature of the newly-expanded Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League has been the closeness of the race for the Queen's Cup, emblematic of the league championship.

This is the first season for the seven-team league, which replaced the old two-division setup, and the result has been a promoter's dream. With less than three weeks remaining in the schedule four of the seven teams still have a good shot at the Queen's Cup. Pre-season estimates indicated McMaster Marlin's, the defending champs, and Varsity Blues would fight it out for the silverware. This forecast looked good early in the season as Marlin's jumped into the top spot from the beginning. But the picture is now somewhat changed as McMaster has lost its last three games and is on the verge of being eliminated.

Blues lead Marlin's, Montreal and Laval by three points but as strange as it seems Blues are not home free in the title race. Laval and Montreal each have played one less game than Varsity and have easier schedules in their remaining games than either Blues or Marlin's.

Blues have one factor in their favor, however, in that they can win their own show. If Blues win their three remaining games the Queen's Cup is theirs for the seventh time in 10 years.

The home-and-home series between Varsity and McMaster had been expected to decide the championship. Although it won't, the two games in the next week are crucial for both teams.

McMaster plays last-place Waterloo Warriors tonight in Dundas Ont., and if Marlin's lose they will be out of the running. But if they defeat Waterloo, which is most probable, the games against Blues here Friday night and in Dundas next Wednesday will decide their fate.

Blues and Marlin's haven't clashed since November, when they played a home-and-home pre-season exhibition series. Varsity won both games, 5-3 and 4-3.

Blues close their schedule one week from Friday at Varsity Arena against Laval, the hottest team in the league at present. Ronge et Or are undefeated in their last four games and have won their last three.

Ronge et Or meet Queen's twice and McGill in their other remaining games. Montreal Carabins, who have the easiest schedule, face Queen's twice, McGill and Waterloo.

Stray Shots: Queen's plays at McGill in tonight's other game . . . Bobby Apps of McMaster regained the league scoring lead on the weekend from Waterloo's Don Mervyn, who had been the leader for two weeks. Apps has 22 points, one more than Mervyn and three more than Hank Monteith of Varsity. Monteith moved into third spot after getting two goals and four assists against Waterloo last week.

The Varsity rookie had originally been credited with only three assists in the game . . .

Harold Martel of Laval leaped into a tie for fourth place with six goals and an assist in two games last week. Martel, who is tied at 11 goals with Stan Sharmann of Waterloo for the league lead, has netted nine goals in his last four games.

Two leading cage scorers meet head-on in Waterloo

By PAUL HENDERSON

The two leading scorers in the Intercollegiate Basketball League clash for the first time this season when Varsity Blues encounter Waterloo Warriors in Waterloo tonight.

Varsity guard Dave West currently holds down top spot with an average of 24.4 points per game and Waterloo centre Jerry Raphael is close behind, averaging 22.9.

Both players, all-stars last year, passed Tom Williamson of western in scoring last weekend when Williamson was held to five points by Waterloo. Williamson, scoring champ in 1962-63, owns an average of 22.3 points over nine games.

Blues have a chance to catch second-place Waterloo before the end of the season but will first have to accomplish the difficult task of ending Warriors' undefeated record at home. Blues have won four and lost three while Warriors have dropped only one game in seven, that to Windsor in the Border City.

Warriors are led by Raphael but possess five stong players in their starting lineup. Bob Pando is 15th in league scoring, Jim Hann 17th and Dick Aldridge 21st. They have averages of 12.0, 11.7 and 10.6 points respectively.

Two other Blues advanced in scoring during the weekend. Ed Borda moved from 5th to 4th spot and Dave Ouchterlony forged from an unranked position to 14th place. Ouchterlony has also been collecting more rebounds and is Blues' most improved player over the second half of the schedule.

The sole Blue to drop out of the ratings was Bill Woloshyn, who tumbled from 15th spot after netting only five points in his last two games.

Under the Basket: — Nolan Kane returns to action for the first time this year after allowing an injured leg to heal . . . All Blues are healthy for tonight's game.

Versatility is the key

Davison wins Copp

Ken Davison, one of the most versatile performers in the Senior Intercollegiate Football League, was awarded the Johny Copp Trophy for 1963 at Varsity Blues' football banquet Saturday night.

The award is made annually to the Varsity player adjudged most worthy by his teammates on the basis of performance, character and sportsmanship.

Blues' head coach Dalt White described Davison as "the best choice for the award because he did so many things for us."

The 5-foot-8, 165-pound halfback did everything for Blues except play trumpet during the half time shows. A wingback on offence, he also played defensive halfback and ran back punts and kick-offs. He was selected as an all-star defensive halfback by the coaches in the intercollegiate league.

During the six-game schedule, Davison scored one touchdown, caught 9 passes for 154 yards and intercepted 2 passes. Statistics don't tell the whole story, however. His fierce competitive spirit in games and practice was an inspiration to his teammates who acknowledged this fact with their choice.

A third-year Dentistry student, Davison is the first Copp Trophy winner in five years not to come from School of Practical Science.

U of T snags loot but Bissell cool

The University of Toronto will receive operating and capital construction grants totalling $24,911,000 from the provincial government during the fiscal year 1964-65.

This figure, announced in the budget brought down at Queen's Park by James Allan, treasurer of Ontario, Wednesday, is almost one-quarter of the total of $101,296,000 of such grants which the province will give to universities.

With the $5,500,000 allotted to the suburban Scarborough and Etobicoke colleges and $1,900,000 for the Ontario College of Education, the share of these grants which will go to U of T approaches one-third of the entire grants budget.

U of T President Dr. Claude Bissell said the province had recognized university needs in its budget. He remarked, however, that the university would have to proceed more slowly with its building program than it would have wished.

Provincial funds available to universities this year have been increased $30,500,000 from the 1963-64 figure, but are still 28 per cent below the $140,000,000 which the universities said last fall was a minimum.

The $101,296,000 figure is made up of $47,696,000 in direct grants for operating costs, extended graduate programs and special purposes, and $53,600,000 in loans from the Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corporation for capital construction programs.

Second-largest slice of the provincial pie will go to York University, which will receive $9,300,000.

A total of 16 universities, colleges and schools will receive grants totalling $96,546,000. The remainder will go for Ontario Graduate Fellowships, a special fund available to universities for temporary accommodation, and scholarship, bursary and loan assistance.

Reaction from the universities was generally favorable although some disappointment was expressed with the government's refusal to pay for residences.

Dr. J. G. Hagey president of Waterloo University, was among those who felt that the province should underwrite the cost of the residences. He said Waterloo had planned a $6,000,000 expansion program and had hoped to write off an earlier $3,000,000 debt. Under the budget released Wednesday, Waterloo will get only $5,200,000 in capital grants.

"It is difficult," Dr. Hagey remarked, "to avoid the impression that the new universities outside Metro Toronto are penalized for geographic position."

York University President Dr. Murray Ross said: "The amount given to York is directly related to the need. The need for spaces in Metro is greater than in any other part of Canada and our expansion program is directly related to that need."

U of T PCs split over Diefenbaker issue

The campus Progressive Conservative Club's members yesterday split at their election meeting and banquet. A new wing was formed which does not uphold John Diefenbaker as national party leader.

John Zaritsky (II Trin) is leader of the new wing, which he described as "the true Conservative Party, not the Diefenbaker Party."

The split came after every candidate that the anti-Diefenbaker faction put forward in the club's election of officers was voted down by a pro-Diefenbaker majority at the meeting. When the faction presented a motion of non-confidence in the new executive, chairman Dave Woodward (II Trin), club president ruled the motion out of order.

During the PCs' banquet last night, Sheldon Gilbert (III UC) was named first vice-president, and deputy leader, and Robert Huston (III Trin) executive vice-president.

Phil Buckner (III Trin) was elected president of the Conservative Club in the afternoon. Others elected were: Jules Kronis (III UC), exec. vice-pres.; Robert Bradford (III UC), first vice-pres.; Richard Guisio (II SMC), second vice-pres.; Vic Rudzik (III Vic), third vice-pres. (to whom Zaritsky lost); Richard Hetherington (II New), fourth vice-pres.; and Joel Miller (III APSC), fifth vice-pres.

An equally long slate of officers for the new wing, which holds a meeting Monday, was drawn up.

Man wears brain outside skulls

By JIM MacKENZIE
Varsity News Editor

The only part of himself man has not extended, physically, is his consciousness. Speaking Wednesday, Dr. Marshall McLuhan of St. Michael's College said this final extension would be the ultimate in technological developments in communication, but that it also could be the ultimate danger to man.

Opening this year's "Current" series on Progress Reconsidered, Dr. McLuhan told a packed West Hall in University College that this final extra-sensory-perception extension would enable students to "know Greek or Hebrew the way they see light."

It would make push-button warfare impossible because of universal inter-knowledge, but might also end the world: man could become schizophrenic, as in the movie Dr. Strangelove, and end the world, Dr. McLuhan considered.

Dr. McLuhan outlined the psychic effects on man of his physical extensions from the time he first used a stirrup, wore clothes, spoke, wrote a message, or found electricity — the beginning of the present "electric age" of information.

"When man extended himself in clothes, he could conserve his energies for specialization. . . . Speech, an extension, speeded communication. Now man could store, amplify thoughts. . . . Man could store thought in writing and extend his power via messages."

The psychic effect on man of this power made him create a "classified learning structure," the antithesis of the "pattern recognition" of early oral man who compressed data in myths, and the electric-age man who is being forced to compress an overload of data back into myths.

Dr. McLuhan described the effect of the progress in man from this increased communication as an "extension of the central nervous system of electric means." Where man extended his foot earlier, he now extends his nervous system which becomes unprotected by body covering in the process.

"We wear our brains outside our skulls," he said.

To make up for his poor preparation to meet the heavy data of the electric age, man is being forced to abandon conventional learning methods of data processing for pattern recognition, the noted communications expert said.

This is the process that enables IBM cards to contain an entire telephone directory, he said.

This would have such an effect as an extension of what he called present "government by Newsweek." Where governments test their policy by giving people a hint in the press and wait for reaction in a pattern, so government could respond in a way that would create a "complete democracy," he said.

At a seminar in Hart House last night, Prof. McLuhan expanded the theme which he had presented at his earlier lecture. Primitive man was totally involved with his world, he said. Technological man was fragmented and specialized; electric man is totally involved once again. On freedom — man for the first time in history is free. Because of the speed-up in communications events happen so quickly that we can now see, and control, their direction.

"The uniqueness of Bergman lies in the fact that he dares to deal with problems other moviemakers sidestep completely."

So said the Rev. Marc Gervais, a Jesuit, in a lecture here Wednesday.

Bergman's early works, Father Gervais said, were concerned with an examination of man's relationship to man. "Here there is sheer nihilism, life is a torture, and death is always in the background."

In this period, he said, men and women live together on the principle: "Better Hell together than Hell apart."

In the second period, he said, there is a swing towards optimism. It is in Bergman's last period, Father Gervais said, that evidence for a turning towards religion for an answer to life can be found.

Total enrolment at University of Toronto has reached 26,350 for the current academic year, Robin Ross, the registrar, reported Wednesday.

This includes full-time and part-time students studying for degrees, diplomas and certificates at the undergraduate and graduate levels. It is an increase of 2,503 over the previous year.

The winter session that started in September has 19,601 students, an increase of 1,388.

"There is no permanent solution to the problem of French Canada. It will only be resolved by the complete assimilation of Canadiens by Canadians."

The speaker, Prof. Michel Brunet, head of the department of history at the University of Montreal, was addressing an audience yesterday on "Canada's unity and French-Canadian survival."

Dr. Brunet, a leading member of the "Montreal School" of Canadian history, in answer to questions, replied: "The solution is not separatism."

In characteristic good humor he added: "If I wanted to be dramatic, I would say French Canada was condemned to survive."

Oops, plop and so on. The U of T modern dance club has its ups and downs.

FOR ONE MONTH.

Today is St. Valentine's Day, the day traditionally reserved for expressions of requited love. This year Feb. 14 is also the last day to decide whether you've a snowball's chance of passing this year. If not, better forget your undying love, and see the registrar instead.

Dr. Jerzy Olszewski, head of the department of pathology at the Faculty of Medicine, died at Toronto General Hospital early yesterday. He was 50. Dr. Olszewski was one of a team currently engaged in research on Parkinson's disease on a $1,000,000 anonymous grant.

The psychological and sociological aspects of stripping will be revealed by Libby Jones, B.A., in a special lecture by one of the "pros" today at 1 p.m. But the literary runway has been shifted to West Hall, Rm. 202 in University College, since the original lecture-room in Sidney Smith Hall was too small for the expected turn-out of 300 students.

The world jazz-playing record was broken last night by eight McMaster University students. They played non-stop for 86 hours.

Economics, Commerce Business, and Accounting students now can apply for Ontario government grants of $200-300 to pay travel expenses to Europe or Asia. Further information is available in Rm. 2011, Sidney Smith Hall, any day from 1:15 to 2 p.m.

Red writer says Chinese need luck for food

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

"With any reasonable luck there won't be a food problem for the Chinese people this year," predicts Bert Whyte, writer for the Communist Canadian Tribune.

Whyte spoke here yesterday after spending 44 months in China. His speech was sponsored by the U of T Communist Club.

He recounted his impressions of China during economic depression of 1961. People were told to plant anywhere there was soil, even in areas between the street and sidewalk. This was just to get enough food to last the winter.

"We saw people with faces swollen. Girls weren't menstruating properly. All from malnutrition. Sports were cancelled in school."

Whyte said the depression was just showing signs of starting when he arrived in 1960. In 1958 everyone worked hard for the "big leap".

"But a lot of mistakes were made. They were just trying to get too far, too fast. So the economy started sliding downward. The government cut down on everything — from the top down."

In the fall of 1960, all leaves of trees around Peking were stripped off and made into vitamin pills. 1962 was a better year, and 1963 suddenly was a very good year, he said.

Whyte attributed most of the mistakes made to inexperience. Soviet experts were of our Ukrainian Week, was to acquaint the student community of this university with the cultural heritage of the Ukrainian ethnic group in Canada," said club President George Dzioba (IV UC).

"In pluralistic North America, each of us belongs to some significant minority," Prof. Mark MacGuigan of the U of T Law Faculty said Wednesday. Discussing the role of minorities in law formation at a Campus Co-op seminar last night, Mr. MacGuigan said court action, politics, lobbying, and passive resistance are perfectly acceptable in a democracy, he said; and even violence, as in the struggle for recognition of industrial unions, is acceptable if followed by rapid public approval.

English-speaking universities in Quebec have unanimously opposed the principle of mass marches, it was announced last Monday night. A mass march of students in support of free higher education is being planned for March 27. Called "l'Operation de Gratuite Scolaire," it is to be held in Quebec City during the next federal-provincial meeting, and is supported unanimously by the French-speaking universities.

Instead, the English-speaking colleges have said they will draw up a petition calling on the provincial government to grant enough funds to avoid further fee hikes.

A SAC seminar is being held this weekend on "Current Canada" to "examine the social, political and cultural aspects" of Confederation.

not followed. "Pay no attention to the experts," was a common slogan, he said.

Whyte further predicted a new economic advance to begin in China in about one year. "They're preparing for it much better than for the great leap," he said.

In education the government is doing a good job, he said. In 1962 it actually had an unemployment problem for engineers. The universities didn't take in any first-year students.

In answer to a query as to what the government was doing about stabilizing the population, Whyte cited efforts to convince people not to marry until the age of 26; to become sterilized; and to ease abortion regulations.

Psychologist blasts hidden manipulations

"As scientists we cannot escape a continual consideration of what we are finding; but this is not to say we shouldn't find it," Dr. C. H. Speer told the psychology club this week, talking on "uses and abuses of psychological testing."

He said the abuses of psychology come in the attempts to apply discoveries to practical situations.

"Many of the abuses are perpetrated by non-psychologists, and those perpetrated by psychologists are in what they don't do rather than in what they do."

Psychological tests have provided people with more adequate information about themselves than they can get by themselves, he said. But advertising, industry, and education have used the discoveries about the workings of the human psyche to judge and manipulate people.

Christianity is catholic holy and apostolic

Christianity is Catholic, apostolic, and holy. Lecturing

Friday on "The approach to religion from the standpoint of a Christian", Dr. Leslie Dewart, associate professor of philosophy at St. Michael's College, told an audience at FROS house that these characteristics lie at the root of Christian faith and teaching.

The catholicity of Christianity consists in the Christian belief in the universality of the church, and the universal validity of Christianity. It is essentially the extension of Judaism, and finds expression in the Christian commitment to the unity of mankind.

Moreover, Dr. Dewart said the catholic aspect of Christianity must be understood in terms of universality, not merely in space, but also in time.

Credits Soper with new preventive theory

Professor George MacDonald, vice-dean, London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, Monday gave the credit for a complete revision in the whole theory of preventive medicine to Dr. F. L. Soper, director emeritus of the World Health Organization.

Prof. MacDonald explained to a gathering of public health workers, post-graduate students, and guests, that traditional thinking about communicable disease had involved an individual to individual cycle of transmission. Treatment consisted in fruitless attacks on localized regions in an attempt to break this cycle.

Dr. Soper, he said, brought forth the "root and branch" concept, by which communicable diseases can be visualized as forming a pattern.

The mass of the disease's influence consists in the offshoots of the root's focus.

Prof. MacDonald then laid out a two-stage theory of eradication.

"Ordinary methods will easily demolish the branches."

The second stage consists in throwing every device of technology and medical science at the mother focus. There the disease is perpetuated."

Prof. MacDonald noted that although the World Health Organization has given some degree of protection against malaria to more than one billion people in the last eight years, Africa and the Eastern Mediterranean area are virtually untouched by the system.

credit where due

The Ontario government increase of $30,500,000 to the universities is an indication that Queen's Park is recognizing — at least to some degree — the vital financial needs of higher education.

While welcoming this increase, we realize it is only a small part of what is actually needed. The recently released brief of the Ontario faculty associations' gives ample evidence of the enormous needs — needs that will not be met by a $30.5 million increase.

In addition we realize that the increase does not come entirely as a result of the understanding of our elected representatives, or the administrators of our universities. Much of the credit is due to the government advisory committee on university affairs, and its secretary, John McCarthy, in particular.

It is to be hoped that Mr. McCarthy is appointed deputy minister in the new department of university affairs and is not by-passed for political reasons.

independent Co-op?

The Campus Co-operative Inc. prides itself on its independence. It also prides itself on the fact that it may soon become Rochdale College.

The Co-op's academic council recommended in its report that college status be recommended to the Ontario government, which has the power to charter the new college.

But in the meantime the Co-op has been negotiating with the university, which is notorious for its bureaucratic hierarchy and unwillingness to make changes in the existing structure.

If the Co-op is as independent as it leads us to believe, why does it bother with the unnecessary negotiations with the university, at the risk of encountering obstruction from conservative members of the administration and board of governors?

M.B., F.R.C.S.

In a letter in yesterday's Globe and Mail, Joseph A. Sullivan, M.B., F.R.C.S., defended the Ontario government's rejection of the compulsory medicare scheme.

"Only North America possesses the finest medical care in the whole world," wrote Senator Sullivan, M.B., F.R.C.S. He went on to say that what the "bleeding-heart politicians always easily assume is that they alone have humane consideration for the poor, the sick and the needy," and that it is really only the medical profession that gives a damn about the poor, the sick and the needy.

That's our Senator Sullivan, M.B., F.R.C.S., defender of individual rights, member of the University of Toronto board of governors and non-believer in the freedom of the student press.

We suggest that the next time he is being chauffeured through one of Toronto's poorer districts, Senator Sullivan, M.B., F.R.C.S., gets out of his car and go into some of the hovels that pass for family dwellings. Then he can see just how well our poor, sick and needy are being taken care of.

Letters to the Editor

Lord Russell writes

The attempt to persecute independent political thinking in the United States is indicative of the extent to which those who are pushing mankind towards nuclear annihilation are unprepared to allow independent and critical consideration of the alternatives. The persecution of the Bloomington students is the most naked authoritarianism; it affects not only academic freedom but the duty on the part of all of us who oppose the mad policies which governments have followed. The danger to survival today is intimately related to the inability to speak out effectively against governments, East and West.

I hope that there will be an international demand for justice in the case of the Bloomington students, whose example should inspire everyone who follows individual liberty.

Bertrand Russell

What about Indians?

I see you and the SAC and the SCM and the other do-gooders are still worried about American fascism and the plight of the American Negro. This is very commendable, it's also the typical self-satisfied smug Canadian attitude.

Have you looked at our 200,000 Indians lately? They're in segregated schools, but after all it's best for them, they learn so much more slowly than the whites.

They can't drink in our best bars, we can't let them spend their money foolishly, but if they must drink there's a beer parlor down cellar for them. Give him thirty days for vagrancy, why didn't he stay down on the reservation, he's got a nice warm tent to live in there.

The American Negro has his problems, particularly in the south, but Canadians have some pretty big beams to pick before they look for other people's moles. If The Varsity and SAC and the SCM are interested in discrimination let them take a good look at the whole sorry mess of Indian Affairs, the sectarianism-carried-to-the-ultimate school system, at the people who are not even second class citizens.

Go and visit some of our northern towns, watch the squaws pick through the garbage, then come back and write about the American Negro. But don't mention the Indian, he's getting what is best for him.

"Artistic" SAC!

May I express my pleasure at reading Mr. Maude's attack on the SAC cancellation of Jargon.

I hardly think it necessary to comment upon the intellectual bankruptcy of a university which finds itself unable to support a literary magazine. But it is intriguing to compare SAC policy in regard to Jargon with that shown toward such "artistic" endeavors as Winter Carnival and A.V.R. Admittedly, no printers have found the Brothers Four objectionable. However, the SAC's willingness to subsidize a professional group of pseudo-folksingers, its readiness to sponsor a former Broadway musical, while at the same time refusing to back a campus literary magazine, is some sort of comment upon both the taste and the judgment of our dedicated campus politicians.

Varsity bigoted

Last Friday's Varsity editorial on fraternities was rather unfair. It is easy to generalize about discrimination and collegiate hi-jinks, but has your writer ever considered the serious aspects of fraternity life?

You flatly declare that fraternities: "...do not belong in an academic community." — perhaps not in some but they certainly serve a useful purpose in an academic community of 14,000. Where else can one meet such a number of students from different courses and interests as at a fraternity? Their activities need not be restricted to essay cheating and guzzling as you seem to imply. As a matter of fact you may be shocked to hear a genuine professor of music lecturing on the Romantic movement or a real doctor of divinity discussing theology at a "frat house". Yet such guests are by no means infrequent.

Nor is it true to say that fraternities draw a student away from college activities. Indeed, the two can exist side by side! In fact, many fraternity constitutions make it clear that college allegiance and loyalty come before fraternity interests.

In addition you might have pointed out that most fraternities are involved in some type of charity work. Surely their support of causes such as the Cerebral Palsy workshop or the Heart Fund is not entirely undeserving of mention.

Fraternities do not expect a pat on the back from The Varsity but they do expect a slightly less bigoted attitude.

Scholarship scandal

There is one iniquitous situation at the University of Toronto which has, to the best of my knowledge, escaped the notice of your keen Varsity editorialists, and I refer to what you might like to call "The Ontario Scholarship Scandal".

The fact that these awards are paid via the complex, slow-acting administrative channels of the university rather than directly to the student is irritating, the fact that they are not paid, even in part, before January is completely absurd.

For any student counting on his hard-won $400 to pay his fees (at least half of which are due before he is even registered), this inordinate delay necessitates an emergency loan and or poverty until January. Even then, he receives only half of his money, and is still waiting today (Feb. 7) hopefully for that other $200.

In fact he is probably wondering if he will ever receive it, for while Simcoe Hall is stating: "Certainly sir, the Ontario Scholarships were forwarded to the colleges days ago," Victoria College Fees Office proclaims (with undertones of annoyance): "We don't care what Simcoe Hall says; we still haven't heard anything about the Ontario Scholarship"... Frustrating eh!

Varsity anti-Semitic

Congratulations are certainly in order for your success in adding so much more to the cause of antisemitism on this campus.

As editor of the Varsity, we realize that your editorials are written objectively, with the basic issues firmly planted in your mind. But we wonder sir, if you realize that many who read your masterpieces pick out not only the basic issues, but also the underlying inference as well?

Both of your editorials in which reference to Jewish organizations was made have criticized a community of which you are neither a part, nor which you can fully comprehend. In both of your criticisms, the basic issues might have been noble and righteous, but your means of bringing these issues to light has done very little to curb a deep rooted prejudice towards the Jew.

We fully realize that as an editor you have a right and a duty to print the facts with the resulting issues, in a manner in which you see fit, regardless of the twisted versions they might beget. We only ask you to consider for a moment whether or not your presentation of these issues are "adding more fuel to the fire" and in the long run are doing more harm than good.

On this same topic, might we add one more personal note. You have stated that "a person's religion is his own business" (Feb. 10) Surely then, the way a person acts and feels towards his own religion and its organizations is also his own business. Then let those who are directly affected by these religious practices cry out against injustices to themselves.

The judgement is theirs; not yours,

Judges on capital punishment

by MARTIN
TEPLITSKY (III Law)

In a recent panel discussion at Ryerson Institute, Frank Tumpane, Telegram columnist, and three outstanding members of the bar Arthur Maloney, John Robinette, and Joseph Sedgwick debated the question of capital punishment. The latter two gentlemen were in favour of the retention of this penalty, and their view prevailed 310-166 in a subsequent vote.

The literature on the abolition of capital punishment is vast. The literature on retention is non-existent. Neither Mr. Robinette nor Mr. Sedgwick alleviated the intellectual aridity which envelops their view.

Because of the availability of materials it would be redundant to discuss in any detail the various arguments for abolition. For those interested, I recommend Joyce, J.A., Capital Punishment, A World View (Zvergreen, 1962), and the extensive bibliography contained therein. A cursory perusal of the writings leads to only one conclusion: Capital punishment must be abolished, because the experience of the more than 40 jurisdictions where the death penalty has been dropped and where neither a significant increase nor a significant decrease in the murder rate followed, proves fallacious any contention that capital punishment has deterrent value.

Both Mr. Robinette and Mr. Sedgwick directed themselves to this argument. Mr. Robinette dispatched it with aplomb. His reasons were the essence of simplicity. He said that the statistics prove nothing. He preferred to rely on his common sense, and decided that capital punishment did deter, especially in crimes for profit. So there.

Mr. Sedgwick equally had no difficulty. He stated that the statistical argument, the argument based on the fact that no jurisdiction which abolished capital punishment has ever had an increase in its murder rate, was inconclusive. He chose to examine the inner workings of his heart, and concluded that capital punishment did deter.

To maintain such a stand in the face of these statistics and in the face of the fact that Canada and England abolished this punishment for crimes of property without an increase in their incidence—is simply ridiculous.

Execution Cheaper

The statistical argument behind him, Mr. Sedgwick charged on. He tendered other reasons for retention, one of which he rather delicately described as the economic question. He asked whether society could be called upon to support vicious murderers for 20 years or more at a cost of more than $2500 a year. He pointed out that it was cheaper to execute them. To state this argument is to refute it. Nor is there any need to explore the monstrous ramifications of this startling approach.

Mr. Maloney chose to indicate other aspects of the economic question. He quoted Warden Lawes, formerly of Sing Sing Prison, to the effect that the 149 men he escorted to the electric chair had one thing in common—poverty. In a similar vein, he noted that the last two men executed in Toronto, Lucas and Turpin, had legal aid counsel whom Mr. Maloney characterized generally as young, in search of experience, and lacking the maturity and judgment to conduct a proper defence. One wonders if the result would have been the same, had a Robinette or Sedgwick represented these men.

Kindly Fellow

Then in a touching moment, Mr. Sedgwick told us that it was his devout wish that people not think him a mean old man because he favoured the retention of Capital Punishment. On the contrary, he thought of himself as rather a kindly old fellow. Thus it came as no surprise that he put forward a humanitarian argument in support of his position. Mr. Sedgwick maintained that it was terrible to keep men locked up for their whole lives. Surely their existence is nothing but continuing despair. He cited as an example the case of Robert Stroud, better known as the Birdman of Alcatraz, who recently died after more than 50 years in prison. Mr. Sedgwick claimed that Stroud originally committed murder, then killed 2 Wardens, and generally would have been better off dead.

Stroud's biographer has a different version of the facts. According to him Stroud committed manslaughter and later killed one guard.

Stroud later became the world's foremost expert on bird diseases. With the publication of this biography he became a living symbol of man's ability to rehabilitate himself.

Mr. Sedgwick is a public speaker par excellence. This ability coupled with his prestigious name lends great weight to the cause of retention. Unfortunately Mr. Sedgwick debated this issue as though it were a resolution by the Engineers that men are infinitely superior to women. The following examples of his debating technique are illustrative:

To support his contention that the statistics were inconclusive Mr. Sedgwick flatly stated that New Zealand and several of the American states had reinstated capital punishment after once abolishing it. It remained for Mr. Maloney to point out that during the 10-15 years which this penalty was abolished in New Zealand there was in fact a slight decrease in the incidence of murder. When asked to name the American states Mr. Sedgwick was unable to do so. He did not indicate, moreover what prompted the decision. It is a fact that the contentiousness of this problem has often resulted in its resolution on purely political, as distinguished from policy grounds.

Mr. Tumpane contended that the same arguments that were used to defend capital punishment 150 years ago for sheep stealing and which were proved false on the deterrence issue then are still active today. Mr. Sedgwick replied that all would admit that a man's life was of more value than a sheep's. Thus with one fell swoop he begged the whole question, but nonetheless impressed the audience with his wit. It is not unreasonable to expect something better from Mr. Sedgwick.

Although the debate resolved itself in favour of retention, it was agreed that the present strictures on the application of the penalty both by law and by Cabinet practice, is a desirable result. The direction in which we are heading in this country is unmistakable.

I look forward with pleasure to the day when this useless societal infliction of terror and horror no longer rears its ugly black-hooded head.

Cold war mars personal contact

One of the unfortunate aspects of the Cold War has been its interference with personal contact between citizens of the nations involved. Few people on this continent have met people from the Soviet Union; in the meantime denunciations of another political system have often produced an image of a Russian as someone closely resembling the baddies who try to do in James Bond.

It is therefore valuable that the U of T has enrolled two Russian exchange students under a plan arranged with the USSR by Professor Gordon Skilling, Director of the Centre for Russian and East European Studies. They are part of a group of three whose exchange for three Varsity students was made possible by a grant from the Laidlaw Foundation; and among them is Vitaly Korsun, one of the first group of Massey College Junior Fellows.

By MIKE HORN

Vitaly Korsun is a friendly, easy-going man, in his early thirties, with a wife and eight-year old daughter back in Dnepropetrovsk, in and around which he has spent most of his life. Born in Krivoy Rog, near the tongue-twisting Ukrainian city, he spent some time during the last war in Kurdistan and Uzbekistan, because his family retreated before the Germans in 1941.

What little he recalls of the war, he says, was exciting: "My mother was far more scared than I was, but she knew what was happening." In 1943 he returned to Dnepropetrovsk, where he started his university studies five years later. At present he has the M. Sc. degree, and the status of Senior Scientific Worker at Dnepropetrovsk State University. His field of specialization is semi-conductor physics, and during his stay in Canada he is involved in research on the electroluminescence of Zine Sulphides. Vitaly's earnest efforts to explain exactly what this involved have left me, a complete layman, also completely uncomprehending, though I gather it has something to do with light. But I confess that in interviewing Vitaly I was more interested in him as a Russian than as a scientist.

Our Russian fellow Fellow is understandably somewhat reticent in his opinions of Canada. Familiar only with Toronto, he does not want to draw from this experience too many generalizations.

Nor does he like to draw comparisons and contrasts with his native country: "It is more important to see the similarities between our countries and our peoples." In their relaxed attitude to life and their enjoyment of sports, as well as in their hospitality to visitors, Vitaly feels, Russians and Canadians have much in common. The size of the two countries and the heterogeneity of their populations are more basic similarities. He adds that he discovered most of this since coming to Canada, for neither this country nor its people are well known in Russia: "We see Western European and American tourists, but almost no Canadians." For this reason he jumped at the opportunity to enter the competition for a year's study here, since he has at the same time a human and a scientific interest in other nations.

Insofar as he is willing to talk about the Cold War at all, Vitaly is an enthusiastic supporter of peaceful coexistence. He pooch-pooches the possibility of war: "Wars are no longer a way of settling international conflicts now that nations can be destroyed with only a few bombs," and he foresees a gradual lessening of international tension in which increased personal contact between the peoples of the world will play an important role.

Repeating the old aphorism that we fear chiefly what we don't know, he feels confident that increasing travel and exchange of scholars' will build up trust between peoples who will come to see that their similarities are greater than their differences.

"The scientific method," Vitaly says, "means not accepting a theory until it has been checked against the evidence, and if people travel more and keep an open mind, they will find that many of their theories about foreign nations are false." In the meantime tensions

Vitaly Korsun

can be decreased by treaties like the recent testban treaty between the United Kingdom, the United States, and the USSR. The immediate goal is that each nation should be allowed to have that form of government which it prefers, and that mutual tolerance should prevail: about long-term, Vitaly refuses to commit himself.

Aside from pursuing his research Vitaly reads a good deal, books as well as scientific journals and more general periodicals. He confesses himself fascinated by reading the many different opinions expressed in American and British magazines, and he reads the New York Times closely.

Though he expresses few political opinions, he is well able to distinguish political bias: "This comes from the extreme right wing, yes?" he said the other day, holding up the National Review and laughing. His laughter is infectious, if sometimes it seems out of place, as when a Queen's player picked off a Varsity pass and ran for a touchdown, leaving Vitaly laughing uproariously and yelling: "Good, good!"

A comparative lack of partisan spirit, however, is one of the striking things about the cheerful Russian. He admires American research in his own field while suggesting that Canada should do more research of its own. "Science, of course, is international," he says, and Vitaly himself is chiefly concerned with the expansion of knowledge. His research and his sojourn in Canada are aspects of the same concern.

"All men need to know more about nature and about each other. In this way everyone will benefit, and trust between nations will grow."

Make the most of your summer

by PETER S. JULL

University students, spending their time with their noses in dry tomes, beer mugs, and other people's business, are often accused of "ivory-towerism", or, more euphemistically, lack of perspective.

This accusation is certainly overdone. However, the student is subjected to very great pressure. He takes a good number of courses, any one of which he could get more or less under his belt with a lifetime of reading and thinking. He cannot hope to master them in three of four seven-month sessions, and he often feels he is getting nowhere.

Apart from this he has difficult exams and strictly marked essays to contend with, backed by cut-throat regulations. He may be subject to financial or domestic problems, and often has to please his family with some sort of acceptable home life. He has to continually fight the depression brought on by the hopelessness of his lot in particular, and man's in general. The destruction of his beliefs and assumptions through his ever-widening encounter with new ideas and facts is a great trial also.

And he needs some time for social life, outside activity and relaxation in order to remain reasonably sane.

The one great thing, indeed the greatest thing the student lacks, is time to digest his study and fit its fruits in with the facts of life, his rational outlook and his own human circumstances.

He lives in such a fantastic realm of rarefied chaos that he must often appear to the so-called common man as a gibbering ass. No-one subject to his conditions could help but be.

Now presumably being a gibbering ass is not desirable. To attack university education, though commonly done, would be absurd. It has great value, but only if it is related to the mundane facts of temporal being.

What can he (we) do? Dissociate the academic and the practical? No. To do that would be to render academic value valueless, for if civilization is to progress it must be by the application of improved mentality to existence. We must integrate all the knowledge and ideas available to us, whatever they are, and form a somewhat consistent, organized "self". If we don't, we will be utterly useless, both to ourselves and to mankind.

When can we pause to do this? The summer (four and a half months) is our only chance. We must make the most of it.

The student who works in an office with a collection of ineane clerks (and students just don't get jobs among the more exalted members of the working world) and is concerned with trivial (to him) routine and chatter about the office bowling league and speculation as to that cute little secretary's love-life — such a student's summer must be merely a continual war against impeding madness. I have polled a great number of students, and almost all of them speak of their summers with shudders.

In fact, to work in a city or large town is unfortunate under any circumstances, for the student never gets to realise that the New World is more than a collection of dirty nondescript piles of steel, glass, and concrete. This is a serious problem in itself.

Most students wander around continually discouraged and disillusioned about the world. A few escape into fantasies involving exotic and erotic trips to Europe, but most just get more and more depressed and cynical. How can we appreciate the Elizabethan enthusiasm about the "brave new world" when outside our intellectual world we see only a great ugly metropolis?

One summer evening in Ottawa I observed, high over an arch on the west face of the Peace Tower, the engraved words, "Where there is no vision the people perish." All of us, of course, sneer at visions because we associate them with a recent unpopular Prime Minister. Unfortunately we need visions to crown and transfigure our "selves", to give us purpose and principle.

In the non-urban areas of this country the people are not depressed pessimists. They work hard, they play hard, and they can see their achievements. They know that they can get something out of life if they will work for it (an idea unfamiliar to most students). They have their little visions.

To live and work among such people is a pleasure and a privilege for the student. And more and more students (admittedly a great minority) are doing it in the summer — at resorts, in mining communities, in the bush.

But I am not trying to preach simply an edifying and educational summer. Summers are for rest too. Rest and tuition-earning may seem incompatible, but they are not mutually exclusive.

Anyone who has worked in the more remote areas of Canada, or like myself, in the uninhabited wilderness of the far north, or who has gone to Muskoka and been lucky enough to get back away from the roaring speedboats, the caterwauling brats, and they gay Pepsi-Cola set, knows the amazing regenerative and mind-clearing effects of nature.

"And this our life, exempt from public haunt, finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything." But these tongues, books, and sermons are purely subliminal — they involve no stress or intellection. All the stupidities and many of the great traumas of life vanish or are put in perspective under such conditions.

In short, I suggest that the student should go away and bask in a little optimism, beauty, quiet and serenity, and thereby find intellectual and spiritual peace. Nor will physical labour and pure air prove detrimental to his health.

Many cannot or will not do this, so for them I can only recommend locking themselves in a room, shutting their eyes, and listening to Dvorak's 5th Symphony or Debussy's nature music. The point is, some thorough break with our milieu is essential in the summer.

A lovely, lovely, show

by CALINESCU

STOP THE WORLD — I WANT TO GET OFF, the much maligned musical currently at the Royal Alex, has one thing critics have not been able to destroy—audience identification.

In very simple, symbolic terms Anthony Newley, the creator of STOP THE WORLD, presents us with the life story of John Q. Public, or, as he called in the play, Littlechap. From the time that Littlechap is born and grows up, ambitiously to the point where Alone with memories and reflections of the past, Littlechap dies, thus bringing the circle of life one full turn, we can identify with him. His dreams, ambitions and hopes, are ours and all the things Littlechap does are all the things we would like to do. Yet as this story shows, perfection is not the answer, for our hero finds himself, with all his ambitions fulfilled and with the realization that these ambitions made him miss the things that really count.

If the plot sounds hackneyed, it is—just as the plots of our lives are hackneyed. Mr. Newley and his collaborator Leslie Bricusse have given the shopworn clichés new life in song and word, and the two leading players do the creators proud.

Kenneth Nelson reaches great heights with his portrayal of Littlechap. The pantomime sections of his role are excuted with a precision that brings back memories of the master of mime, Marcel Marceau.

Mr. Nelson shows the chaplinesque quality of his character with a perfection that it is a joy to watch him every minute he is on stage, and happily enough he is on stage every minute of the play. Littlechap's various female acquaintances are expertly portrayed by Joan Eastman. When she changes from Evie, the typically English girl Littlechap marries Anya, the Russian comrade who bears him a son, we feel that the change is not only a superficial one but that Anya is actually a different person. The consistently excellent portrayals make Miss Eastman a good match for Mr. Nelson. The supporting cast, including a Greek chorus of shapely maidens, does a fine job to round out this successful cast.

The circus tent setting is very effective and is well complimented by the complex lighting schemes of designer Sean Kenny. STOP THE WORLD is not noisy or flashy, nor is it pretentious or syrupy—it's just very fine theatre.

A textbook to rob Las Vegas by

ALAIN DELON

by TASNEEN A. KHAN

Every once in a while the French produce a film showing the perfect, carefully planned crime, which is later used by some enterprising crooks as a blueprint for committing the same crime in real life. So if any of our readers are looking for a carefully thought out and perfectly planned method of relieving a Casino in Las Vegas of its ill-gotten gains, we advise two or three sittings with a pad and pencil at the film Any Number Can Win now playing at the Towne Cinema.

The film is in the tradition of such perfectly thought out thrillers as "Le Salaire de la Peur," "Riffifi" and "The Killing", and like them starts slowly as the crime is planned and every detail worked out. There is then the scene of the actual crime with the suspense building up and the audience sitting with baited breath, rooting (somewhat anti-socially, but these crooks are so charming, and who cares if a gambling casino is divested of a few billion francs) for the crooks, and hoping things work out according to plan.

Things, as it turns out, do go according to plan. There is the very ending of the classic thriller, which, though of the conventional "Crime does not pay" variety, is unexpected enough to make the film a good one.

Any Number Can Win has two very fine performers, Jean Gabin — veteran of such classics as Le Jour se Lève and Le Grand Illusion — and the young French actor Alain Delon, who plays the part of the younger of the two crooks and has the more difficult role in the Master Plan.

We would class the film several points below "Riffifi," but still recommend it for any persons with potential designs on a casino.

ROYAL BANK

It was about this time that I became friendly with Dixie Glukicz and his woman Iris with whom I later went to Barcelona. I had known them before this, but it was not until the first clique had wilted like a trick flower that I began to see them frequently. And of course with them came a whole new group of people; they were far grimmer company than the groups before. Working out the days and nights of their time was a serious game, and whatever sense of frivolity had once been in them was now sordid and hysterical. Things were not fun anymore.

Dixie Glukicz: The first word he learned in french was piscine (swimming pool) and the sound of it drove him wild. He liked sounds that had resonance to them, and for hours he could play with the nasal sense of words. "Piscinnnnne," became a watchword for him. He would narrow his eyes and blink his nostril wings till they popped, then turn towards the first available patsy and exclaim divinely, "Neeeeeemmmmm." This sound was a variation on Piscine and he came to regard it as his own. I have seen him sit for hours and days discovering the different intonations it had for him; after a while, he learned to alter its sound according to his mood so that Neem (short) was a judgment short and curt, while Neeemmm (long) expressed a mild and simple joy. When he and Iris were at their happiest you could detect him purring all through the day: "Neeeee...thth...mmmm, etc." This was the resonance in its purest form. It could drive you crazy.

Dixie Glukicz had been around; his father had been a union organizer in the thirties in Detroit, and in his more coherent moments, Dixie could describe the tremendous beatings his old man had had to take, though he took them well. Dixie had a lot of the rebel in him too; yet he was very quiet spoken behind his wild beard. He had been in and out of a dozen schools in Michigan, and in his late teens had been picked up in Detroit on a narcotics charge and sent to a military academy for four years. When he got out, he came home but his mother had remarried and his father had been blacklisted from the unions and had turned mean and unapproachable. Dixie kicked around for a while and finally hooked onto a fat prostitute who seemed to be in love with him (Trouble was, she sweat a lot, nasty); he lived on her earnings for a while, but she cramped his style, and then he was scared, mouth for hours. Nasty scene." To complicate it, he also had a case of prostritis, rare in a man so young. It hurt something awful when he had sex, and he kept meaning to have an operation; "the only thing is," he explained, "I kinda like it when it hurts like that. I'm doing fine with some chic and out of nowhere I get this wild drip, burns like hell, and I go ew-ew-ew-ew, and all of a sudden we both go straight out of our skulls." But there was more than the masochist about him; he took everything on faith, even a pain so bizarre as that, and his loyalty was incredible. Incredible, because you did not ask for it in the Quarter; it was a virtue like chastity which meant nothing the way we lived. Nevertheless, you could count on him; except, he had an unaccountable streak of violence which only surfaced once in all the months we knew him.

In Los Angeles, he discovered the arts: but, more or less, the way a bear discovers civilization at the zoo. He returned to Michigan and threw in his lot with a group of some pretty sordid people. He tried University, but was thrown out of Wayne State in a year. He and his friends bought a house in Detroit where they did nothing but party and drink, with a few orgies and some heroin thrown in to make it interesting. And, oh yes, he wanted to be a writer. Perhaps the saddest thing about Dixie was that he had no talent; he was irrepressibly, knew his way with women, and had always lived a fairly unpredictable life. For a man of 24, he had done more than most of us would see in a lifetime: but he couldn't put it down on paper, and that, more than anything, drove him mad. At any rate, it drove him to Europe: where adventures he couldn't describe and people he couldn't peg, happened he already had a bad enough record. So he finally sold her to a friend for key money and went to Los Angeles where he got a job on the set of Raintree Country. His job was to stand behind Montgomery Clift during the battle scenes and hold him up: Clift liked to drink. It was there that he developed a case of what he called seductionitis. "It was weird," he said, "I had to have every woman I saw, I couldn't help it, it was awful, I'd walk down a street and there'd be this broad maybe ugly as sin and I'd follow her around the city like a bloody sex maniac and slaver at the him all over again. In England, and this was a difficult story to believe, he had stumbled across William E., great and ambiguous critic of English literature. Dixie didn't know who E. was, which seemed to delight E., no end so Dixie found himself living on a farm some distance from London, chopping wood and shovelling manure. William E. was an old man with a great white beard and a very young wife. William E. allowed his wife to keep a lover, an Atlas type with bulging biceps and ur-thoughts; this was obviously a sophisticated kind of supply and demand, and even Dixie got

In this exclusive interview Varsity hack Huey Philistine talks with the prominent Toronto composer Harry Freedman. Mr. Freedman is married and has three daughters and two cats. He is also principal English Horn player with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. During the interview Mr. Freedman sat on his piano bench, making a reed.

Since the Hart House Orchestra performed your Fantasy and Allegro last month let's take it as a base for these questions. I liked it on the whole but I thought that the Allegro might have been too long, that all the tension you had been building wasn't carried far enough. Perhaps it could have ended sooner than it did.

True the Allegro has a lot of tension, drive and energy but your judgement of it is purely subjective. It's not safe to judge on the basis of first impressions because you put the piece into the context of what you have previously heard. Its style can be related, but sheer form, in its best, not academic sense, can only be perceived after repeated hearings. Actually I was quite pleased that it came off as well as it did. I wrote it in about two weeks and I hadn't heard it since its premiere. I had quite forgotten what I had written.

How do you go about writing a work like this? By what process does it come into being?

First you decide on what sort of work it's going to be — quiet, moody, loud, fast — it's a feeling that comes to you. The type of instrumentation may suggest certain things too. If it's a commissioned work, as the Fantasy and Allegro was, this is decided for you. You let this feeling develop. The idea for the theme, where its going and so on. When the organization in your mind is done, then you sit down and write the notes.

The notes are in a sense unimportant. Take Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. He could have used different notes and gotten the same effect. It's the character of the thematic material that's important, as well as things like rhythm, texture, dynamics. This is what separates me from many of my colleagues, particularly the followers of the Viennese Trinity. To me rhythm is the most basic element in music. There seems to be no concern for rhythm in the Viennese school. I think this is one reason why so many find this music inaccessible.

When did you develop an interest in composing? You weren't a child prodigy were you?

No, and I don't think Jack Groob will be able to understand the Hornepayne trial. I didn't really start composing until after the war — although, while studying painting at the Winnipeg School of Art with L. L. Fitzgerald, I was developing an interest in jazz. I bought a clarinet when I was eighteen. From jazz it was the usual run — Nutcracker Suite, Schubert Unfinished and so on. I was still painting though, and I got the idea of doing an abstract painting of the styles of different composers. When I started composing music I decided to reverse the idea. I can still remember how disappointed I was when I came across Pictures at an Exhibition and realized that Moussorgsky had already done something along those lines. I did carry out the idea much later, however.

Mr. formal training began when I came to Toronto in 1946 to study oboe — (I'd given up the clarinet) — and composition with Weinzwieg. There was always writing to be done. In addition to exercises in harmony, counterpoint, etc. there were creative writing projects.

What school are you from?

That's for musicologists to decide. I'm considered avant-garde but I can't see why. I consider myself old-fashioned in comparison to some of the younger composers.

Yes, but haven't you been influenced by any composers? By any particular environment?

Ellington, Bartok, Debussy — to answer your first question. I spent one summer analysing almost everything Bartok ever wrote. Still you can't help being influenced by everything you hear. When you play in an orchestra the music impresses itself on your subconscious even if you don't want to be consciously influenced.

In this sense orchestra playing is a hazard. On the other hand it's an education in orchestration. It enabled me to think in terms of orchestra; whereas far too many composers just translate into orchestral terms what they conceive at the piano.

What makes you want to compose?

You might as well ask me to explain the creative instinct. Mind you, that's not as far-fetched as it might seem at first. There have been several attempts at such an explanation by people most qualified to do so — those in the psychological sciences. Probably the most lucid of these is Dr. Daniel Schneider's book, "The Psychoanalyst and the Artist" which is a psychoanalytical examination of the creative instinct. There is hardly a page that doesn't contain at least one or two sentences that you feel ought to be carved on the walls of every conservatory in the world.

After I had read the book I realized there were many things in it that I had felt instinctively. For one thing, it confirmed my belief that the academic approach to music is completely useless for the enjoyment of the art of music, which is probably the least academic of all the arts. Things like "first and second subject" and "nearly related keys" are not art. They are merely part of the craft of music, which is the tool of the creative instinct.

We have such a superstitious awe of knowledge that we can't even see how much harm has been done to music by this academic attitude — not the least of which is the considerable number of very crude composers who seem to be more concerned with how their scores analyse than how they sound.

Do you think the academic approach has any place in music? Why are so many people concerned with it?

Certainly it has a place in music. The work of the musicologist is of vital importance to me as a composer. I'm speaking of course of certain kind of musicologists. What I object to is the other kind, who claims that in order to fully appreciate or "understand" a piece of music you have to take it apart to see where every little bit goes and how each part fits into every other part. It's almost as though music had no more significance than a crossword puzzle. I enjoy a crossword puzzle as much as anyone, but I certainly don't claim that it enhances my appreciation of literature.

And yet if these people enjoy a Bach fugue simply as an intellectual exercise and nothing more, fine. I think they're missing the whole point though. Any music that has to be explained in order to be enjoyed isn't worth listening to.

I agree, but what do you think of audiences today, actual and potential?

a piece of the economy. They tried to teach him to think. At first, he was hesitant about this thing called intellectual conversation, but E., and his wife encouraged him to join in. He did; one night they were discussing Disarmament and Dixie mentioned that his father had been foreman of a munitions factory during the war. They threw him out at once, and Dixie found himself alone in London. He spent four wretched days at the YMCA on Great Russell Square where the fags used to threaten him in the halls, and then took the ferry to France and the train to Paris.

One of the more amazing things about Dixie in Paris was that he never left the Quarter. He arrived at Gare Du Nord, took a taxi to Place Odeon, and bedded down at the hotel petit trianon indefinitely. He soon fell in with the Quarter rituals, played his morning Gottlieb for instruction, walked to the American Express for his mail in the early noon, sat in the Cafe Monaco and Cafe Buci during the daylight hours, and ate his meal of baguettes and jam in the petit bar at the far end of the parvis Notre Dame. The first thing he asked me when I met him was about the craft of the writer; he was awfully embarrassed about the subject, but he wanted to know if it was true that most writers smoked pot and got visions. He had been trying this, but what I had read of his was pretty bad; he had seen a lot, I soon found out, but he couldn't trap any of it on paper, and he always felt that his life was a terrible waste: if you couldn't document your your life what was the use of living it.

I promised him that someday I'd try to write him up in a paragraph. So he told me a lot of things about himself that I later used to get Iris. But that was long before we became close friends, and ## the

during an unfortunate trip to Barcelona, and the whole devious business is one of the few things I regret.

Iris was a Greek girl. Her hair was long, spilling over her shoulders, and faintly yellow. She had a hard, tight face that was quite lovely, except that it had about as much expression as a rubber mask sewn to the bone. Iris had run away from the prospect of a family marriage of convenience in Athens, and her life in the Quarter was merely the first leg of a flight that could not end well. She treated Dixie like dirt; it was a shame to watch what she did to him. She had cured his seductionitis once and for all, he claimed, because he was at last in love, but she had taken something away from him. No man ever satisfied her, that was her claim, but Dixie seemed to suit the way she lived now, and she lived with him out of a sheer, nasty desire to be destructive. She was very good at killing things. He took it, and what was worse, he loved it; "nasty scene," he would say, as drained dry as an egg shell, but he couldn't leave her alone although she hated to be touched. She was turning out to be just another disease, but he knew he couldn't stand the cure.

In their tiny room on the top floor of the hotel, Iris had painted two nude studies on the ceiling and wall: one of herself, arms and legs spread decisively, the other of Dixie curled up like a foetus. Dixie, of course, was terribly embarrassed by these pictures, but Iris wouldn't let him rub them out. She would go out of her way to invite people up, threw small parties in the mornings when the light was right; out of this, Dixie developed a very fine sense of humour that was very close to the edge. Iris unfortunately, had no wit, though she had a very thorough body. But for all her beauty and feminine moves, she was essentially very tough and manlike in her thinking. She permitted herself to need men badly, but everything was on her own terms, or so it seemed. And then there was the awful problem of her inability to experience a man completely.

It was on the trip to Barcelona that Dixie told me the whole story. She had been treating him badly, hardly talking to him at all, and driving over the Spanish frontier he was almost suicidal. What was worse, she was blatantly propositioning the rest of us on the trip, and although she was a very handy outlet, it was damn mysterious. In

Quarter

Paris, months before, Iris found herself pregnant. Dixie was surprised and ecstatic, and insisted they get married. Iris was cold and unmoved, and demanded an abortion. Dixie gave in after a few days that must have been terrifying; after all, he was helpless and he did not want her to leave him. So he bought her an abortion from Fritz. But Dixie was a funny guy. One day, while walking along the Quai all by himself, it suddenly struck him with all the nauseating and love-sick force of a man pursued, that maybe Iris wasn't pregnant at all, that maybe she was going to take his money and split it with the abortionist and he'd never be the wiser. He insisted on watching. He helped Fitz strap her down, then sat in a chair while Iris had it done. "I had never heard her scream before," he said, "my god." There was a lot of blood on the table, and yelling, and the table leg broke. Dixie became impotent.

The one thing Dixie believed in above everything else, excluding Iris even in Barcelona when it was all gone, was the illusion that kept passing itself off as his life. He was always tremendously high; he carried about a small leather pouch full of pills and drugs which more and more he administered on the spot according to the tone of the moment. He had to perpetuate the dream of things about him; we were all, I am convinced of it now, figments of his imagination—the highest compliment he could pay us — and he spoke to us as if we were parts of his own anatomy. Somewhere someone was getting everything they wanted and, although each time it was becoming more difficult, he would always begin again with that in mind. I can't forget easily the image of Dixie standing in front of the Pension Toledo in Barcelona in the early morning, after the night's revels: he looks about him quickly, sucks in the tail of his moustache, says "It Didn't Happen," and goes up to bed.

The ideal listener is a person with a highly-developed sense of aural perception. The closest thing we have to an ideal audience in this city is the audience at Ten Centuries Concerts. That's the kind of audience musicians love to play for. The kind that's hungry for music.

I think we're listening to far too much these days whether we want to or not. It's usually garbage—musical sounds, all the same. It spoils your appetite for music, like having little snacks all day long. How can you expect to enjoy a sumptuous feast if you've been nibbling all day long. It's a wonder that so many people still like music. Everyone has the right to be left alone. The right to peace and quiet.

Are you saying that popular music has no place, no importance?

There is a place for almost any kind of music. What I deplore is the stress put on mediocre music. Broadway shows are very transient things, to say nothing of rock 'n roll and the Hit Parade. Popular songs as such have their place. The marvelous simplicity of a good pop tune is not something to be sneered at. The trouble is you rarely hear good pop tunes any more.

What's it like being a composer in Toronto?

Unbelievable compared to even ten years ago. It's not improbable within the foreseeable future that there will be enough commissions around to provide full time work. I haven't written anything except on commission in the last three years. The Canada Council and the CBC have speeded it up. It's snow-balled. Still, Toronto seems to be ignoring music more than the other arts. One of the qualities that is usually overlooked in any art form is its uniqueness. This is what we have lost through the vast amount of recorded music we hear.

There has been vast publicity of the Picasso and Man exhibition at the Art Gallery. But how many people know that Stravinsky, Picasso's counterpart in music, has chosen the CBC and the Festival Singers as the definitive groups for the performance of his music on a whole series of recordings?

I feel reasonably secure, yet there are danger signals on the horizon. Music in Canada has grown rapidly, thanks mainly to the CBC. But the CBC is under a great deal of pressure to become more and more commercial, and music, of course will suffer the most since the lion's share of the budget goes to TV. There is very little music on TV. The disbanding of the CBC symphony may be a great blow depending on who is responsible for the programming of the broadcasts — the CBC or the TSO.

Musically I feel more confident. Things go faster now, a lot faster. This comes from composing more. I compose whenever I can. Usually every day unless I deliberately starve to make myself keener.

Do you feel you're going in any new direction? Or do you feel you're satisfied with your present objectives?

Right at the moment I can feel I'm going through a terrific transitional stage but I haven't any idea what it's leading to. Composition is a constant investigation, not necessarily in some new field. I might have done the Fantasy and Allegro differently row than I did eighteen months ago. In composition you're examining whatever fascinates you at the moment. You're interested, you want to explore.

What works of yours do you like best? What of contemporary Canadian composers?

My favourite work is Tableau, because it marked the end of my student stage. I suppose my best works are the first and last movements of my Symphony, Images, the Wind Quintet, and the Tokaido for the Festival Singers. Of the composers, I like Somers, Weinzwilg, Jean-Papineau Couture but there are any number of interesting composers in Canada. There's room at the top for everybody. To evaluate them is not important. Great composers were the result of a whole lot of minor composers. Eventually another Beethoven will come along.

Who was the last Beethoven?

Bartok.

TSO in relaxing performance

by PAUL ENNIS

One unifying element ran almost continually throughout the TSO program this week. A kind of relaxation predominated. The concert began with a more than competent reading of Summer, followed by a restrained Beethoven C Minor Piano Concerto, and climaxed in an often brilliant performance of the Mahler Fourth Symphony.

It was a quality which made the Delius soothing and warm. The soloists, particularly the flute and violin, were great. The strings produced their lushest sound in weeks; the piece was well-shaped. Indeed, this work demands such extremely sensitive playing to give its mediocre content some character, that it was fortunate the TSO played as well as it did.

The Beethoven was characterized by the contrast between pianist Hans Richter-Haaser's very controlled playing in soft passages with an almost stark forte touch. This is well-suited to the final movement where the sfor-zandos on the weak beats gave the music the driving rhythm essential to Beethoven. Such was the success of this, coupled with the sometimes listless interpretation of the second movement, that the beginning of the finale seemed out of character.

One was struck by the performance of the orchestra throughout. The first movement introduction was was lacking the Romantic character that it can slip so easily into. The flute and bassoon chords in the middle of the Largo and the end were excellent. Only in the final movement did the rhythm jerk slightly.

The lyricism of the Largo suffered because of Mr. Richter-Haaser's straightforward approach. Lyricism in the first movement was apparent because of the dramatic contrasts throughout. (This is even more true of the third movement). The second movement requires much more than the flawlessly polished runs of Mr. Richter-Haaser.

A live performance is virtually essential to appreciate a Mahler symphony. His orchestration suffers on recordings due to the abundance of melodies, all of which come across only in person. His music is so melodious that he seems to be throwing away beautiful undeveloped fragments too often. His symphonies are gold mines of song and most of his creative work went into symphonic writing.

Melancholy is the dominant mood of the Fourth Symphony. The third movement is a shifting of joy and sadness that ends in peace and serenity following two magnificent climaxes. The orchestra was particularly good in the middle movements. The tempi of the first movement were erratic and the woodwind sound occasionally coarse. Soprano Elizabeth Benson-Guy's voice lacked enough power for parts of the fourth movement. (The softer songs in this movement were well done). The orchestra though, seemed to have benefited from Dr. Unger's Mahler last week.

Partial Text Of Teachers' Brief To Premier Robarts

The Ontario council of university faculty associations submitted a 55-page brief to Premier John Robarts Dec. 19.

The brief is one of the most extensive examinations ever made of Ontario's higher education system. Premier Robarts did not even acknowledge receipt of the study, and it was released a week ago by the Globe and Mail. Excerpts are printed here.

In 1961-62 36,000 students attended sixteen Ontario universities: it has been estimated that by 1970-71 at least 91,000 students will be enrolled in eighteen universities. In 1961-62 there were about 2,100 persons on the teaching staffs of the Ontario universities: it is estimated that by 1970-71 more than 8,500 university teachers will be needed.

For the universities of Ontario, the main problem is not simply that of enlarged enrolment: it is the problem of enlarged enrolments and of making major improvements in almost all areas other than undergraduate training.

In no Canadian university is research carried out—like teaching—as a part of the normal activity of the university community. Yet research is needed to keep up the standards of the university—to keep the university teacher alive and growing. Without research, universities are merely glorified secondary schools. To extend the boundaries of knowledge is as much the duty of the university as is the passing on of knowledge.

Many of the better American universities consider it to be essential to have a large body of graduate students pursuing intensive, specialized, advanced work. At Harvard, Yale and Princeton, for example, the number of graduate students is at least equal to the number of undergraduates. At Harvard in 1959, out of a student body of 11,000, 6,500 were graduates. This is a ratio of 1 to 0.7 — a far cry from that which obtains in Ontario institutions. At the University of Chicago, there are roughly twice as many graduate as undergraduate students, and the same is true at Columbia. At Princeton and Yale the ratio is approximately 1 to 1. At Duke University the avowed policy is to maintain a proportion of some 1,800 graduate students out of an enrolment of 5,000. At most good state universities, a ratio of 1 graduate to 2 undergraduates is usual.

In Ontario the ratio is far less encouraging. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics publications, in 1962-63 only about 3,300 out of some 39,000 full-time students were pursuing advanced work towards graduate degrees. (For all of Canada the total university student population was approximately 141,000, with about 8,500 registered in graduate degree courses.) At the University of Toronto, excluding from the statistics the largely undergraduate enrolment of the federated and affiliated colleges, the D.B.S. figures indicate a graduate enrolment of 1,390 and an undergraduate enrolment of 7,800 — or a ratio of 1 to 5.6. But even that figure, for the institution with by far the largest graduate activity in Canada, falls far below that of the leading American or British universities. And if we include in the Toronto statistics the enrolment in the affiliates and federates, we get a ratio of about 1 to 9.

Between 1956 and 1962, the total number of Ph. D. degrees granted by Canadian universities in all disciplines increased only from 292 to 321. Every projection indicates that Ontario will need by 1970 some 5,800 additional university teachers. Even if as many as 50 per cent of new Ph. D. holders can be attracted to university posts, at the current rate of graduation we shall fill only 20 per cent of our needs.

A recent survey of Canada's largest university libraries produced the very depressing comment that not one Canadian university library could be considered first class: not one of them could compare with the best in Britain, in the United States, or in most of the European states. In the main, our holdings are really only adequate for undergraduate teaching in arts, science and the professions; a few libraries can boast of impressive holdings in some specialized area, but in the main they are inadequate as centres for advanced study.

The number of engineering students has remained almost constant since 1958, but the number of engineering faculties has increased from two to ten in that period. Thus in these faculties there is now extensive excess capacity at the undergraduate level, and yet there are still serious deficiencies in advanced specialized courses, graduate work, and research.

Two new faculties of medicine are needed in Ontario. All the existing medical schools need extensive and expensive new faculties to keep pace with the rapid expansion of medical science.

A thought on love

After the commonly held had their airing for so long, it seems that a different approach to the problem of love might be rewarding. This article stems from a basic dissatisfaction with the prevalent "hip and bust" theory, and is an attempt to philosophize on Erich Fromm's The Art of Loving, a book which unfortunately runs into a clinical study of the types of love, and not a study of the whys of love.

In this sphere we have to live with two problems: first, love is an experience difficult to define and more difficult to study. Also, love is a horribly overdone word which has lost virtually all meaning.

It is obvious that love is something that takes place between two or more people — both do not have to be in love at the same time: it is quite possible to love another without being loved.

If love is something that takes place between individuals, the nature of the individuals is relevant. Niebuhr defines man in The Nature and Destiny of Man as a being with both a finite and infinite nature: it is finite in that man has a body organically attached to the physical world; it is infinite in the fact that man has the ability to transcend or stand outside any given situation.

Thus man, unlike animals, can pose questions at any time. He has the ability to step away from his involvement and reflect upon it: in fact, to any answer he can ask a further question, and thus can transcend himself ad infinitum. Cassirer considers this to be man's "symbolic" nature, but following Niebuhr we will refer to it as man's infinite nature.

The individual, then, has two sides. Love is some sort of relationship between individuals. First, it could be a physical relationship: in this case, the finite characteristics are the most important. The body is roughly equivalent to a machine: it is an organism bound by some higher force which determines its mode of existence. An interest in the finite site would soon lead to an interest in what controls it. Thus, a physical interest will tend to become an interest in the infinite nature of the individual.

Of course, one could say that an interest in the physical could be maintained by itself (an idea that many seem to hold). This would be possible only by and appreciation of the thing as a thing in itself.

This "hips and bust" type love is basically unsatisfying to the reason, and thus will be rejected by the reflecting individual. As Erich Fromm claims in his book, such a love would be a type of symbiotic relationship, or an interest in one's self, a self love.

At the minimum, then, love is some kind of relationship between the infinite sides of two individuals. When a return is made to the nature of man, we must remember that one qualification — what theologians consider original sin — is involved.

This can be summarized briefly as meaning that an individual will always tend to positive ends to his infinite nature when in fact it is possible to abstract still further. (That is why something as gigantic as the meaning of life is unanswerable by a human). The infinite side of man, then, is always qualified by the fact that it is infinite only in possibility, not in actuality.

To summarize: Love is some sort of relationship between two people: it is a relationship which is directed to the infinite side of man's nature, but this infinite nature exists only in possibility, not in actuality.

We now continue on with our attempt to redefine love, not love as it is commonly understood, but love understood at its highest pitch, the point at which it burns brightest and is most satisfying.

There are two limits between the lover and the loved. The lover is limited in his appreciation of the loved by his own original sin; the loved is limited by her original sin. And if the loved is limited then she cannot be differentiated from others, and cannot be loved because of her finiteness, since an infinite capacity in possibility was expected.

By JOHN SEWELL

The hurdle underlying the problem is that of actuality vs. possibility. The reasonable mind expects, or reasons toward, an infinite nature, but realizes original sin blocks out such a conception.

This constitutes the strangeness, the paradox, of love; while every individual is infinite in possibility (although still possessing his inescapable finite characteristics), the loved is infinite in actuality (although still possessing her inescapable finite characteristics).

Since the loved is seen as unconditioned, the lover is attracted. The lover then, is affected in two ways: he is shown an infinite nature in actuality. Secondly, his own infinite possibility is affirmed, and appended to that possibility is the chance of actuality.

Love, then, is an experience by the lover of the infinite actuality of the loved.

Using this analysis, the results of "being in love" are more explicable. The loved is seen by the lover as infinite in actuality; others are only infinite in possibility. The loved, then, is much more alive, more real etc. than other people. The loved because of her greatness, is someone to be worshipped, to be adored, precisely because of her infinite capacities.

The lover can do no better than wish to serve the loved but a dilemma is involved here. The lover wants to be with the loved at all times in order to renew this affirmation or greatness and to serve the infinite actuality he has seen. Yet at the same time, he must be set apart from the loved so that he never tries to prescribe what the loved is to do; to do that would be to deny infinite actuality.

Thus the lover must walk the perilous brink of allowing the loved to act as she deems fit, yet always hoping that she will act in accordance with his wishes. This again is involved with the doctrine of original sin. One never transcends far enough, and thus all actions are basically self-seeking. Love does not obliterate original sin except for an instant; rather, it makes the lover realize that he is inoculated with it, showing him the error without being able to prescribe a remedy.

This also coincides with the idea that no action done by the lover is good enough for the loved.

Love, then, gives to the loved the power, with the consent of the lover, to act as she pleases. This means the lover must take into account before he does anything how such an action will affect the loved. In other words, the lover's consideration for himself will be superseded to as large a degree as possible in human relationships by consideration for the loved. The love allows to the loved free reign to her womanhood, i.e. she can exist as she pleases as far as the lover is concerned. If this is not the case (if further proof were needed for this theorem), the relationship would become symbiotic, the loved existing solely as a subordinate of the lover.

Two implications arise here: first, the explanation is really no explanation at all because something inexplicable, i.e. a miracle, is necessary, namely that the original sin of the lover and the loved must be removed. That in itself is quite beyond man, and thus the definition seems useless.

But not entirely so, the second implication arises from the fact that although we still can't say exactly how the love arose, we can, to some extent delineate the duties of the lover.

First, the lover must respect the loved: she alone is unconditioned. One sociological article reads: "The love of a person implies not the possession of that person, but the affirmation of that person. It means granting him gladly the full reign to his unique manhood." In trying to captivate the loved, as one would captivate a tiger, the loved would be destroyed. No longer would she be able to exercise this unconditioned quality which she possesses. And this is the paradox talked of earlier. The Numbers of medical students cannot be increased quickly and the operating cost per student is inevitably higher than for other students, yet this differential does not appear to be recognized in the existing pattern of grants.

The staffing problem is an acute one. It faces us in the simplest and starkest form — that of securing enough persons to stand up in front of undergraduate classes and give adequate lectures to junior students. But it faces us in many, much more complex forms as well. Of course even a freshman student is entitled to know that he is listening to the views of an acknowledged expert on the subject of the lecture. If, instead, he is faced with a graduate student, just at the beginning of his preparation as an academic specialist, and who perhaps "took the course" himself only a year or so before, then the student is being cheated of his rights.

Let no university administrator or provincial politician be misled: the present practice of enlarging classes and hiring cheaper and less-well qualified teachers, will not solve our university problem. It will merely reduce the already often dangerously low quality of teaching.

A concerted, planned effort must be made now to recruit — not only in Canada, but in the United States, the United Kingdom and elsewhere — scholars of reputation and accomplishment to bolster the faculties of existing institutions and to form a nucleus of proven competence for the faculties of the new institutions being planned.

It is becoming increasingly difficult to import university teachers, for the same problems of numbers are facing universities in both Britain and the United States. Salaries at the best American universities range from $3,000 to $10,000 above comparable ones at Canadian institutions. When research facilities are inadequate and the best graduate students are attracted elsewhere by better facilities and more generous fellowships, it is difficult to attract or retain good teachers.

We should now be giving thought to the requirements of 1975 and 1980. But the kind of hard thinking needed about goals, purposes and direction must be based on accurate information. Unfortunately, as is indicated in the statistical table, our information about even the current situation seems to be sadly deficient.

We cannot stress strongly enough our conviction that what is needed at this time is not a well-meaning but ill-informed crash programme, but a careful and rational examination of the future demands on and needs of the universities of Ontario.

Some apparently possible ways of increasing utilization of expensive buildings and equipment may not be as feasible as they appear on first sight.... Improving utilization of physical facilities is only one part of the problem. The shortage of university teachers is a more intractable one. Any improvement in the use of their time will help solve the larger problem.

Perhaps even more important than improving the use of physical and human resources in any one institution is the encouragement of some form of co-operation amongst the whole provincial group. The luxury of completely separate and independent existence is no longer possible. In important matters such as the expansion of research and of graduate studies, for example, a provincial scheme is essential, and a measure of co-operation among the participating universities would be most desirable.

At present our salary scales are rather below comparable ones for secondary school teachers. It is hard to justify the anomalous situation in which a university teacher, usually with a Ph. D., can be receiving at age 36 a salary of less than $8,000, whereas a classmate with whom he attended university is receiving at least $9,600 in the Ontario secondary school system.

Because of the complexities of university problems and their many unique characteristics, the province must have access to advice on university matters from senior persons with recent experience in university teaching.... One way of getting disinterested advice of high calibre might be to draw on the experience of senior retired university staff, or to arrange for the seconding of senior academics from universities for a period of years.... It would be as undesirable to have the civil servants in the Department of Education, as constituted at present, responsible for university affairs, as it would be to have university teachers directing the secondary school system.

It is... of critical importance that the basis for distributing provincial grants be an equitable one which will further development of the right kind of higher education without generating resentments, difficulties and inefficiencies. We are convinced that the provincial government should draft for the universities, as it has for secondary schools, a more exact and comprehensive statement on the way in which grants will be allocated.... If there is to be such a policy, and not just a series of ad hoc decisions, it should be stated publicly, so that there can be discussion of it.

The mere fact of having to make an annual request for grants imposes severe limitations on the administrative heads of the province's universities: they may fear to arouse controversy; they may refuse to innovate even where innovation appears necessary. Already there has been, not only in Ontario but everywhere in Canada, a great deal of governmental interference in university policy.

We are compelled to say that we have grave doubts that, in the nature of things, the province is adequately informed on university matters. To ensure that the province's financial support and interest in university affairs will be as enlightened as the needs of both the universities and Ontario require, we therefore request that:

(1) The Government ensure that university affairs in Ontario will be studied on a systematic and continuing basis by establishing an Academic Advisory Committee as a knowledgeable and independent agency.

(2) The government consider establishing an independent University Grants Committee to be responsible for recommending to the Government the total amount of government grants to universities, and for determining the allocation of such grants among the universities.

(3) If the Government should be unwilling to establish such a grants committee at this time, that it adopt a policy on university grants which takes into account more adequately the different circumstances of the various universities, and that such policy be stated publicly in greater detail than is the present practice.

Yee Yee Umoo Um Ooyoo La Mum Ba

by N. DAVID GREYSON

The Faculty of Music announced yesterday that it is planning to sponsor a sensational new Toronto singing quartet which is presently touring North America.

The group—the Spyders—whose members come from Mimico and Forest Hill, have become nationally known as a result of the recent craze over singing insect quartets. The "Crickets" were the first to start the fad, but as they sing only in the summer, competition from them at this time of year will be minimal. Despite this, these lovable minsterels have indeed won a place in our hearths.

The leader of the Spyders, Mack O'Neum, told the Varsity in an exclusive interview, "Ow yah yah, oohah oohah $25,000 loo yah more more!"

This reporter was fortunate enough to sit in on a private recording session of their newest release—"Yee yee Umoo Um Ooyoo La Mum Ba". This record is already a best seller, two weeks before it hits the record shops. Only 800 others were present at this exclusive, private recording session.

Their manager, impresario Tony Clonus, former virtuoso tambourine player with the Evangelical Invaders Band (Third Platoon) told us in an exclusive interview, "Get outta here—you ain't fit to breathe in the same air as these sweet kids!"

Watching these dynamic, sensational, young, very rich performers was a real thrill. They stand perfectly still as they sing, only their femurs and adam's apples move. They do not move their lips, but the left corners of their mouths hang slack. Every fourth bar they jump up and down ten times very rapidly, still standing at attention.

Their four-buttoned, grey pin-striped sequined jackets reflect the violet spotlights, and at a given signal, their lapels light up and spell out the words "Mother, I love you."

Their own special trade mark naturally is their shaved heads and eyebrows, and their fingernails, which they have let grow to a length of four inches.

I did not realize until after the performance that none of the group wore trousers. They have a permanent crease into their shirts, and their legs are painted black.

Tab S. Dorsalis, and Lou Ettick, sopranos of the group (they are all sopranos) who play the triangle and lyre, respectively, told us through an interpreter, that the Spyders have always tried to remain unspoiled and pure, and have steadfastly endeavoured to preserve the Canadian way of life. Each performance begins with the patriotic national anthem, "English Country Garden."

"Eeoo Yoi ooha oooo separehoo tismoooh" they said, showing great concern over the political crisis.

Last Saturday, it was reported that over ten thousand screaming fans mobbed the Spyders during their secret and inconspicuous televised departure from their suite in Casa Loma, on their way to their rehearsal studio in City Hall.

Over 40 red-coated Mounties were needed to protect the cavalcade of purple and chartrreuse Lincoln convertibles from the teenagers who kept throwing themselves under the speeding wheels.

"Can't have that," said Constable Hep R. Lobatum, "Blood all over them nice big cars—a shame, a frightful shame."

Richard Burton was believed to have filed a protest. "We only got 35 Mounties, me and Liz—Blimey, that ain't fair."

The Faculty of Music announced plans to sponsor the Spyders after it was announced that that group received a $50,000 Canada Council Grant.

Their next concert will be with the T.S.O., at which time they will sing Handel's Classic Chorale "Y'aha oopee oy ya yo."

"If all goes well, Perry Neil, soprano of the group told us, "we plan to run for Parliament next election."

The sound of surprise

By DAVID JACKEL

Noon-hour jazz at Hart House concluded for the year on Wednesday with what was undoubtedly the finest concert of the series. Phil Branton and Lorne Tepperman led a nine-piece all-star group through four charts, two by each of the leaders. The band was in excellent form throughout. None of the arrangements were simple, but the musicians appeared to have them down almost perfectly, a tribute to their diligent rehearsing.

The program opened with Branton's arrangement of Gemini, which turned out to be the hardest-swinging number of the concert. Plenty of solo space was left in the chart for this rocking blues, and it was filled admirably by altoist Brian Barley, trumpeters Frank Mathison and Larry Smith, tenor saxophonist Bill Collins, and pianist Tepperman.

A Tepperman original entitled Portrait of Caroline followed, and here less emphasis was placed on the individual soloist. Barley and Branton had short solos and Tepperman contributed some out-of-tempo piano interludes, but the composition itself attracted most or the attention. Introduced by Tepperman as a theme and variations which made up a musical portrait, the number featured some very attractive writing and arranging, and only once or twice did the tune show signs of dissolving into separate and unrelated sections.

Branton's composition Childhood's End was the next offering. Its opening section was a beautiful ballad line which later swung into a medium tempo, and gave Branton, Collins, Tepperman, and trombonist Russ Little opportunities to contribute some good solos. Tepperman's and Little's efforts were especially impressive. The arrangement itself was noteworthy for its skilful voicing of various combinations of instruments.

The concert concluded with a long, suite-like original by Tepperman, entitled Oyster Blues. This number had a little of everything, including a good-humored parody of a dixieland ensemble, some very attractive compositional themes, and a number of fine solos by all the hornmen. Perhaps the only fault of this tune was that it included too much material and too many solos. A number of the many themes seemed to warrant further development, but were cut off prematurely.

Throughout the program the rhythm section of drummer Joe Purvis and bassist Johnny Amadio was more than adequate, although Purvis tended to be a bit stiff and mechanical at times. Amadio didn't solo during the concert, but combined very well with Tepperman's piano to keep the intricate ensembles swinging.

The concert was well-received by the large audience present, and provided an excellent conclusion to an excellent series, a series which has given a number of talented young musicians a chance to obtain some of the exposure they deserve.

Love (cont.)

lover needs the loved, yet the love would be destroyed if he trapped her. Perhaps this is why the feeling of being loved by another is so sparkling; then, there is no apparent danger of loved leaving lover or vice versa.

That, it seems, marks an end to the duties of the lover. All his attentions will be directed to the well-being, or call it what you will, of the loved.

But the results: One seems obvious. An affirmation of one person leads to an affirmation of another. The love for one, if correctly understood as not a symbiotic relationship, should lead to a respect, at least, for others. True love, I suppose would be equal love of all people. But to allow the love for one to remain attached to that one seems a bit anomalous. It would be the reading of one book for many years leaving the rest on the shelf, dusty.

STUDENTS

The renowned Harry Emerson Fosdick recently wrote in Readers' Digest under the heading, "NO ROOM IN THE INN": What I fear most of all, is that when new ideas come, new social outlooks to which the future of mankind belongs, because our minds are filled with old ideas, prejudices mental habits, we will say, NO ROOM." He could well have added NO TIME.

Our publications and airways are filled with inane, repetitious, space and time filling accounts of happenings all over the world, but there is no space, no time for a new idea that questions the status quo of financial institutions. Students must conform to what has been written. My son's professor said to him, "I don't care what your dad has written; what has he read?" Lip service only is paid to learning to think.

When Mr. T. C. Bissell became President of U. T. he spoke of this being the age of the reasoning man. I wrote to him commending his outlook, and asking for an opportunity to discuss my idea with him. My letter was returned without reference to my request.

When I addressed the U. T. Commerce Graduates' Association some years ago, President John W. Armstrong wrote congratulating me on a masterful address, and informed me that members of the faculty present had suggested that a chair be established for the purpose of analyzing all well supported proposals for monetary reform. My understanding is that the suggestion was promptly squelched.

My hope is that "Youth wants to know", and will soon cut loose from "directed" programs; that they will seek and find answers to the age old problems of perpetual poverty in the midst of potential plenty. Students, the answers are available to you.

What Canada needs is a Dual Economy Party and leaders who recognize our dual public and private enterprise status; who realize that we have got to stop the private money manufacturers from using the interest rate as a "gimmick" with which to control the economy.

Our present political parties only have plans to take from the workers, and to give increasing doles to those for whom they are unable to find jobs. The only answer to ever increasing welfare is jobs. There is enough work to do, and always will be, to revive and sustain in all citizens the salutary habit of working for a living. Without constructive work we are nothing; the human race will perish from lassitude and boredom.

THANK GOD FOR ADOLF HITLER

By ALAN WALKER

Peter Howard, Britain and the Beast, Heinemann: 1963 (10s 6d)

Peter Howard's Britain and the Beast purports to be a careful examination of Britain's position in the world and claims to offer solutions for its problems.

There was a familiar ring about the author's name, but the book's jacket didn't say anything about him. After four chapters the word "moral" started appearing once or twice a page. By the end of the book, it was obvious that here was no ordinary, clinical, unbiased critic of British beastliness.

Peter Howard, a reviewer mused . . .

A flash. Moral Re-Armament! And there is the reason for the intense naivete of the book. Behind it lies an organization of crackpots—disturbingly wealthy and successful ones, but nonetheless crackpots.

MRA despises cosmetics alcohol, tobacco and suede shoes and sees a Marxist in nearly every Jew.

MRA founder Frank (Call Me Frank) Buchman is noted above all for his statement: "I thank heaven for a man like Adolf Hitler, who built a front-line of defence against the anti-Christ of communism."

Communism is not an ideology, but a conspiracy, and MRA's conclusion that its ideology can defeat communism—that by following the four "absolutes" of "unselfishness, honesty, purity and love," mankind can cause the Kremlin to crumble—is absurd.

But everything is simple to MRA folk. I recall Frank's remarkable statement about India.

Asked what his "program" would be for India—not his hopes and aspirations but his program—Frank blissfully replied:

"Empty hands will be filled with work, empty stomachs with food, and empty hearts with an idea that really satisfied."

As Tom Driberg drily remarks in his excellent pamphlet on the MRA, "that is not a program: it is an incantation."

But what does Howard say about Britain today? Britain could be a great nation again if all men in it would join MRA. That is the book's message. Without MRA there can be no genuine acceptance of God. Without MRA man is a beast.

"He has thermonuclear teeth below the earth and his calves span the sky in space-capsules. His females have learned to wear wigs for his delight, to paint lips, cheeks, toes, eyes til they are like the colors of a mandrill's backside, to drown their natural scent with false and dazzling odors. They take drugs through their skins, lungs and mouths."

Shrieks of glee from the Communists. If Howard and his friends are the only men they have to fight, they will soon be able to take over North America by telephone.

Howard's favorite enemy in British "bestiality" is homosexuality. We must remember, he says, that "all Russian spies are trained to detect weakness in character, weakness for drink, blondes, drugs and homosexuality."

Alas, he wails, once homosexuality was in disrepute in Britain. "Today some say it is queer to be normal."

"The habit of homosexuality spreads from the top of nation. Public schools and universities foster it. Men who have it stick together and entrench themselves in positions of power. They work in Press, Politics, Theatre, Radio and Church.

"It is almost dangerous to lift a voice against it."

Unfortunately, MRA doesn't care much for heterosexuality either—not even inside marriage. To produce children, MRA stamps their approval on intercourse. Otherwise, it's indulgence. An official MRA book says: "Parents indulging inside marriage need not be surprised if their children are indulgent outside marriage."

MRA says MRA-controlled governments 'will lead the world immediately into a new era of unity, peace and plenty.' Immediately? Asks Driberg: "Isn't such language the height of facile irresponsibility?"

Many have criticized MRA and Howard devotes the last chapters of his book to a defence of Frank's faux pas: Some of them aren't easy to defend, and in the end Howard admits Frank may have erred on occasion. But, with a light touch, he quotes Frank's remark: "Well, I reserve the right to be wrong."

James Bond without sex and sadism

By DAVID CARROLL

Helen MacInnes: THE VENETIAN AFFAIR; Harcourt, Brace and World.

On the dust-jacket of The Venetian Affair is a photograph of the statues of the great Roman rulers of the Eastern and Western Empires, Diocletian and Maximian. Nudged portentously in this manner, the reader is expected to see in the action of Helen MacInnes's most recent thriller a similar East-West confrontation in the autumn of 1961.

The gist of the plot is that the communists with the aid of the French OAS are going to assassinate General De Gaulle in order to disrupt NATO and the Western Alliance. Perfectly forged letters will reveal to assorted neutralist stooges holidaying in Venice that the assassination is an Anglo-American plot. The Cold War will have been lost.

Although the action of the novel is intercontinental moving from Idlewild to Paris to Venice, one quickly begins to have misgivings about the effective range of Miss MacInnes's sympathies. For example, the protagonists. On our side, we have Bill Fenner, a handsome, slightly disenchanted believer in the old-fashioned virtues; he is a journalist with culture, as we see from his first description of Venice — "Sky by Tiepolo, vista by Guardi, foreground by Canaletto, all set to music by Vivaldi."

If this is culture then Kalganov, his opponent, certainly hasn't got what it takes. His dossier reads: "...born in Kiev, 1917; taken to Belgrade in 1919 by emigre parents; his father an ex-general turned taxi-driver. Early years unrecorded. By seventeen, he was taking part in Balkan politics — blowing up bridges, derailing trains, shooting at cabinet ministers. Two years later he added some ideology to his anarchism and went to Moscow...." One already has a sneaking suspicion that the dice are being loaded.

Once we have threaded our way through 150 pages of labyrinthine exposition and boarded the Simplon Express things begin to move. But by the time we get to Venice so many characters have been spawned by the complex plot (even though we jettisoned one with a bullet in his back on the way through Austria) that they become a positive embarrassment.

One final caveat. There is an annoying air of pretentiousness about the hero. In this post-Bond era one needs either to exploit such a trait of character or leave it alone. By the end of the novel Fenner has managed to graduate to "red mullet and properly chilled Montrachet," and he is even packing a .38/32 Smith and Wesson—but all in all he is not fit to tie 007's suede shoes. This is a James Bond without the sex, sadism and snobbery, and what's the point of that?

Workers of the world, this book can be ignored

by DAVID JACKEL

SOCIALIST THOUGHT: A DOCUMENTARY HISTORY edited by Albert Fried and Ronald Sanders Doubleday Anchor Books; $1.95; 544 pages.

It is almost a truism that quasi-textbooks on socialism of this sort never achieve their purpose. The experts ignore them, the student finds them inadequate for essay purposes, and the interested reader is only confused by the mass of seemingly unrelated material.

The editors of this attempt to make a relatively ordered process out of the history of socialism succeed only as well as their predecessors. In the introduction, the reader is warned of the impossibility of adequately presenting such a survey, but Fried and Sanders then proceed to attempt it anyway. The result is the usual combination of analysis and original material which only occasionally does justice to either.

Documents included range from such primitive conceptions of the socialist state as those held in eighteenth century France by Mably and Morelly, through to writings by Lenin, Trotsky and Stalin illustrative of Russian communism.

This latter section, and those devoted to the work of Marx and Engels and the Revisionists, make up the bulk of the book. The editors are most successful here in showing the transformation of the socialist tradition.

It is also pleasant to note that the Communist Manifesto, now available in numerous English editions, has not been included. In its place is a selection from the Economic and Philosophical Manuscripts of 1844.

But all this is still insufficient to fully document the progress of socialist thought. Its only value is as a handy source of quotations from some major socialist documents. Read in conjunction with another work, such as Edmund Wilson's To the Finland Station, it provides added documentary support for such critical analysis. But the student who continues to study socialism for any length of time will eventually find himself using Fried and Sanders for a paperweight.

Schaedler leads Irish over PHE cagers

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Group I is sporting one of the closest basketball races in years with four evenly matched teams. Each team in the group has scored at least one win over each of the other three teams.

Wednesday night, St. Michael's Double Blue finally managed to turn the tables on leading PHE I, 49-41. Ray Schaedler was high man for the winners with 17 points while Tom Kent contributed 16 and Joe Soltis 12. For the losers, Ken Elashuk and Andy Klimas both had 14.

UC II made it seven wins in eight starts with a 29-25 win over Dentistry A. Redmen now share top spot in Group II. Hans Tammemagi potted 12 for the winners, Robbie Jones 8 for Dents.

Pharmacy A broke a three-way tie for Group III leadership, edging Meds B, 29-25. Tom Laurie counted 9 for the druggists, Mike Moore 8.

In other Group III action, Trinity A took Architecture, 29-24. Architecture's Bob Track was high man with 12 while Chris Guest was Trinity's best with 9.

HOCKEY

Physical and Health Education I continues to play like champions. They won their fourth game in a row Wednesday, 4-1 over Sr. SPS, and eliminated last year's finalists. The win moved PHE one point ahead of St. Mike's A in third place.

In Group III, Pharmacy A won its fourth straight to move into sole possession of first place. The druggists scored a 3-1 win over Jr. SPS, dropping the Engineers into last place.

UC II broke out of a scoring slump to wind up on the long end of a 7-5 count over PHE II. Lee Good paced Redmen with a pair of goals, Brian Orton had a pair for PHE.

TRACK

University College is running away with the weekly indoor track competition, which is being marked by poor attendance. UC has 63 points and is 26 ahead of defending champion Victoria College.

To date a sole record has been broken, that by Bruce Kidd in the Senior 1½ mile event. Kidd (III UC) recorded a time of 7:00.0 to beat the record set last year by Bob Buchanan (OCE) by 3.0 seconds. Gurston Dacks (I UC) placed second.

Bob Manning (II UC) took the junior event in 7:17.8 ahead of Roger Summer (IV Dents).

Sumner took the junior ½ mile in 3:30.0. He was followed by Bob Manning (II UC) and Doug Wiggins (II UC). The senior event went to Gurston Dacks in a time of 3:21.6. Bill Conklin (I Vic) and Bill Shambrook (III Vic) were runners-up.

Uwe Scharge (III Arch) ran off with the senior 220 yds. in 24.0 secs. Carl Funke (IV UC) led the juniors with a time of 25.2 secs.

Gurston Dacks recorded a time of 2:05.9 to win the senior 880 yds.

The seven-lap relay went to the team of Craig, Eichmanus, Shambrook and Conklin with a time of 2:14.9.

Marlins throw Bobby Apps & Co. at league's top defensive team

by GORD BELLMORE

McMaster Marlins, who boast one of the most potent offenses in the Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League, run head-on into the league's best defensive club when they meet Varsity Blues in tonight's crucial game at Varsity Arena.

A win tonight is an absolute must for both teams. If Marlins lost they will be eliminated from the race for the Queen's Cup. Blues are not in such an unenviable position but a loss will considerably reduce their chances of winning the title.

Also at stake is first place. Marlins moved to within one point of first-place Varsity by defeating Waterloo Warriors, 6-2, Wednesday night. Blues however, have played one less game than McMaster.

The visitors should provide Blues' solid defensive corps with one of their toughest tests of the season.

Varsity has the best defence record in the league, allowing 18 goals in nine games. And Gary Aitken, who took over the Varsity goaltending in Blues' third game, sports a sparkling 2.00 goals against average.

Marlins have plenty of firepower to throw against Aitken and his mates, including the league's highest - scoring forward line. Rookie centre Bobby Apps extended his league-scoring total to 25 points by scoring two goals and an assist against Waterloo and his linemates Pete Randle and John Savage are also in the top five scorers, each with 18 points.

Marlins' troubles this year have been defensive. In this respect they are reminiscent of last season's Blues. Although Varsity was the most prolific scoring team in the league last season, defensive weaknesses cost them the Queen's Cup.

Marlins' Jimmy Cannon is still an excellent netminder but McMaster is weaker this season on defence. Only rookie Jim McKendry has shown consistency and he alone can't replace Butch Hyde and Ian Sinclair, who are gone from last year's national championships.

Sinclair, in effect, seems to be the difference for both Marlins and Blues this season—in one case the loss of him, in the other the gain. A quiet, unspectacular rear-guard, Sinclair is easily the most efficient defenceman in the league. His presence with Varsity this season goes a long way in explaining Blues' first-place position.

Varsity coach Joe Kane continues to shuffle his lines to gain more scoring depth. The latest development has Bobby (The Fly) McClelland between Don Fuller and George Olah. The only line to stay intact is the high-scoring trio of Sonny Osborne and the Monteith brothers, Hank and Steve.

Stray Shots — John Gilfillan, the McGill grad now at U of T Law school, will see action tonight. . . . Blues and Marlins play a return match next Wednesday in Dundas, Ont. . . . Montreal Carabins, tied with Laval three points behind Blues, play road games this weekend at Waterloo and Queen's. Laval plays at home against McGill. . . .

Little Skippy Kerner scored four goals to lead McGill to a 5-3 win over Queen's Wednesday night in Montreal.

West scores 31, increases scoring lead

Cagers donate win to 'charity'

By PAUL HENDERSON

WATERLOO — Charity does not win basketball games. Just ask any member of Toronto Varsity cagers.

Blues were more charitable than their hosts, Waterloo Warriors, as they helped Warriors to a 70-68 victory here Wednesday.

Blues gave the ball to Waterloo by travelling, stepping out of bounds and handling the ball carelessly. In all, they surrendered the ball 14 times after committing errors.

Warriors also engaged in scrambling play but did not offer aid to the opposition as much as Blues. They also took better advantage of their opportunities, many of which were afforded by Toronto fouls.

Diminutive Bob Balahura netted two foul shots with six seconds left to clinch the game for Waterloo. Balahura scored nine free throws, in the game, several after Blues fouled him unnecessarily when he was not in position for a good shot.

Blues were not always guilty, however, as they were victims of what Varsity coach John McManus termed "terrible refereeing". Referees Kitch McPherson and Bert Carrigan also reserved some unusual calls for Warriors.

Blues jumped into an early lead, but Warriors tied it, 14-14, at the end of the first quarter. Waterloo pulled ahead 33-30 at the half and dominated play in the third quarter to mount a 51-43 lead.

Blues fought back to tie the score with five minutes remaining. The lead then changed several times as Jerry Raphael of Waterloo and Dave West of Toronto exchanged baskets. West scored three points to tie the game with 11 seconds left and set the stage for Balahura. A shot by West from near centre bounced off the rim as the final buzzer sounded.

West incurred two questionable offensive fouls in the first two minutes of play but survived the remaining 38 minutes to pace Blues with 31 points, eight for the foul line. A technical foul accompanied West's second infraction when he made a comment which lacked subtlety.

Despite his 31 points, West, like every other Blue, did not play one of his better games. He occasionally relaxed on defence (partially excusable because Waterloo substituted regularly to wear down Blues and made a considerable number of errors in which the derisive Waterloo crowd delighted).

Raphael topped Waterloo, netting 24 points. Most of his eight field goals were scored on hook-shots as Blues' Ed Bords and Dave Ouchterlony controlled the boards. The two six-foot, six-inch Varsity forwards scored 14 and 9 points respectively, mostly on tip-ins, but missed on a number of chances which would have given Blues a substantial lead.

Under the basket: — West maintained his position at the head of league scoring by increasing his average to 25.3 points per game. Raphael is second with an average of 23.0. . . . Blues face undefeated Windsor Lancers in Windsor Saturday. Lancers are notorious for being particularly tough in their home court.

Blues: — West (31), Bords (14), Ouchterlony (9), Neldre (8), Woloshyn (5), O'Neill (1), Baranowicz, Kane, McKenzie, Kime.

Warriors: — Raphael (24), Balahura (19), Demko (11), Pando (8), Mann (6), Aldridge (2), Schwarzkopf, Inglo, Steinburg, Finch.

Varsity guns for 4 college titles

Senior intercollegiate championships will be at stake this weekend for four University of Toronto teams. Varsity's squash and badminton teams play in title meets at Western, the ski team is at Ste. Saviour, Que., and the curlers are at Guelph.

The squash tournament is expected to be a close battle between the three competing teams, Varsity, McGill and Western. McGill won the title last year, sweeping all 10 of its matches, but has been weakened by the loss of former college singles champ Colin Adair and Dave Scarlett.

Varsity's team is comprised of veterans Doug Tilley, Leighton McCarthy and Frank Buck and newcomers Paul (Golden Toe) Wilson and Hugh Parker. Buck was added to the team at the last moment when Jim Rowland, an impressive newcomer, sprained an ankle in practice this week.

The badminton team, which finished third last season, has two returnees in veteran Tim Smith and Ernie McCullough. Newcomers are John Gilbert, the Ontario junior mixed doubles champion, and Bibhu Mohanty.

McGill, the host team, is favored to wrest the ski championship from defending champ Laval. Toronto's chief threat is Per Furst, who has gained a national reputation since coming to Canada from Norway. Furst recently came second to Canadian champion Wolfgang Winkel in the Ontario combined championship and is regarded as one of the best skiers in the country.

Furst joins veteran Raimo Reppo and Rick Brown on U of T's nordic team. John Norton, Paul Schuller and Don LeCocq compete in the alpine events. Varsity veteran George Torrance will miss the meet after suffering torn ankle ligaments.

Two Varsity rinks will be entered in the OQAA curling bonspiel.

Girls, girls! Get in the swim

Varsity's intercollegiate swim team is so confident of victory at Rochester University Saturday it is attempting to add social pleasantries to the excursion.

The swimmers have offered six co-eds (preferably freshies) all-expense paid trips with Varsity's swim and wrestling teams to Rochester. The only requirement is the girls must be able to provide "companionship."

The swimmers and wrestlers leave Toronto by bus Saturday morning for their duel meets. Any interested females are asked to contact rookie (?) swimmer Mike Chapelle at ME-3-6853 tonight.

This will be the third meet of the season for the swimmers against American competition. In earlier meets they defeated Bowling Green and Wayne State universities and lost to Colgate, all at Hart House.

This will be Varsity's wrestlers last matches before their OQAA title meet at Ontario Agricultural College next Saturday.

Kidd wins in N. Y.

NEW YORK (Staff) — Varsity's Bruce Kidd came from behind in the final 15 yards to win the two-mile race at the New York Athletic Club indoor games at Madison Garden last night.

Kidd, who had been well behind for most of the race, took the lead with two laps to go but dropped behind Bob Schul of Oxford, Ohio, with one lap remaining. Kidd then sprinted past Schul 15 yards from the tape to win in 8:42.6, 3-6 seconds slower than his meet record time of one year ago.

Ron Clarke of Australia, who led the field until the final two laps, finished third.

Tom O'Hara of Loyola University, Chicago, set a world indoor one-mile record of 3:56.6, two seconds faster than the former record held by Jim Beatty.

Bill Crother's won the 800 yards in 1:50.8, one-tenth of a second ahead of Robin Lingle.

Govt. grants $40,000,000 short; can expect fees raise, says Hagey

University of Waterloo President J. G. Hagey predicted Friday that there will probably be a fee increase in all Ontario universities next year.

Dr. Hagey said fees would have to go up, since the Ontario universities asked the government for $140,000,000 aid and received only $101,000,000 in the recent budget.

"I think it is likely that there will be an across-the-board fee increase, but it won't be asked for by the government," Dr. Hagey told The Varsity in a telephone interview.

He said the general increase would be a trend in the province rather than a formal agreement. He saw the raise as inevitable in the face of increased operating costs being met in most universities.

"We have to make both ends meet somehow," he said. The government aid alone would not do so, he pointed out.

In the past month, fees for the next academic year have increased substantially at the University of British Columbia and the University of Alberta. Alberta students protested immediately at the announcement.

Suggest better deal for Quebec

By BRUCE LEWIS

Centralist and decentralist virtually agreed on a need for more French-Canadian autonomy at the SAC Confederation conference Saturday.

Despite bellicose opposition to decentralist Peter Gzowski of Maclean's Magazine, Douglas Fisher, New Democrat MP for Port Arthur, concluded a panel discussion by suggesting that French Canada should be given room to grow, and build preserve itself.

In practical terms this meant that Quebec should be allowed to "opt out" of joint programs. The federal government would then decrease the amount of taxes collected in Quebec to allow the French-Canadians to use this money for their own purposes.

This was not far from Mr. Gzowski's position. He claimed that Quebec does not want to take anything away from the rest of Canada. Quebec was the fastest developing section of the country. For instance, he said, it would have the most progressive system of education after Bill 60 is passed. But it would have to have the resources to carry out its revolution.

In contrast there was almost violent debate and heckling on the question of bilingualism and biculturalism for the rest of Canada.

Mr. Gzowski saw implications of bilingualism and biculturalism in the British North America Act beyond what was actually written into it. We should "run bilingualism down the civil service's throats, if we have to," he said. There may be some injustices committed in the process, but the French have been mistreated for generations, and now it's the turn of the English.

But this was nonsense, Mr. Fisher retorted. We have to look at the facts. The French-Canadians have lost the "battle of the cradle" and their numbers are decreasing at each census. It's reasonable for the mto want to preserve what they have, but it's ridiculous to expect that the other Canadians will ever learn French. Most of the francophiles who now are shouting for bilingualism know little or nothing about French. To English Canada, Quebec's culture is exemplified in Jean Beliveau and Rocket Richard.

Mr. Gzowski felt Canada needed strong provincial governments to carry out "social experiments" which couldn't be effected on a national scale. Saskatchewan's medical care plan was an example.

Superimposed above this would be a binational state with two cultures by which immigrants would be assimilated.

But Mr. Fisher said Quebec could achieve a binational state by equal participation and not by withdrawal. Mr. Gzowski's plans would emasculate Ottawa. This whole matter was going to be thrashed out in the near future. It was important, indeed imperative, that English Canada not be bluffed but bargain from a position of strength.

Mr. Fisher made one of his traditional attacks on the CBC. He accused it of being dominated by an established elite and practicing "niceness" and "nicelyism". It played on our

Stripper jams West Hall

Libby Jones, B.A., proved Friday that strip teasers vary their routine according to the type of audience.

Miss Jones kept her clothes on and spoke to 600 enthusiastic students on the social and psychological effects of stripping.

The West Hall was filled 20 minutes before Miss Jones started to speak.

The 45-minute session took the form of questions and answers instead of a lecture. Libby said she deplores "long tedious academic lectures".

Typical questions were: "You have a B.A. and you're stripping. What would you be doing if you had a Ph.D.?"

and "Do you enjoy any fringe benefits in your profession?" She said she would be in the audience if she had a Ph.D. and the fringe benefits were the large turnouts at her lectures.

A Medsman was concerned about the possibility of chronic backache and a woman student inquired after Libby's spiritual welfare. Libby, who doesn't have back trouble, hopes eventually to become a Catholic.

Some statistics she gave startled the audience and may have determined some future strippers. The average stripper earns about $10,000 a year.

U of M paper censured for editorial; 22 staff members quit

By WENDA McNEVIN

McGill Daily Staff Writer

MONTREAL (Special) — The entire editorial staff of Le Quartier Latin, the University of Montreal student newspaper, resigned Friday.

The cause: a vote de blâme passed against Pierre-Emmanuel Garon for an editorial which appeared Jan. 30.

The editorial being challenged, entitled "Mgr. Lussier et le Rapport Bouchard," was a bitter denunciation of the alleged textbook monopoly and alleged participation in it by Mgr. Irene Lussier, rector of the University of Montreal.

Mgr. Lussier demanded that Le Quartier Latin's financial support be cut off, and set up a disciplinary committee.

But Pierre Marois, the U of M student council (AGEUM) president, defended the paper. Students on the disciplinary committee said there should only be a retraction printed in the paper. The AGEUM then moved the motion of censure.

One paragraph in particular angered the AGEUM. Its English translation reads:

"There are two alternatives to choose from: either the rector knew that he had been dishonest in combining the two duties, or else he did not know. If he did not know, he is a poor fool, totally unaware of the situation (un pauvre type totalement dépourvu); if he knew and nevertheless exercised the two functions simultaneously, he shows us that he is a shabby, petty individual (un être mesquin) for whom the individual good is preferable to that of the community."

A council meeting was held last Thursday night to discuss the situation. For two hours the arguments were hot and angry.

It was finally decided to take a vote on the proposed vote de blâme. Council split 19 to 12 in favor of the motion.

Although AGEUM said this was just a warning, the entire editorial staff of 22 regarded it as proof that the newspaper, as they were operating it, did not have the confidence of the council.

They resigned, but agreed to remain for the next two weeks because "we feel it is our responsibility to continue thus and allow AGEUM to find a new staff."

When asked whether he foresaw the possibility of a return to the status quo, Co-Directeur Michel Beaulieu replied:

"I know for myself and (directeur Guy) Bertrand that we will not go back; for the others, I cannot speak. We all agree with the stand taken. I don't believe that anyone will back down and return."

French-Canadians can't be absorbed

By BRUCE LEWIS

Forty students of the University of Toronto and neighboring institutions heard speeches and panel discussions on the future of Canadian Confederation at an SAC conference during the weekend.

Dean Frank Scott of the McGill law school, a member of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, highlighted the program. He gave several short speeches in which he explained the purpose of the royal commission and expounded some of his own "non-controversial" opinions.

He invited students present to submit briefs to the commission if they wished. (They already have 475 briefs promised.) He said that this commission was different from similar bodies in that it was going on a cross-country tour to stimulate discussion and encourage people to clarify the problem in their minds.

The dean claimed that it is the "most utter nonsense" to think that French-Canadians will ever be assimilated. The fringes of the two cultural groups may become assimilated but that "doesn't mean the amalgamation of the whole thing into one general mess."

Independence for Quebec would not solve the minority problem, he said, because there would still be an English minority in Quebec and a French minority in the rest of Canada. The only way to "solve" a minority problem is extermination.

What we do need now is establish a fair basis for living together while letting each group keep its own identity.

T. A. Heinrich, former director of the Royal Ontario Museum, disagreed with Dean Scott's views about a common culture. He felt that Canada "should develop something not English or French" but incorporating the best of both after a while into a Canadian culture.

On Friday night Donald S. Macdonald, parliamentary assistant to the minister of justice and MP for Rosedale, gave his "centralist" position.

He suggested that Canada couldn't be a unitary state for historical reasons and because of differences in local climates, economies, and psychologies.

But we do need a strong federal government to handle matters that concern more than one province, like defence, foreign affairs and immigration.

Though there is some justice for the claim that Quebec has been mistreated, all the provinces have their claims against the federal government. We should not sacrifice the interests of the rest of the provinces to the internal revolution and turmoil in Quebec.

At the end of the conference the students voted 13 to 9 against a resolution advocating a federal department of education. They then spent three-quarters of an hour discussing whether or not they should vote on any more resolutions. They decided not to by 15 to 9.

BRIEFS

Hugues Panassie's Handbook of Jazz lists Sleepy John Estes' death date as March, '53. Taint so. Sleepy John and his Tennessee Jug Busters will prove Panassie wrong by singing gritty blues at the First Floor Club tomorrow and Wednesday nights. The 60-year-old blind singer from Brownsville, Tenn., is one of the last country bluesmen. Between 1929 and 1941 he cut some 50 records, then quit. Two years ago zealous blues hunters found him and took him to Chicago where he started recording again.

OTTAWA (Special) — The Canadian Universities Foundation has announced appointment of a commission to study the financing of higher education in Canada. The commission will be headed by Professor Vincent Bladen, dean of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences at the University of Toronto.

Famed philosopher Paul Tillich of the University of Chicago will speak Tuesday in Convocation Hall, the second lecture in the University College "Current" series.

The new president of the campus Progressive Conservative Club has called the newly-formed "anti-Diefenbaker" wing of the club a "joke" and the work of a group of "losers." Phillip Buckner (III Trin) told The Varsity that the new wing was made up of club members who lost out in the club's annual election of officers Thursday. He said the wing would be "lucky if it got 10 members."

COLUMBUS, Ohio (Special) — About 5,000 Ohio, State University students demonstrated for several hours after a coed was jailed for refusing to pay a $5 jaywalking fine. The rioters blocked streets and damaged property during the demonstration that started on campus, moved four miles into the downtown area and then returned to campus.

Panel (cont.)

"bleeding hearts" to create sympathy for Quebec.

But Mr. Gzowski suggested that one of the CBC's main weaknesses was its failure to take advantage on its English network of the richness of French-Canadian culture.

Later, on being questioned about the strength of separatism, Mr. Gzowski said he thought it was weakening. He admitted that though McLean's scientists found that 13 per cent of the Quebecois were separatists, in fact, the scientists say that they can get a 10-per-cent "lunatic" fringe to say yes to almost any question.

Chairman of the panel was Professor Bora Laskin of the faculty of law. He suggested that a federal state had the most difficult system of government. Canada's provinces have more power than do similar divisions in any other federal state. Therefore "the solution for this country is not going to come from grinding down the centre," he said.

Women not here for men

Despite male opinion, all girls are not in university to hook a man. This was the consensus in survey conducted recently by The Canadian Press of the deans of women at Canadian universities.

Some of the deans felt that the universities' goal in educating women is to prepare them for raising a family.

But Mrs. H. A. Innis, dean of women at University College, said: "I don't think the university has a separate goal in education for women and I don't think it should have."

"Women are people, they are parents, citizens, human beings. They need to submit to the discipline of intellectual training and to have their minds and their horizons enlarged. A well-educated and sensible young woman can quickly acquire the skills needed in homemaking and child-rearing."

Interfaculty Quiz Results

Eight college or faculty teams move into the quarter finals of the Interfaculty Quiz this week.

Seven first-round-winners and a bye-winner will go on to the quarters.

First-round results:

Meds	315	SMC	185
Trin	215	Emm	105
Vic	325	Mus	60
New	180	UC	125
Eng	220	Low	160
UC	340	Mus	115
Law	215	Emm	175

St. Michael's won a place in the round, getting the highest score among the losers.

The quarter final matches will be held in Room 106, UC from 1—1:45 p.m. with the following teams and dates:

Monday, Feb. 24, Meds v. UC

Thursday, Feb. 27, Vic v. Law

Friday, Feb. 28, Eng. v. SMC

Monday, March 3, Trin v. New

The highest score recorded to date is the 340 points of UC. But no solid favorite has emerged from the eight teams. By the next match, there may be a buzzer system installed to replace the raised-hand response.

At the conclusion of the tournament, an all-star team will be chosen to compete with York University. In addition, the CBC or CTW will be asked to sponsor a Canada-wide 'College Bowl'.

says students natural art thieves

Stealing works of art doesn't bother college students, a Toronto lawyer said Saturday.

That's why bearded William Yates, 23, of Charles St., stole two oil paintings worth $150 from the Colonnade walls Jan. 18, said his defence counsel, Gordon Ecclestone.

Yates isn't a university student himself, the lawyer said, but lives in the U of T area. "Some things in the area are considered fair game for university students," Mr. Ecclestone told Magistrate Joseph Addison.

He explained that Yates had visited fraternity houses and had seen things students had stolen.

The president of a sorority told a reporter:

"I don't think you find the girls doing this sort of thing, but the boys certainly do."

But fraternity men denied ever stealing anything "as pranks."

Students' Administrative Council finance commissioner Larry Ward currently is trying to persuade the SAC to recognize fraternities as official campus organizations.

The Caput expunged the Greek-letter organizations from the campus in 1960 after Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority was caught discriminating against a Negro student.

French house idea gets mixed reaction at U of T

Announcement that Waterloo Lutheran University plans to set up a French House similar to the popular United States' examples has brought mixed reaction from campus French departments.

Rev. R. B. Donovan, head of St. Michael's French department said that the college at present does have a house which has offices for its French staff as well as a common room where French magazines are available and only French is spoken.

Professor P. F. Dembowski of the University College French department said such a plan had not been considered for UC. Commenting on the practicability of establishing such a house on a campus-wide basis, he said that the idea was new at U of T, and "would take great imagination to achieve."

Professor W. S. Rogers of the Trinity French department said that his college is considering something more elaborate than their present 'French table'.

Alliance Francaise, has a number of boarding houses in English towns across Canada, and a French-speaking residence at Waterloo University. It is also active in Toronto.

UC student exhibits silk-screen art

Charles Pachter (IV UC), is exhibiting a collection of serigraphs (silk-screen prints) at the Pollock Gallery on Markham Street. The showing opened Feb. 2 and ends

Wednesday.

Pachter is one of the relatively few young Canadian artists who has turned to the silk-screen (until recently used only for commercial posters) as a medium for creative expression. The medium offers a wide range of color intensities and allows the use of a succession of transparent overlays, each of which modifies the structure of the total print.

The materials he has used to shape his prints range from paper towels and cut-out doilies (Corner Lot and Dream Machine) to wire screening used to amplify the texture of some of his city scenes

A THURBER CARNIVAL

the paternalists

"The Board may make provision for enabling the students of the University, University College and the federated universities and federated colleges to appoint a representative committee of themselves to be chosen in such a manner as shall be approved by the Board, which shall be the recognized official medium of communication on behalf of such students between them and the Board." — U of T Act, 1947.

This section of the U of T Act is the enabling legislation that created the Students' Administrative Council. It limits the legal control by the board over the SAC to the manner in which the representative body is elected.

Except for the voting procedure, the powers of the representative body are to stem from the students, the Act only enabled such a representative body to be established.

The purpose of the student body is to represent the students to the board. It will be the recognized student voice; speaking as students, for students.

Well . . . that is the way it appears in the U of T Act, as passed by the Ontario government.

But the general by-laws of the board tell a different story. In the detailed rules — which were laid down by the board itself — the SAC was relegated to the role of a subsidiary. Other subsidiaries include the Frederick Harris Music Co. Ltd., the Computation Centre, the Hart House Theatre and the University of Toronto Press. None of the latter are representative bodies, elected by a part of the academic community.

Subsidiary status involves the board's right to appoint the SAC's chief financial administrator, to tell that administrator what to do and gives the administrative vice-president "authority to examine and to investigate any documents and books of account of whatever nature, or any other matter relating in any way to the administrative, financial and accounting functions" of the SAC.

In other words, after the Ontario government established the SAC as a student representative body, the board of governors passed a series of by-laws which placed the SAC under the board's control.

Last year's council asked for changes in this arrangement, and requested that the SAC be recognized as the representative body it is supposed to be. The findings of a board committee established to consider these requests have not yet been received.

In the past, board members and some administrators, particularly Administrative Vice-President Frank Stone, have argued that because the board collects the SAC fee from students, the board should act as steward over that money.

Students, both in and out of the SAC, maintain that the money belongs to the students, and that the board is merely making the collection easier.

The board's argument is no more than paternalism. It is based on the assumption that students are not mature enough, and that the SAC is not stable enough to handle the student funds.

Even without questioning the legality of the by-laws which make the SAC a subsidiary body, and without examining the absurd situation of a representative body being controlled by the body to which it is supposed to be representative, the board's attitude is repugnant to us.

The SAC is the only campus-wide representative student body. As a democratically elected body, it should be able to control its own affairs, free from the paternalistic guidance of the board and senior administrators.

We have seen little if any reason to question the maturity of most SAC members; we hope that certain members of the board and administration will see fit to demonstrate their maturity by dropping their posture of paternalism.

U of T leads world in liquid helium research

By FRASER DUNFORD

It is amazing how few of us realize how important our university is in low-temperature research. From 1908 to 1923, the University of Lyden, Holland, was the only place in the world where temperatures low enough to liquify helium could be attained. But, in 1923, the second Helium liquifier in the world was built by Dr. McLennan, at the University of Toronto.

During World War I, even gaseous helium was a very rare and costly commodity. In 1912, balloons were more common than airplanes, and, since it was the best gas for balloons, the British Government was desperately in need of a large supply of helium. Prof. McLennan was asked by the British Admiralty to make a search for helium supplies in the British Commonwealth. Prof. McLennan found that the best supply could be obtained by separating gas from Canada's natural gas wells, and so he set up an air liquifier in Hamilton. Later, in Bow River, near the gas wells of Alberta. With the support of the British Admiralty, he continued his research until 1919, when the Admiralty stopped financing him. He was left with an air liquifier, and an almost priceless supply of gaseous helium. He moved back to the University of Toronto, and visited Lyden University in Holland, where he obtained the plans for a helium liquifier. He built the machine himself, and in January, 1923, he produced the first liquid helium ever made outside Lyden.

Low temperature research is very important because of the amazing properties of substances at these temperatures. Without such research, we would not have the transistor or the maser (a device used for high amplification of radio signals, for example, in radio telescopes) to name just two products of cryogenic research.

Research today is directed by Professors Graham and Hallett of the department of physics. Toronto is doing research in several fields, and is the world's leader in the study of the properties of solids at low temperatures.

Research of this sort involves very precise measurement of length-accuracy of one part in one thousand million can be obtained at Toronto. This machine is so delicate that one experiment had to be run at night because the vibrations from traffic on College Street ruined the measurements. At one time, much research on liquid helium itself was done here.

Research topics are difficult for universities. "Hot", important subjects are snapped up by industry, which has more money to spend than universities.

Prof. Hallett said, "The object of our experiments is basically to teach the students how to do research, which places another limitation on our topics. We don't touch some topics simply because they are too difficult for the students to do."

But let's go back to the Cryogenics-Lab. The amount of machinery is bewildering because not only liquid helium, but liquid air, nitrogen, and hydrogen are produced here.

The basic principle is really quite simple. The gas is put under high pressure and then suddenly expanded. Expanding air cools, as you can prove by putting your hand in the escap-

Frontier College seeks students with guts

By ROY CLARK

Frontier College wants healthy, adaptable university males with plenty of guts to work long hours of hard physical labor in rugged and remote areas of Canada for the summer.

This labor serves the purpose of relating the student to the men he will teach and lead in recreational activity in off-hours. What he teaches will depend on what the men in his crew want to learn. He will be liberally provided with educational material by the College, but all the initiative for his program will rest with him.

Frontier College was founded over half a century ago to befriend, teach, and carry hope to the forgotten men in logging camps, mines, and railway construction sites beyond the pale of organized society. Time has wrought little change in these areas, and the purpose of the College remains the same.

On Wednesday the principal of the College, Dr. Eric Robinson, will speak in Hart House to students interested in a summer with the College. He is not a smooth publicist; he will lay the cards on the table. He is not interested in enthusiastic ideologues, but wants strong, competent men.

About 30 companies, the largest being the

C.P.R. and C.N.R., hire the laborer-teachers, but this does not imply active company backing. Often the student has to contend with a hostile foreman, and on the job he has no privileges or advantages.

Naturally there is bound to be a little mistrust on the part of the men towards a fresh-faced do-gooding college kid, but this is fairly easily overcome in the majority of cases. Getting men in these conditions used to the idea of being taught is the real problem. Almost always, however, a few continue their studies by correspondence after their "professor" has left.

Often the student's sole encouragement comes from new Canadians who are ambitious to make a go of life in the new world, and bring their families over from the old. Sometimes the learning of these men is considerable, but they are hamstrung by the language problem. Their drive can be a pleasant contrast to the lethargy of the French and English Canadians.

The greatest value of Frontier College is probably not the concrete learning picked up by the men, but the discovery that there is a door of hope which they can open and move on from the starkness and sterility of their hard isolated lives.

ing air from a tire. All machines here work on the same principle.

Gaseous helium is pressurized to 210 pounds per square inch (psi). The gas is precooled with liquid nitrogen and is then passed into a machine called a Cryostat. In the Cryostat two pistons compress the gas, which is then expanded, lowering the temperature. This is repeated over and over until, finally, a few drops of liquid helium are produced.

Nitrogen is actually produced by liquifying air, and fractionating it in a fractionating column, which will separate oxygen and hydrogen due to their difference in weight.

Liquid air is the most common product. Ordinary polluted Toronto air is pumped in, washed in caustic tanks and compressed in a huge hour-stage compressor that gives the gas a huge four-stage compressor that gives the gas a pressure of 2,800psi. It is passed through purging bottles to remove oil, and a dryer to remove water. The gas has become quite hot, and so it is cooled with water and with a freon unit, which operates the same way as your refrigerator does. The gas is now at the temperature of an ordinary refrigerator. Then the gas is very quickly expanded from 2,800 psi down to two psi. This produces liquid air, which looks remarkably like water. (The atmospheric pressure that we live in is about 14 psi.)

The expansion is the most important part. The gas, at high pressure, is pushed through a valve and into an area of low pressure, exactly as air escapes from your car tires when you press the valve.

What is the future for cryogenics at U of T? In two years we will have a new physics building which includes a huge new cryogenics lab to replace the crowded one in use at present.

They will still be in the basement, though. The machinery is so heavy and the absence of vibration so important that nearly all cryogenics labs are located below ground level. Professor Hallett is already worried about the move. "There is so much heavy and delicate equipment to shift," he said. "We may lose six months experimenting time." It will be worth the loss, for it will allow one of U of T's chief claims to fame to expand its important research.

Student powers limited by B of G

By KEN DRUSHKA

In many ways the Students' Administrative Council has far less autonomy than most of the college or faculty councils and societies.

By virtue of the University of Toronto Act and the by-laws of the board of governors, the SAC is responsible in whole and in detail to the board.

The SAC budget must be approved by the board, as must any budget changes involving more than $200. Any budget changes of less than $200 must be approved by the administrative vice-president, Frank Stone.

In addition, most other dealings between council and the administration went through Mr. Stone. But with the appointment of the of the academic vice-president, Moffatt St. Andrew Woodside, all but financial matters have gone through the latter. The work with Dr. Woodside has been much smoother than with Mr. Stone.

Unlike most of the college councils, the SAC does not get its money, which is collected with fees, at the beginning of the year. Rather, it is doled out on a monthly basis.

This monthly payment means that the SAC does not have direct control over its money on more than a month to month basis. It also means that council does not collect the interest the money would earn if it were deposited in a bank and withdrawn as needed.

SAC fees are $8 per student, this year totaling $108,000. An additional $137,000 comes into the council coffers as income from the various activities and services.

Policy decisions made by the SAC are only limited by the disciplinary confines established by the Caput, by the U of T Act and by restrictions inherent in the board's financial control.

The greatest point of conflict between the SAC and the board is in the hiring of staff. Council has eight full time staff members, including a financial administrator, Bob Rawlings.

According to the board by-laws the SAC business administrator, executive assistant (Rose Marie Harrop), and accountant (Morris Murrill) are to be hired by and will be responsible to the board.

Last year's council, under President Jordan Sullivan, submitted a brief to the Caput requesting broad constitutional changes. These changes included the right of the students to hire their own staff and to control their financial affairs.

The brief argued that the SAC should not receive its responsibilities from and be responsible to the board. Rather, as an elected representative body, it should be responsible only to the students.

Because council exists to represent the students to the board, the brief said it was incongruous that the council should "receive its duties and responsibilities from that very board to which it is a representative."

Council was asking for the right to hire its own employees, the right to direct those employees, the right to decide what to do with student funds and the right to represent students to the administration instead of being directed by the administration.

The requested changes were approved by the Caput last March, but when Mr. Stone referred them to the board they were not accepted. A special committee — without a SAC representative — was set up to consider the changes.

The committee finished its deliberations before Christmas, and accordingly its recommendations should have come before the January board meeting. But they did not. Committee members were reluctant to discuss the matter, and it was eventually learned that the committee had not made a report.

But then it was learned that a set of recommendations had been drawn up, probably by, or for, the two board members, Sydney Hermant and Justice Arthur Kelly. When asked why these recommendations had not been presented to the January meeting, Mr. Hermant said they were being checked by the board's lawyer.

But while the committee deliberated, and while the board's lawyers check the legality of the proposed changes—whatever they may be—the SAC's present business administrator still does not know whom he is working for, the board or council.

Mr. Rawlings was hired last summer. He was selected by council and his appointment as acting administrator was made, pending the board decision.

If the requested changes are granted, he will be employed by council; if they are not, he will be employed by the board as their man on council.

But now the SAC is in the incomprehensible position of being the only representative student body on campus, and yet having less autonomy than most of the college councils—particularly the University College Literary and Athletic Society and the Engineering Society both of which are also ultimately responsible to the board.

U of T play praised, but misses award

OTTAWA (Special) — A University of Toronto production earned praise at the Canadian Inter-Varsity Drama Festival here Saturday.

The production of "Mr. Terpid's Inquest," a new play by Ian Porter (III UC) was lauded for its imaginative setting and the actors' delivery of rhythm-style speech.

A McGill production of "Mother May I Take a Step?" written by Carole Brainin, and directed by Craig Barish, both of McGill, won three awards: best production; best Canadian play; and best director. Adjudicator Peter Syncox said the play was "vital, intelligent and had a lot to say."

Other awards were: best actor, John McIlmurray of Bishop's University; best actress, Astri Thorvik of Marianopolis College for Women, Montreal; best supporting actor, Peter Tams, Queens; best supporting actress, Margo Dunn, Montreal.

The annual festival of one-act plays was termed a "unique experience" by adjudicator Syncox. He hopes it will soon have entries from universities in the Maritime provinces and the west.

"In this way you would be building the basis of a truly Canadian theatre," he said.

Debaters take 4 of 5

Teams from the University of Toronto took four of the first five places in the Seventh Annual Debating Tournament held at the University of Western Ontario over the weekend.

The team of Gary Kelly (III Vic) and Jim Huzel (III Vic) took the trophy by defeating the University of Pittsburgh team in the final round. They took the affirmative on: "This house rejects the Monroe Doctrine."

Each team in the tournament was required to debate three resolutions. The topics, announced 20 minutes in advance, included: "Monogamy is monotonous;" "The U.S.A. must withdraw from Panama;" "Liz and Dick should go home;" and "Women should be barefoot, pregnant, and in the kitchen."

A team from Victoria College ranked third, the U of T second team was fourth, and the St. Michael's College Senate Club was fifth.

Richard Guiso (III SMC), of the U of T second team was rated the second-best speaker in the tournament.

Teams from 14 Canadian and American universities participated.

Fire destroys shed at New College

Fire destroyed a shed used as a lunchroom on the construction site of New College. Friday.

When Toronto Fire Department units arrived at the site shortly before noon, flames had eaten away all but the south wall of the shed, leaving only charred joists standing.

Distrikt Chief Douglas Begley said: "You couldn't see across the street for the heavy smoke and flames."

He estimated the damage at $1,000 for the structure and $2,000 for the contents — tools, clothing and lunch pails.

Begley placed responsibility for the blaze with a defective oil space heater in the shed.

Up Canadianism: A bas Labatt's

LONDON, Ont. (Special) — About 100 University of Western Ontario students shouted slogans and sang "O Canada" Friday outside the John Labatt Limited brewery.

They protested sale of shares in the firm to Joseph Schlitz Brewing Company of Milwaukee.

Labatt President J. H. Moore accepted a petition signed by 150 persons.

Mr. Moore told the students the company as such did not negotiate the sale. Individuals owned shares, he added, and they had the right to sell them to anybody at all.

The organizers of the march, staffers of the Western Gazette, are sponsoring a campaign this week to persuade beer drinkers at Western to drink anything but Labatt's products.

De Gaulle, McGill entente?

MONTREAL (CUP) — French President Charles de Gaulle, master diplomat that he is, has not allowed his vision of le grandeur française to blur his view of relations with the lesser powers.

Le grand Charles sent his sincere thanks and best wishes for the New Year last week to the staff of the McGill Daily, apparently in response to a New Year's telegram sent him by the editorial board somewhere over Manitoba Dec. 22.

They also sent best wishes to prime ministers Pearson and Douglas-Home, and President Johnson in English. Chairman Khrushchev in Russian, and Pope Paul VI in Latin.

One editor explained why no message had been sent to Chairman Tse-tung: "It's not that we don't recognize China; just that we don't understand Chinese."

Lancers defeat Blues for 9th win in row

By PAUL HENDERSON

WINDSOR — University of Windsor Lancers reasserted their supremacy in the Intercollegiate basketball league by a decision over Varsity Blues 87-77 before an overflow homecoming crowd here Saturday.

Lancers won the hard-fought contest on the strength of superior rebounding by securing 70. Their control of the boards was particularly important because they were shooting poorly. They netted only 29 shots of 99 attempted for 29 per cent. Ed Petryshyn was top rebounder, collecting 16 for Windsor.

Blues remained within a few points of Windsor until the end of the first quarter when Lancers pulled ahead 23-18. Lancers doubled their margin to 47-37 at the half and appeared headed for an easy victory.

But Blues charged out in the second half to play some of their best basketball of the year. They ran up seven consecutive points within two minutes while keeping Lancers scoreless. Blues then went ahead 53-52 at the 5:07 mark when Arvo Neidre sank two foul shots.

22. Both teams had 42 attempts. Ed Petryshyn added eight for Windsor in a solid exhibition.

Fast end-to-end action featured the third quarter as the lead changed hands continually before Lancers, obviously shaken by Blues' surge, established a 63-62 margin at the end of the quarter. Then Lancers depth became evident and they outscored the tiring Toronto squad 24-15 in the final ten minutes.

Guards Dave West, Bill Woloskyn and Vlad Baranowicz paced Blues with 16, 14 and 13 points respectively. West and Baranowicz also worked particularly hard on defence. The latter was assigned a starting position and responded with his best effort of the year, but he had to leave the game with five minutes remaining because of a leg cramp. Woloskyn, who also played forward, regained his shooting accuracy in this game and recorded his points in the limited action he saw.

Centre Ed Bords was the only member of the forward wall to intrude upon the guards' domination. Bords netted 15 points and secured an equal number of rebounds.

Angelo Mazzuchin and Joe Green hooped 15 points apiece to top Lancers. Bernie Friesmuth was one behind. These three performers made a total of 20 foul shots from the free-throw line where Lancers outscored Blues 29-

Close battle

UWO wins first squash title in final game

LONDON, ONT.—University of Western Ontario ended a 12-year famine by winning the OQAA squash championship here on the weekend. In one of the closest contests in years, Western won six matches, to five for McGill and four for Toronto.

Varsity could have forced a three-way tie for the title in the final match of the tournament but Phil Macdonnell of Western fought back from a 2-0 deficit to edge Frank Buck of Toronto, 3-2.

It was Western's first Martin Trophy victory, McGill having won eight times and Varsity twice. McGill and Varsity also tied once.

Number five player Hugh Parker was the only Varsity player to win both his matches. Parker won over Mike Usatis of Western, 3-0, and John Strikeman of McGill, 3-2.

Leighton McCarthy and Buck each split their two matches for Varsity and Doug Tilley and Paul Wilson lost both of theirs. Wilson went into overtime in his second match before losing to Bruce Denny-Brown of McGill, 3-2.

Ross Adair of McGill successfully defended his singles title, defeating Dennis Brown of Western, 3-0, in the singles final. Adair won nine games without a loss during the tournament.

Mustangs mark end for any Waterloo title dreams

Waterloo Warriors virtually lost any chance they had of catching Windsor Lancers for the intercollegiate basketball title when they dropped a 71-67 decision to the unpredictable Western Mustangs Friday night in London, Ont.

The loss dropped second-place Warriors two games behind Lancers with three games left to play. Warriors' only other defeat of the season had been to Lancers.

Barry Mitchelson paced Mustangs for the second game in a row as all-star guard Tom Williamson had another below — par game. Mitchelson scored 24 points, tops in the game, while Williamson had 15 and Ken Barclay 14. It was Mustangs sixth win against four defeats and moved them to within two points of Waterloo.

Jim Hann was top scorer for Warriors with 18. Jerry Raphael, second highest scorer in the league, netted 16 and Bob Pando 13.

McMaster Marauders won both games on their eastern trip, defeating Queen's Golden Gaels, 92-82, Friday in Kingston and McGill Redmen 81-55, Saturday in Montreal. The victories moved McMaster into a fourth-place tie with Varsity Blues although Marauders have played one more game than Blues.

Jim Baird scored 26 against Queen's, Jim Daly 19 and Al Irwin 17. Doug Evans had 27, Larry Ferguson 25 and Bruce Engel 15 for Gaels. Jim Saddler and Daly each hooped 15 against Redmen, Baird 14. Bruce Randal scored 15 and Dave Gillman 13 for McGill.

Furst, Repo win ski medals at Ste. Saveur

University of Toronto skiers placed first and second in the combined Nordic competition at the OQAA championships at Ste. Saveur, Que., on the weekend.

Laval won the overall championship for the second year in a row, followed by Montreal, Toronto, McGill and Queen's in that order.

Per Furst, a recent newcomer to Varsity from Norway finished first in jumping and second in cross country to take the combined Nordic title. Varsity veteran Raimo Repo was second in the combined on the strength of a third-place finish in cross country and high rating in jumping.

Varsity's alpine team had less success than the nordic. Frank MacInnery was fifth in the slalom and John Norton seventh in the giant slalom.

Swimmers win but matmen lose at Rochester

Varsity swimmers and wrestlers divided honors with their hosts in dual meets at Rochester Tech. Saturday. The swimmers defeated Rochester, 57-37, but the matmen dropped a 23-13 decision.

Graeme Barber led the aquatic Blues, registering two victories, in the 200-yard and 500-yard freestyles. Barber, only double winner for Blues, replaced Tom Verth who usually competes in these events. Verth is ineligible to swim in U.S. because he used his four-year limit while attending University of Indiana.

Mike Chapelle won the 200-yard breaststroke in 2:29. This time clipped 1.8 seconds off the record for the Rochester pool.

Rob Campbell and Stan Walker placed first in the 200-yard butterfly and backstroke respectively. They were clocked at 2:20 and 2:23. Walker has pleased coaches Larry Freeman and John Ridpath with his improved performances.

Bruce Taber led Rochester, posting victories in the 50 and 100-yd. freestyles. His time of 22.9 seconds in the former event established a new pool record.

In wrestling, Jim Doner, John Holt and Don Merker won their respective classes of 123, 157 and 177 pounds. Doner won by a decision and the latter two by pins.

Clive Good had to forfeit his 147-lb. match when he sprained his ankle.

STUDENTS

A two part question for your professor of whatever faculty. Everyone should know and understand the answer. Yes, it has to do with economics, but do not belittle your intelligence by saying that you are not an economist. Sir Alec Douglas-Home has told us that economics is just common sense, and that he thought he would do alright. Anyone can do as well if he will apply himself. Of course there can be false economics, of which we have had too much, and which don't make common sense.

Question: why should governments, at any level, NOT borrow from private investment sources, and why should prospective home owners NOT be obliged to borrow money from private investment sources with which to finance the ownership of average utility homes?

The correct answer to this two part question is the KEY to the solution of our economic problems that have beset us down the centuries. Let me know what your professor says. Take it down and have him initial it. If his answer is incorrect or incomplete it will be proof that he doesn't understand commonsense economics. If he answers by asking, as The Hon. Geo. Hees, and other politicians did, "where else would they get it?", then I can tell you that he hasn't the foggiest understanding of our monetary system.

When I put this question to Dr. A. R. Vout, economic advisor to Prime Minister Diefenbaker, and discussed the answer with him, He said "Mr. Hallatt your are a hundred and fifty years ahead of us Nonsense, I said. We are 150 years behind in financing our dual public and private enterprise economy; we have allowed private financialists to rule, and to ruin the world time on end because we didn't understand the real nature and purpose of money.

Roger Babson said recently that very few people understand money. I am pleased that more and more students are calling me and expressing interest in my "paid articles"; yes, this is my contribution to peace and prosperity — to the relief of poverty. I know that the truth about our private money manufacturing monopoly, and all its ramifications and implications have been deliberately kept from the people. I can but offer to bring the light of complete knowledge of this vital matter to your attention, and to explain the truth about the causes of, and the simple solution to our chronic economic difficulties. Give us men with mental courage. If ever we needed them, we need them NOW.

Varsity's Sonny Osborne (background) feigns McMaster's Jimmy Cannon (1) and passes to Steve Monteith (10). Monteith put the puck past Cannon for one of Blues' six goals in a thrilling 6-5 victory over Marlins Friday night at Varsity Arena.

After Marlins rally to tie score 5-5

Hank Monteith nets winner

By GORD BELLMORE

Varsity Blues moved a step closer to the Queen's Cup when winger Hank Monteith scored with less than two minutes remaining to give Blues a 6-5 victory over McMaster Marlins Friday night at Varsity Arena.

The weekend's action left Blues in first place, two points ahead of Montreal Carabins with two games left in the schedule for each team. Carabins gained three of four points on their two-game weekend road trip.

Blues can win the Queen's Cup by defeating Marlins in Dundas, Ont., Wednesday night provided that McGill gains either a win or tie against Montreal the same night. If not, Blues have their final chance against Laval here Friday night.

Marlins made a game bid to stave off elimination from the championship race. They overcame a 5-1 Varsity lead with four unanswered third-period goals but the joy of the rabid fans who accompanied the team to Toronto was short-lived.

Only 19 seconds after Marlins Gary Spoor tied the score, 5-5, Blues' Hank Monteith cashed in a pass from brother Steve, following a rush that carried from the Toronto end of the rink.

Marlins, who had to win to stay alive in the title hunt, got off on the wrong foot as Blues scored four times before the game was five minutes old. Hank Monteith, Don Fuller, Sonny Osborne, and Steve Monteith tallied in that order to give Blues what should have been an insurmountable lead.

The visitors got one goal back when John Savage scored midway through the first period and Osborne scored his second of the night near the end of the second to boost the count to 5-1.

With the first lines of both clubs neutralizing each other in the third period, Marlins' second unit of Bob Pond, Gary Spoor, and Jim McLellan took up the slack. Pond netted a pair of goals and his linemates counted one each to account for all four goals in the rally.

This one-two punch for Marlins is something Blues lack at this stage of the season. Injuries to key personnel such as Ward Passi and Stu McNeil have robbed the team of its depth.

Only the Osborne-Monteiths line has been scoring lately and fortunately for Blues there are only two games remaining. Such a reliance on one line usually proves costly for any team over a number of games.

Only pride will be at stake for Marlins Wednesday in Dundas as Friday's loss was their third in a row against Blues this season, including two exhibition games.

STRAY SHOTS: The three stars were Hank Monteith, Bob Pond, and Sonny Osborne, each of whom had a pair of goals. Blues outshot McMaster 29-24. Blues defenceman Peter Speyer was an unexpected starter in the game. It was feared he had chicken-box when he broke out in a rash Thursday night, but it was later diagnosed as a skin irritation. The rash caused Speyer considerable discomfort during the game.

Carabins steal win and gain tie, Laval upset by McGill in Quebec

The surprising Montreal Carabins stayed in the thick of the Queen's Cup race by edging Waterloo Warriors, 6-5, Friday and playing to a 6-6 tie with Queen's Golden Gaels Saturday. But Laval Rouge et Or had their title hopes set back somewhat when they dropped a 4-2 decision to McGill Redmen Saturday in Quebec City.

These games, combined with Varsity's 6-5 win over McMaster Marlins Friday, left only Montreal and Laval with a chance of catching Blues in the final two weeks of the schedule. Carabins trail Blues by two points in the standings. Laval is five back but has three games left to play while Varsity and Montreal have only two.

Carabins scored once in the second period and five times in the third to overcome a 5-0 deficit at Waterloo.

Jean Cusson scored three goals in the third period, including the winner at 18:26, and Jean-Jacques Granger got the other two. Roland Poitras counted the first Montreal goal.

Stan Sharman took over the league lead in goals by scoring three for Waterloo to bring his total to 14. John Massie and Dave Passmore netted the other Waterloo goals.

Queen's scored twice late in the final period to tie Carabins at Kingston. Murray Mitchell scored the tying goal at 17:06.

Mitchell and Bill Colvin each scored twice for Gaels. George Nishikawa and Larry Windover got singles. Jean Delorme and Gilles Lefort led Montreal with two goals apiece, Granger and Cusson each tallied once.

A squabble developed in the second period which may lead to a protest from the Carabin management. Montreal's Jacques Durette sat out a 10-minute misconduct penalty for Claude Chapleau after Chapleau was given a two-minute kneeling penalty, a 10-minute misconduct and a game misconduct penalty.

Paul Lebrun, Carabins' business manager, claimed Durette should not have had to serve the misconduct penalty after Chapleau had been ejected from the game.

McGill ended Laval's four-game undefeated streak right in Quebec City and put Rouge et Or on the verge of elimination from the title race. Doug Carr scored the winning goal for Redmen at 18:44 of the third period and Dave Kerr added an insurance goal at 19:50.

Bernie Roy and Kerr scored the first two McGill goals, Pierre Lachance and Yvon Paquet scored for Laval.

McGill wins shuttlecock crown

McGill University's badminton squad made away with the OQAA shuttlecock championship Saturday, while Varsity's four-man team could place no better than fifth in the tournament at Western.

Redmen scored 26 points to best defending champ Queen's by six. Toronto trailed both Western and Windsor with 13.

For Blues, Tim Smith won three matches, while Ernie McCulloch, John Gilbert, and Bibhu Mohanty took two each. All played five matches.

The doubles combination of Gilbert and Mohanty won three of its five matches while Smith and McCulloch took one.

The league doubles title went to McGill's Sin Lam Chan and Virendra Kumar. Singles laurels went to defending titlist Eric Pertsch of Windsor.

Cushing rink wins 'Colt' spot

Tom Cushing's University of Toronto rink won the Terrace Club playoffs for representation in the Ontario Curling Association Colt competition yesterday.

The Cushing rink, which also includes Jim Creighton, Wayne Shepard and Jim Unper, defeated another Varsity rink, skipped by Doug Smith, 8-7, 15-2, in the final. Bob Reid, Dave Wells and Ray Lilley made up the rest of Smith's rink.

Division playoffs for the Colt competition (curlers with less than seven years' experience) begin Thursday at High Park Curling Club.

Earlier on the weekend Cushing was eliminated in the OQAA championship bonspiel at Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph. The Varsity rink lost to OAC, 8-5, and to McMaster, 8-6, in its first two games to meet early elimination.

Unveil plans for Scarborough College

Scarborough College, the University of Toronto's new eastern satellite, finally got off the ground yesterday.

Construction on the $7,000,000 eastern arm of the main campus will begin this summer for expected opening in the 1965 academic year, university officials said at the official preview of the new college.

The master plan calls for facilities for the transmission and reception of lectures by television in the ultra-modern building complex on the banks of Highland Creek, about 20 miles from downtown Toronto.

The 202-acre site should leave plenty of elbow room for the expected enrolment of 5,000 Scarborough students in a General Arts or Science course. Honors and professional courses may be added later.

Dr. D. Carlton Williams, principal of Scarborough, and vice-president of Scarborough and Erindale College, the proposed western satellite, called the project "perhaps the boldest of the many bold ventures which make up the great expansion program of the University of Toronto."

"Scarborough College takes its place as the first of a new kind of college, unique in Ontario . . . with the autonomy it needs and the advantage of affiliation with a great university."

The unique campus was designed by a three-man team from the U of T school of architecture—town planner Michael Hugo Brunt, landscape designer Michael Hough and architect John Andrews.

The first stage of the college has eight lecture rooms, three large lecture theatres, and 30 laboratories, plus administration space—all in separate sections, but linked with closed-circuit TV and joined throughout by contoured glass-enclosed corridors in a split-level, ranch-style complex.

The focal point for all sections of the W-shaped structure will be an intermediate-level student lounge and futuristic cafeteria.

The University library has already started to acquire books for Scarborough. By September 1965, the college should have 30,000 volumes on its own shelves and access to the million of more copies in the central library.

Says utopian state will remain unattainable

By TONY BOND

The ideal of the utopian state will always remain unattainable to mankind. It is not "in agreement with the reality of human existence."

The speaker, Professor Paul Tillich, renowned German philosopher from Chicago University, was lecturing Tuesday on "The Decline in the Validity of the Idea of Progress," sponsored by the University College Literary and Athletic Society in a packed Convocation Hall.

Dr. Tillich, author of well-known works of philosophy, has received innumerable academic awards from German and American universities. He fled Nazi Germany in 1933, and has taught at American universities ever since.

Speaking on the manifestation of progress in civilization, the professor saw two possible outcomes: progressivism, or a never-ending "stepping ahead from less satisfactory situations to more satisfactory situations"; or utopia, which always fails. If the state of utopia is reached, it is invariably destroyed by the "demonic forces" inherent in man. Hitler's Germany, "the 1,000-year empire, lasted 12 years," he pointed out.

He outlined four aspects of progress: scientific, artistic, moral and religious. Scientific progress, "a dogma" in the 19th century, fell out of favor in Nietzsche's "Death of God". Contributing factors were the First World War and post-war totalitarianism.

American disillusionment in scientific progress came later, said Dr. Tillich, with the advent of the depression, the spectacle of Nazi Germany and the Cold War.

In the sphere of moral progress, Prof. Tillich said: "There is no progress in the moral act." And he added: "Whenever we speak of moral progress, we can only speak in terms of moral content."

"Artistic creation itself is never a matter of progress," said the professor, referring to progress in "free spiritual creativity." In his opinion there had been no progress in art from the cave drawings to the work of Rembrandt and Picasso.

Continuing his examination of progress in civilization, Dr. Tillich went on: "I would make a daring statement and say there is no progress in justice qualitatively."

Dr. Tillich was unable to forecast the possibility of progress in religion. "The answer given in a kind of resignation," he said, "is: we cannot answer the question."

The concept of progress, the professor said, did not exist among Eastern religions. It was the product of "futuristic religions" of the West.

"The lure of the future must not be taken from the western mind," the doctor said. "We are living in a period of tremendous disappointment." Such periods are invariably followed by a feeling of cynicism which in turn give way to uncritical acceptance of absolute government,

Govt. offers student loans as sop

The promised 10,000 university scholarships for $1,000 each were not mentioned in the Liberal government's speech from the throne yesterday.

Instead, an interest-free loan scheme was outlined, which will go into effect next fall.

The plan will allow all Canadian university students to receive no-cost loans, probably from an independent body which will be set up to administer the scheme, the government stated.

Plans for consultation with the provinces at the March federal-provincial conference were also mentioned. The item was near the top of the agenda, which means it will probably be dealt with in the House of Commons quite soon.

During the last two federal election campaigns, the Liberal party has promised to establish a scholarship scheme whereby 10,000 Canadian university students would receive $1,000 annually.

On April 30 of last year, after the Liberals were elected, Northern Affairs Minister Arthur Laing said the plan

Only 4 universities have no housing bias

University of Toronto is one of only four leading Canadian universities which have an official policy of no discrimination in off-campus housing, Rev. Ray J. Hord said yesterday.

In making his maiden speech a secretary of the United Church's board of evangelism and social service, Mr. Hord said that of 22 leading Canadian universities only Toronto, McMaster University of British Columbia and Windsor had such a non-discriminatory policy.

Mr. Hord also revealed a report showing blatant discrimination against UBC engineering graduates of Asian origin.

"In spite of our vigorous protestations of innocence," Mr. Hord said, "we Canadians discriminate against the

Thurber more effective on page

By ERIC RUMP

The AVR returns to Hart House this year with A Thurber Carnival, a series of sketches selected and adapted by Thurber himself.

His work is not ideally suited to the stage, often being more effective when left on the page. This was especially clear in the three tales that were narrated and not dramatised: The Night the Bed fell On Father, University Days and Memorial to a Dog. This sort of monologue, to be effective, has to be exaggerated, as in the various monologues in Beyond the Fringe. Instead, they were left as on the printed page, and in the oral delivery lost much of their comic impetus.

Thurber is more compelling when in the world of the animal fable. The technical difficulty of getting this aspect of Thurber on stage was neatly overcome by projecting slides of his cartoons on a screen at the back. His animals are often his heroes. True, they share with man an inability to deal with the world around, as in the series of cartoons of the dog outwitted by the beetle, but they can attain a dignity which his humans never do.

This was clearest in Memorial to A Dog, excellently handled by Bill Cameron. It is a simple tale of the life of a poodle, who was born, had children of its own, grew old with dignity, then quietly passed away, finding death as simple as eating raspberries.

Mankind, in comparison, is a shabby lot. All life is a grubby battle that proves nothing, except our inherent nastiness, the eternal legacy, one might say, of the Fall. In private life, it gets reflected in the battle of the sexes. Love may occur briefly to the young, but it soon gives way to hatred and rage. The man who sees a unicorn in the garden uses it to advantage by convincing the police his wife is mad, not him. He smiles quietly as she is dragged off in a straightjacket to the local mental hospital.

Mr. Preble wants to murder his wife so he can marry his secretary, so he lures her down to the cellar. He soon discovers that she has been planning the same thing and is undoubtedly more prepared to carry it through. This time an uneasy peace is established between the two.

This humorously pessimistic view of society was presented with considerable skill by a cast of eight. Of the women, the most assured was Joy Tepperman, who has a fine, gritty voice, full of character. She held herself nicely in check, avoiding the grosser clowning which occasionally afflicted other members of the cast.

Bill Cameron was quietly persuasive, especially in the older parts. If John Pepper remembers all his lines, and Paul Soren stops fidgeting, the show will have even more lift than it does now.

The direction is by Nicholas Ayre. He provided plenty of pace and some imaginative lighting. Music is under the direction of Georgi Nachoff. His five-piece group produced some interestingly eerie background music which neatly chimed in with the mood of the sketches, though the bungled Queen is rapidly developing into a cliché.

The main weakness of the show is the audience. Those who haven't bought tickets yet (and there are quite a few) should do so, for there is enough poignant humor and wistful charm to make a visit worthwhile. It will also prevent Hart Houses cavernous tomb from having too deadening an effect on audience and actors alike.

would be put into effect as soon as it was feasible.

SAC President Doug Ward said last night: "The loans are better than nothing, but they are avoiding the principle, and are no answer to the needs of higher education today. . . . The costs are rising and there is a decrease in unskilled summer employment for Artsmen with greater automation in Canada.

There is a need at present, and if we support students, it should be those who excel and should be in university."

David Jenkins, president of the Canadian Union of Students, commented from Ottawa: "The amount of money being put into the loan-scheme would have to be a great deal more than the $10,000,000 in annual scholarships if this switch in policy is not to short-change the students.

"It may be that the government still intends to retain the scholarship program on the same basis, since no mention was made of a cancellation of the idea."

Mr. Jenkins said that CUS had originally proposed the scholarships, but had changed policy since they recognized the provinces' rights in education. The Liberals had picked up the original plan before CUS considered putting the money into the provinces' hands.

Housing bias (cont.)

Negro . . . against Canadians of Chinese and Japanese origin . . . against the Jew . . . and we shamefully discriminate against the Canadian Indian."

Mrs. Jean Loates of Carlton University commented: "We can't legislate against people who have a preference for one race or another. Democracy works both ways Certainly we establish first of all whether or not a colored student would be welcome."

Dennis Bellhumeur of Ottawa University said: "We ask if they want foreign students on a questionnaire we send out. Sometimes landlords answer 'yes, but no Negroes.' We of course take this into consideration."

Gary H. Perly (II UC), of the Ontario Labor Committee for Human Rights, noted that "in pandering to the landlords' prejudices thus, the university housing officials are guilty of aiding and abetting in a breach of the Ontario Human Rights Code, if not in letter then in spirit. Surely one of the very bases of democracy is a belief in human dignity and the worth of the individual."

French don't blame English for troubles

By CAROL PATTERSON

French Canada has abandoned the idea of blaming English Canada for its ills, Jacques-Ivan Morin, associate professor of law at the University of Montreal, said Monday.

He added that French Canada is no longer content to preserve her cultural and moral values; now she is trying to catch up with the drastic social and economic changes that have occurred since Confederation.

Prof. Morin and Dean Ivan Rand of the University of Western Ontario law faculty were taking part in a panel discussion on the bicultural problem in Canada and the future of Canadian federalism.

Prof. Rand said the old social attitude of France, with its hierarchal order of government and church, is to blame. Now French Canada wants more material goods like flashy cars and better jobs. But their education does not prepare them well to handle advanced technological jobs.

Prof. Morin presented the latest of many proposals for a new Confederation. He suggested that Quebec be autonomous not self-sufficient.

Prof. Rand defined the cause of Quebec's sudden discontent: "People themselves have undergone a transformation, even in religious ideas.

In reply to Prof. Morin's proposals for a new Confederation, he said: "I am not impressed by schemes compiled in an ivory tower, because our constitution was formed by the country as a whole, by the people."

The winners of the 42nd Hart House photo competition were announced Monday.

Placing first in the senior division was Terry Shaw (SGS) with his photo entitled "The Marchers" showing three CUCND types in Ottawa.

The most surprised member of the audience was S. Kezes (III SMC) when judge Jim Beveridge announced that his photo "Friendly Policeman" won the junior award.

The Karsh Photo Award for the best campus shot went to Cecil B. Craig (V Meds) for his picture "The Mind is Willing" showing himself asleep over his books.

Craig also won the Photo Essay award for his "An Old Man Tells His Most Exiting Moment."

The chairman of the club, W. J. Blackhall, pulled off a double win in the color division with his slides entitled "Lone Rider" and "In the Fall".

The prize-winning photos will be published in the Weekend Review this Friday.

TICKETS ON SALE ALL THIS WEEK — HART HOUSE THEATRE BOX OFFICE

information please, mr. ward

For more than a year certain members of the Students' Administrative Council have been negotiating with the board of governors and a few senior administrators over proposed changes in the SAC's constitution.

Both last year and this year, the negotiations have been carried out by one or two individuals. Last year's SAC president, Jordan Sullivan, spoke for the students; and this year President Doug Ward has been the student voice.

Neither of these council presidents have kept their councils informed with the progress of the negotiations; and neither of them have achieved very much.

Sullivan last year succeeded in submitting the requested changes and bringing about the formation of a special board committee to consider the requests.

This year Ward has maintained informal contact with the administration and the board through the academic vice-president, Dr. Moffatt St. Andrew Woodside. But Ward's single-handed dealings have accomplished nothing, except to keep the issue alive.

The operating principle of both Sullivan and Ward has been that the contentious issue of increased student autonomy can best be handled in meetings behind closed doors. They appear to have faith that such meetings can achieve mutually satisfactory solutions to the problem.

But they are naive in placing so much trust in the Simcoe Hall politicians.

This year Ward has discussed nothing with his council that pertains to the issue of constitutional change. Furthermore, there is probably a great deal he is unable to discuss even if he wished. If he knows the contents of the "report" drawn up by the two board members, as he probably does, he is unable to reveal them.

By keeping the details of his negotiations from council, Ward has placed himself in a confidential position and deprived council of knowledge of what is going on. He may also have played into the hands of those board members and administrators who are anxious to prevent increased student autonomy.

Ward should be communicating what he knows of the situation to the council before the board meets next Thursday. If council agrees with his actions so far, it will only give him greater bargaining power with the board.

If council disagrees, it will then be up to Ward to change his tactics and revise his requests.

Whatever the case, nothing is to be gained by conducting the negotiations behind the closed doors which provide the board and administration with the power of anonymity.

the back-room boys strike again

Well, we've been shafted again by the back-room boys. Instead of openly discussing their financial requirements for next year, the Ontario university presidents quietly submitted a request for $140,000,000. The Ontario government just as quietly cut the figure to $101,000,000.

Now we are told there will probably be a province-wide fee increase that will make a university education even more dependent upon financial resources of the individual student.

We find we are becoming a bit fed up with those persons who continue to screw us up by their refusal to subject their actions to public scrutiny before the decisions are made.

the west coast voters

West coast voters appear to be as naive on the student level as the provincial. Students at the University of British Columbia recently elected Roger McAfee student council president.

McAfee is a former president of Canadian University Press. CUP is still trying to recover; we mourn for the UBC students.

Student life is marked by emotional ups and

by DONNA MASON

Every year enrolment figures for the University of Toronto jump. As the institution grows, it becomes necessarily more impersonal, making it increasingly difficult for the individual student to find a place for himself. The majority of university students are in their late adolescence and are not quite certain of their status, and university life by its very nature imposes new stresses upon them. Many are able to handle these problems, but most still require help in one form or another if they are to receive the maximum benefit from their education.

High school is no real preparation for university. Students who are used to being spoon-fed at schools with a comparatively low staff-student ratio find themselves in lecture-classes of 200 students or more. Professors seldom have time to concern themselves with the individual student; they expect mature performance. Classes are large, often so large that there are not sufficient seats for all students, and it is impossible to expect professors to provide special considerations for individual members of a class.

The period of adolescence is for many people a time of turmoil, moments of joy followed by despair and unhappiness, and the stresses inherent in university life accentuate these ups and downs, resulting in more or less serious emotional disturbances.

Such disturbances may find a focal point in many facets of university life, and they are far more common than is generally realized. A recent survey by the Young Catholic Students' League in Quebec found that "from 10 to 30 per cent of all university students suffer from varying forms of disequilibrium." (The uncertainty is due to the general reluctance of people to admit a psychological cause for their difficulties.) In Toronto many psychiatrists and psychologists estimate that the actual figure is closer to 30 per cent and some would place it even higher.

Such problems generally fall into three main groups: adjustment difficulties, obsessive fears and depressions, and actual personality disorders. The majority fall into the first category, for most university students are still attempting to work out satisfactory study habits can, in some persons, create serious inner tensions which produce difficulties in dealing with everyday situations. And these difficulties in turn increase the inner tensions.

A major source of student stress lies in the area of sexual adjustment. The natural difficulties of adolescence are in many cases aggravated by the sudden relaxation of rules the student experiences on entering university. Many

Letters to the Editor

Students disrespectful

Dear Sir:
Editor of the Varsity:

As a member of the supposedly enlightened university community, I was disgusted last Friday by the demonstration of disrespect towards the stripper, Libby Jones. Just because Miss Jones is engaged in an occupation which people regard as "low" does not mean that she is inferior or even that her occupation is. Even if this were the case, there would be no justification for preventing her from speaking, as she was on Friday, by the constant heckling, interruptions, insults and leering. Most people there did not come to hear Miss Jones but to "see" her. After all what could a stripper have to say about the sociological and psychological aspects of stripping?

Students oversexed

It is certainly appalling to learn that "600 enthusiastic students" would turn up to hear a stripper speak. It is also a damn disgrace for The Varsity and for this university.

In the first place Mr. Sorokolit of The Varsity wrote almost a full page feature story about Miss Jones. He deserves a word of thanks from the management of the Victory for some valuable free publicity. Instead of a reaction or a boycott

I'm sure she could have said plenty about the hypocrisy of those who condemn her for her occupation yet pay to leer at her and insult her. Also I'm sure she could have said plenty more about a society in which women have to resort to this sort of occupation to gain the financial security, travel and freedom which Miss Jones says she has found. Probably she would have explained the leering as a manifestation of male insecurity or male chauvinism. Maybe she would have explained the girls' attitude as unconscious envy or acknowledgement of their own feelings of female inferiority. Perhaps this is why we didn't let Miss Jones speak; perhaps someone who has tarnished one of our shiniest status symbols, the B.A., shouldn't be allowed to speak?

against the proposed lecture it was received favorably and was a success. It is disgusting to think that so often in the past worthwhile lectures or seminars have been unable to attract student participation. It seems that sensationalism and sex are foremost in the student mind.

Apparently the next logical step is to confer on Miss Jones an honorary Ph.D. and to open up a new faculty—the Faculty of Strip-Teasing. After all, it pays $10,000 a year.

Co-op confusion minor

Your editorial on Fri. Feb. 14 criticized the Campus Co-operative Residence for negotiating with the University of Toronto on the proposed Rochdale College. You suggested that such negotiations are both unnecessary, as it is the Ontario government alone which possesses the power to grant the college a charter, and foolhardy, as we risk encountering conservative and bureaucratic obstruction.

With regard to your first point, the government requested that the University of Toronto be consulted on the College. In any case, it is only common courtesy for a group of students forming an independent residential college to consult the university which it will affect.

In contrast to your fear of obstruction, it is our impression that the administration is sympathetic to the chartering of Rochdale College while expressing some concern over the use of the term "college" in the name. This concern is based on a mixture of legitimate and illegitimate grounds.

The claim that the term "college" implies university control and a teaching program are illegitimate since there are at least 25 colleges in this city which have nothing to do with the university (St. Hilda's College, St. Joseph's College, Massey College), do not have an official academic program.

A legitimate concern is the initial confusion in the mind of the student who would be a member of two residential colleges, such as New College within the university and Rochdale College outside the university, at one and the same time. We think this is no more of a difficulty than the initial problem created by New College when a medical student for example, became for the first time a member of both a faculty and a college. In any case, the production of initial confusion, inevitable with the creation of a novel organization, is a minor problem compared with the advantages in terms of zoning, municipal tax exemption, charitable status, etc., that would be lost without the status of college resulting in increased costs to the individual student while severely handicapping the institutions.

To associate this expression of concern and attempt to foresee problems with obstruction is, to say the least, an exaggeration.

THIS ISSUE: A monstrous conspiracy as Marcia Nari submitted, Sandra Najat never showed up, (as did Will Day and Don Smith), Carol Patterson hogged a typewriter all night and Larry Greenspan came at midnight. Salvation, however, from Carol Threlfall, George Bryant who double-checked, Bob Sorokolit who reconverted waste, Tony Bond who condemned Tillrich, and Mary McIver who joined the Good. Also Volkmar Richter, Tom Gallo, Dave Bryce, Penny Hewlett, and Sportsmen.

in residence or apartments, removed from parental supervision, and even those who live at home are necessarily to a great extent freed from restraint. It is, after all, very easy to tell parents that you are going to "stay down and work on an essay." But the problem is double-edged. Those who attempt to carry on an affair often suffer guilt-feelings, to say nothing of fears of pregnancy, while those who practise restraint are sometimes troubled by the idea that virtue is a sign of abnormality. And those who marry while still in university find their problems intensified.

But many student problems are not as fundamental and serious as these. Study difficulties are accentuated by the common failure to learn good study habits in high school, and such difficulties can create frustration, discouragement, and dropouts. Shyness and inability to communicate with students and professors alike and home difficulties are other important sources of student upsets.

It has been estimated that nearly all university students at some stage in their education fail to live up to their learning potential as a result of emotional problems arising from the university situation.

Many of the dropouts after Christmas and many applications for special consideration are prompted, not by physical ill-health, but by feelings of inadequacy and inability to cope with assignments.

Yet in spite of the universality of the problem, students find it difficult to ask for help, and many do not, in any case, know where to turn. Home troubles and a desire for independence are two important factors in the common student reluctance to seek aid from parents. Many are, in any case, too far from home to do so. And the common feeling that suffering from emotional problems constitutes failure is important. Even within the university community a stigma is attached to emotional instability, often confused with serious personality disorders or actual insanity.

Most student problems are capable of fairly easy solution. Often the student can resolve his own difficulties if he is given the opportunity to discuss them with an impartial observer. It is difficult for many to speak of such matters to friends or parents.

Emotional disturbances cause dropouts and failures. They waste intellectual potential. If untreated they can cause serious emotional dislocation and deep feelings of inadequacy. Almost all can be cured by treatment from trained counsellors, but at the University of Toronto facilities for such treatment are limited.

Politicians could dominate universities

by HUGH MUNRO

Following is the text of an address given on the CBC program Viewpoint on Mon. Feb. 10. Hugh Munro is a staff writer for The Globe and Mail.

Most Canadians probably aren't aware that a struggle is developing behind the scenes for control of our universities. It is already under way in Ontario where the largest university complex in the country exists and where the Provincial Government proposes to establish a department of university affairs. It will be the first of its kind in Canada.

This struggle indicates that Canadians should be more keenly aware of the problems involved in higher education and should take an interest in solving them. The education and the long range economic welfare of the country is at stake.

It's difficult to sum up the situation without oversimplifying it. But, briefly, this is what is happening. The universities are facing a population crisis and now are not in a position to meet it. In Ontario alone enrollment is expected to triple by 1970.

To meet this challenge, governments must provide large sums of money for the buildings, equipment and teachers that will be needed. It will cost billions.

And this is where the battle of controls begins. The universities have traditionally directed their own affairs and there are good reasons why they should continue to do so. There are good reasons, too, why the Legislatures should have the final say on money matters. But there are indications that the politicians want to have the whole say on what is needed and there are good reasons why they should not have that. Dr. Robert Jackson, one of the outstanding education researchers in Canada, warned last September that officials in some provinces were not even aware of the crisis of numbers confronting the universities.

And he added that appropriate and speedy action was so important that it should take precedence over the national defence program.

But the crisis of numbers is only one aspect of the problem. In the past few days in Toronto there have been reports that Canada's universities lack almost all the features that make such institutions great. These reports were based on a brief submitted to the Ontario government by the Ontario Council of University Faculty Associations. It is an organization that speaks for the university teachers. The brief was made public at the weekend. It claimed that even our best universities are far below the standards of the first class institutions in Britain and the United States in such things as research, libraries and graduate studies.

The situation is so dismal, they said, that the universities cannot produce enough highly qualified people to meet the needs of business and industry and the campus population explosion, except in a few fields. This means that the national economy could be seriously hampered and that many students may have to go abroad for their education.

The brief said this state of affairs exists because of government bungling and penny-pinching and that there is no comprehensive plan at present to meet future needs. Now, if this is true of Ontario it probably is true of other provinces which have less money.

What is more frightening about this situation than government ineptitude, is that the university people appear to be afraid to fight in the open for what they want. The brief, in question had been kept secret until the press smoked it out.

What the academicians want are adequate funds and a comprehensive plan for spending them on university expansion—not just for undergraduates but for research and graduate studies too.

And they make a good case for such facilities. The whole future structure of university education in Canada depends on providing them.

Without research and graduate study facilities it is difficult to recruit and produce topflight university teachers.

And Canada is no longer in a position to import many professors because there is a world wide shortage of them. If we don't produce our own, we are in trouble.

Because of this, the academics think the plan for expansion should be drawn up, not by government alone, but by an independent body on which they would be represented. The demand for this sort of representation is growing across the country, and it's a reasonable enough request which should be granted. Whether it will be in Ontario depends on the government's plans for its new department and these are still secret. In the light of all this, it is disconcerting to find the silence of fear in the universities because they have been traditionally the centres of free speech and intellectual inquiry and criticism.

And that is why there should be greater public interest and, perhaps, pressure to bring improvement and avert total government control. It is bad enough to have a university system that lacks the essentials for providing a wide variety of first class education. It could be disastrous to have it dominated completely by the politicians.

STUDENTS

I am looking forward to discussing my proposals for solving our economic problems with you at New College tomorrow, 1 P.M. Everyone should be interested in this vital matter. If you do not learn about our exchange system in our specialized production economy, you will soon be, at a dinner party, what a wall flower is at a dance, because economic topics are of first importance in our lives.

Of course, if you are happy about working your head off in order to be able to earn more so you can pay more taxes to support more unemployed, coupon clippers, and debt merchants, its OK by me. If you are taking it for granted that you haven't enough brains to understand common sense economics, and are content to swallow hook, line and sinker every thing the canned knowledge experts dish out, instead of developing your own intelligence quotient by thinking things through on your own, that too is OK by me.

If you don't give a hoot for the plight of the one third of our people who are and always have been comparatively poor to poverty stricken, and if you haven't the vision and understanding to realize that your favored position in our mis-named affluent society is on the brink of disaster because of ignorance on the part of educators and revolutionaries alike, then I can only feel sorry for you. Too many educators will never admit error — more than the religious bigots of old would admit that the earth was round. They will go to their graves in silence, and contemptuous of revealed truth — not in their text books. It was ever thus.

Our only hope is in the rising generation — in courageous youth who will not take conformity as a way of life; who will not take for an answer — "the poor ye have always with you." Subsidized housing and charity is not the answer. These things like "hope deferred, maketh the heart sick." We solve our consciences by doling out alms, while robbing the recipients under our unnecessary and unholly high interest system — not alone of an opportunity to work and to be a member of society in good standing, but of human dignity and hope.

Be seeing you at New College tomorrow at 1 P.M.

William Line dies: was psych prof

William Line, professor of psychology at the University of Toronto, died last weekend at the age of 66.

Dr. Line joined the faculty in 1929, lecturing on industrial psychology and interpersonal relations. For a long time he was associated with the Canadian Mental Health Association, where his chief interest was in the education of children. He held a Master's degree in education, in addition to his academic degrees in psychology.

DR. WILLIAM LINE

Dr Line helped to establish both the Placement Service and the Student Counseling Service, which is now a part of the Health Service. He was a co-author of the book "Crestwood Heights," a study of Forest Hill Village.

Internationally, Dr. Line was well-known as a consultant with the World Health Organization and the United Nations on personnel policies. He was founder of the International Institute of Child Study, and was a past president of the Canadian Psychological Association and the World Federation of Mental Health.

Swedish moral standard lacking but sins not

"If the Swedes have a moral standard, we weren't able to find it," said Pete Casson (III APSC) speaking to another overflow crowd yesterday on his experiences during a trip through Scandinavia.

The best way to see a town he discovered, was "to go to the local tourist agency, load up on pamphlets and then follow a local Cook's Tour bus and see all the sights while reading the pamphlets."

Aside from women, Casson found that "food is terrific, restaurants are very cheap, and breakfasts especially in Denmark are fabulous with Danish pastries served up like bread."

Casson strongly recommended meeting the natives and associating with local students who do considerable travel and know all the "sins". Also, many people will speak German or English because their own languages are hard for others to learn, he said.

Defensive play puts Redmen on top

BY AL SCHOENBORN

Interfac Editor
Near flawless play by defencemen Gary Hunt, Paul Pape, Brian Case and John Wilson and Howie Fluxus' sparkling goaltending have resulted in a pair of important wins for University College in Group I inter-faculty hockey.

A 3-1 win over St. Mike's and a 5-0 whitewashing of PHE I have moved Redmen three points ahead of second-place Victoria College with just two games left for each team.

In the UC-St. Mike's clash, the Irish were threatening to add to a 1-0 lead given them by Mike Fullan. They were playing five men to four when Alby Garbe picked up St. Mike's pass in his own zone and exchanged picture passes with Paul Pape, who finally banged the puck past sprawling Casey Soden.

In the second half, Gary Hunt followed up a UC rush to roll the puck over Soden for the winner before Don Lillow added an insurance goal into the empty net.

Monday, PHE, down 2-0 at the half, gave up on the kind of hockey that had won four straight games. Forgetting about the puck, Phys Ed went out to overpower the opposition physically, and came out of a game with a five-goal deficit for their pains.

Ron Hanna opened the scoring for the Redmen, Ross Davies added a pair and Don Lillow and Jody Curran potted singletons.

Medicine A snapped Trinity's nine-game winning streak by beating Trinity A, 4-2. Trinity and Medicine have already clinched first and second place respectively in Group II.

Victoria II took a one-point edge over Dents. A in the race for the third and last playoff spot with a 3-2 win over St. Mike's B. Ron Dood had a pair for the winners.

St Mike's B put a crimp into Dentistry's playoff hopes by taking the dentists, 3-1. Craig Doyle, Don Shanahan and John Gilbert hit for the Irish.

BASKETBALL

Medicine A moved temporarily into first place in Group II, with a 35-25 win over UC II, Thursday. Martin Schiller hooped 13 points to pace the doctors, who avenged their sole loss of the season, a 30-29 squeaker to the junior Redmen.

UC II bounced back, Monday, with a 38-37 scrape past Jr. Skule to move back into a tie for first place, but Meds has a game in hand. Skule's Viido Worang was high man in the game with 18 points. Gerry Weisberg potted a dozen for the winners.

Gilles Lefort closes in on Bobby Apps

Gilles Lefort of Montreal Carabins scored two goals and added six assists in two weekend games to make the biggest jump in the intercollegiate hockey scoring race this week. Lefort has 24 points to tie with centre Don Mervyn of Waterloo Warriors for second place.

Rookie centre Bobby Apps of McMaster Marlin's increased his league-lead to two points with two goals and two assists in the past week. Apps has 11 goals and 15 assists for 26 points.

Hank Monteith of Varsity Blues holds down fourth spot with 22 points and brother Steve Monteith is tied for fifth at 20 points with Jean Cusson of Montreal. Cusson picked up six points in two games to jump from 10th place.

Stan Sharman of Waterloo scored three goals against Montreal to take over the lead in goal scoring with 14.

Gary Aitken continues to lead the goaltenders, although his average dropped to 2.38 goals against per game.

YAMASAKI AND WHITE—BULL'S EYE BELLES

Varsity women were in the "pink of perfection" as they revised the archery record books and made off with the Intercol Indoor Archery Championship here Saturday. The women virtually swept all honors in the field, battering their own 1963 team score record, their own individual high score record, and Western's "W.I.A.U. Round" individual record.

Varsity's team total of 4,352 points surpassed their 1963 record by 200 points and put second-place Western out of contention by more than 300 points. Also competing, McMaster, Queens and McGill fell far behind the swift Varsity pace.

The "indefatigables," Varsity's Julie Yamasaki and Gail White, individually smashed two records. Miss Yamasaki was crowned individual high scorer for the meet; her 1142 total along with Miss White's second place, 1130, rewrote Lenora Beacock's U of T record of 1114. As well, both girls wiped out the 572 "W.I.A.U. Round" record of Western's Marg Wagstaff. Miss Yamasaki made off with the record in the morning round with a 574; then, in the afternoon, Miss White returned to old form with a 576 to beat her teammate by only 2 points. Also shooting for Varsity were Pat Burbridge and Sheila Lithwick, who placed seventh and fifth respectively.

Two ice hockey triumphs over the weekend have put Varsity in top contention for the Intercol title. The "puck-ettes" edged hosts O.A.C., 3-2, and then clinched first spot with an 8-1 slaughter of McMaster. High scorer for the journey was Jan McAdam with 4 goals. Other scorers for Varsity were Maureen Thomson with 3, Patty Gair 2, and Jane Bernhardt and Heather Wright, one each.

Varsity's defensive unit, headed by goal keeper Lorraine Bell, contained opposition to only 3 goals against. Unmeasured (or is it unmuzzled) Heather Wright, played a stand-out game.

To climax weekend play, Toronto Senior Basketballers announced McGill, 47-8, in Montreal. The Intermediates, now sporting a 4-1 win-loss record, completed the double-header with a 49-18 defeat of Sir George Williams University.

The senior squad, swinging into fine form for the February 28 finals at Queens, played one of their best games this season. The high-scoring "CAD" line of Tina Cameron, Judy Archer, and Sharon Dandy accounted for 43 of the 47 points. For the second consecutive time Miss Archer took top scoring position with 23 points.

Intermediate Sue Smith just couldn't miss as she swished to an 18-point top effort. Other high scorers in the Sir George game were Elaine Grills with 11, Sue Murray 9, and Peggy McVittie, 7.

Cagers play Warriors at Hart House

'Octer' sidelined by charleyhorse

By PAUL HENDERSON

Varsity basketball Blues face Waterloo Warriors tonight at Hart House without the services of six-foot, six-inch forward Dave Ouchterlony.

A charleyhorse, which has plagued Ouchterlony in recent games, forced his retirement for the remainder of the season. He currently holds down 18th spot in league scoring with an average of 10.9 points per game. He was also an asset to Blues under the boards where he combined with centre Ed Bordas to comprise one of the league's best rebounding twosomes.

One member of Blues who will be very much in the game is guard Dave West. West is engaged in a battle with Jerry Raphael of Warriors for the league scoring title.

West is in first place at present with an average of 24.2 points per game, but Raphael is close behind with 22.2. When these two tangled in Waterloo last Wednesday, West outscored Raphael 31-24, but Blues lost 70-68.

When the teams clash in Hart House at 8:30, Blues, with a 4-5 record, will be seeking revenge for the loss in Waterloo. In that encounter, the Varsity squad was the victim of some questionable refereeing and its own loose play. They indicated that they would be out to hand Warriors, (7-2), a trouncing in the return match.

DAVE OUCHTERLONY
Out of action

Under The Basket: A pair of Queens forwards made their presence known over the weekend. Larry Ferguson advanced from 7th to 6th in league scoring and Doug Evans from 10th to 7th. . . . Two McMaster players made the ratings for the initial time this year. Jim Saddler took over 20th place and Jim Baird jumped from an unranked position (under 10 points per game) to the 16th spot. . . . McMaster and Windsor boast five men a piece in the top 22, Toronto, Queen's and Waterloo each have three, Western possesses two and winless McGill, one. . . . Blues play their final two games of the season at McMaster next Wednesday and here against Queen's Saturday, Feb. 29. . . . A Waterloo loss tonight will assure undefeated Windsor at least a tie for first place. . . . Interfaculty swimming and a dual gymnastics meet between Varsity and McMaster is also included on tonight's athletic night program.

If Redmen cooperate in Montreal

BLUES CAN WIN TITLE TONIGHT

By GORD BELLMORE

By about 11 p.m. tonight Varsity Blues could be the new Queen's Cup champions, given the right combination of circumstances.

If Blues win in Dundas Ont. against McMaster Marlins and Montreal Carabins lose or tie in Montreal against McGill Redmen, Varsity wins the title.

Should Carabins win, however, they will have one more chance left to catch the league-leading Blues, who are presently two points up on the Montreal team. Each team has one game left after tonight's action.

The only other team with a mathematical chance of winning is Laval Rouge et Or. But that chance is indeed slim for both Blues and Montreal must lose both remaining games for Laval to grab the championship. Laval, of course, must win its three remaining games.

Carabins dumped McGill 4-2 early in the season, but the team they face tonight has overcome its early-season troubles. Redmen have been playing the role of spoilers in the latter part of the season, counting 7 of a possible 10 points in their last five games.

Blues have enough to worry about without watching the out-of-town scoreboard. Although Blues eliminated McMaster last Friday in Toronto, Marlins would like nothing better than to throw a crimp in the title aspirations of their arch-rivals.

The game could very well be the most demanding coaching problem Blues' Joe Kane will have to face this season. It was evident in Friday's game that Blues couldn't contain Marlins' second line of Jim McLellan, Bob Pond and Gary Spoor as this unit scored four third period goals.

If the two coaches continue to go mostly with just two lines as they did Friday Kane will have to come up with a unit that can stay with this line.

Blues have been relying on their top line of Hank and Steve Monteith and Sonny Osborne for most of their scoring and Kane will have to hope this unit will be able to dominate McMaster's very good first line of John Savage, Bob Apps (the league's scoring leader) and Pete Randle as they did last week.

The Toronto line outscored the Mac trio 5-1 Friday, a feat which will be hard to duplicate. The last time the big line had an off-night was against McGill, and Blues had to come back to salvage a 2-2 tie. Two defencemen got the Toronto goals.

Kane will be faced with another problem tonight. Since it is Marlins' home game, their coach Les Prince will have the final choice in all line changes. It will take all of Kane's ingenuity to minimize Prince's position.

STRAY SHOTS: Blues play their final game Friday night at home against Laval, and if they don't win the title tonight the Laval game will be their last chance. . . . A Varsity win tonight regardless of what Montreal does will eliminate Laval. . . . Blues meet Western in an exhibition game at Varsity Arena, Thursday, Feb. 27.

Westward Ho for Football Blues

University of Toronto will send a football team to Western Canada for the first time in history, it was announced this week by athletic director Warren Stevens.

Stevens accepted an invitation for Varsity Blues to play two pre-season exhibition games in Winnipeg and Edmonton next fall. Blues will meet University of Manitoba Bisons in Winnipeg, Saturday, Sept. 26, and University of Alberta Golden Bears in Edmonton the following Monday.

Blues will leave Toronto Friday, Sept. 25 and arrive back home the following Tuesday. The excursion, which will cost $7,100, will be financed by the two western teams.

Golden Bears defeated Queen's Gaels, the Yates Cup winners, 25-7, in a post-season game at Edmonton last November.

It was also announced that Blues will not accept an invitation to compete in the Atlantic Bowl game at Halifax this year. Blues made the trip the past two seasons.

SAC struggles on with governors; hires lawyer, seeks autonomy

By DON SMITH
Varsity SAC Reporter

The Students' Administrative Council moved Wednesday night to seek legal aid in its struggle for autonomy with the board of governors.

On the basis of a legal opinion of the exact powers of the board over the SAC as granted by the University of Toronto Act, 1947, the council will instruct President Doug Ward regarding his consultations with the board.

Five clauses of a motion by Vince Kelly (III Law) were voted on separately and passed.

"That the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto formally notify the board of governors:

1. that the Students' Administrative Council recognizes itself as being bound by all regulations made pursuant to the authority granted by the University of Toronto Act in relation to a "representative committee" of students;

2. that the Students' Administrative Council is prepared to negotiate regulations to govern any area outside the board of governors' legal jurisdiction which affects jointly the SAC and the board of governors;

3. that such negotiations shall be conducted with student representatives. The SAC normally refers such negotiations to the senior student of the university, i.e. the president of the council who receives pertinent instructions from the SAC and reports to the SAC.

4. that a legal opinion be sought as soon as possible to determine the powers of the board of governors in relation to the SAC as found in the University of Toronto Act;

5. that an extraordinary meeting be called within the week to instruct the president in regard to negotiations with the board of governors."

A sixth clause, stating that after March 1 the council would no longer consider itself bound by any board of governors bylaw which was "ultra vires" (outside the powers of) the University of Toronto Act, was withdrawn after some debate.

John Hayes (SGS), supporting this clause, said that it would put the SAC on the initiative and board on the defensive, but Dave Beatty (III Trin) questioned: "How can we in one section call for legal aid to clarify our position and in the next say 'You've got til March 1 to produce, boys?'"

Ward, and his predecessor

SAC-types Diane Bennett, Joyce Dunnison and Marianna Mamula ponder pencils and fingers during Wednesday night's council meeting.

Jordan Sullivan, have been consulting with the board for more than a year on a brief presented by the council to the Caput last year. The brief requested broad constitutional changes granting more autonomous powers to the council.

At present the SAC is listed in a board of governors bylaw as a subsidiary of the board, and its budget is under the governors' control.

In making his motions Kelly said: "Although I have always been struck by the fairness of the administration, the one tactic I found particularly odious was delaying any negotiations so long that the council changed, and the new council had to start from scratch."

"The only thing which gives the board power is section 34 of the U of T Act, but the council has got into the habit of giving them powers they do not have, including financial control."

Ward agreed. "They don't have the power, but nobody has said anything so they have gone ahead and legislated."

Don Rogers (II UC) stated that "The intent of the motion is to move things up one notch, and put a little more heat on Simcoe Hall."

Sean Cawley (SGS) asked that rather than emphasize the confidential nature of the negotiations, council make it clear that Ward was representing all of the SAC.

Ward said yesterday that the council had succeeded in retaining Robert Macaulay former minister of energy and resources, as its counsel.

Warns against centralization

It is necessary for Canadian universities to clarify their role in society and to show why they need a high degree of autonomy, President Claude Bissell wrote in his annual report to the board of governors, which was released yesterday.

Dr. Bissell's report said there are forces in Canada which would welcome the collectivization of universities.

He reported that universities are often made institutional scapegoats because of a nation-wide suspicion of intellectual activity.

There is a tendency to confuse equality of opportunity and variety of aptitude when considering who should attend university, the report stated.

It pointed out that while in the past Ontario universities have been free of government interference, it is "especially important for us to eschew centralized control and the deadly manifestations of the production-line syndrome."

Dr. Bissell defended the universities against charges of wanting to monopolize post-secondary education, and shirking their responsibilities by seeking to divert large numbers of students into technical institutes.

He admitted that the universities have tried to preserve their nature and autonomy, but that this has been to ensure their ability to provide a high quality education.

Dr. Bissell outlined the university's chief concern for the future as preserving the balance of parity among the various branches of learning, particularly between the sciences and the humanities, and the professional schools and the academic disciplines.

While describing the Ontario Graduate Fellowship scheme as the most important event of the year, Dr. Bissell said it will be insufficient for future needs.

Two Sputniks and a dead dog in heaven

By MARY McIVER

God has often been portrayed as a be-whiskered old despot who sits up in Heaven and gazes down ominously at mankind. But we know through our conceptual powers that there is nothing up there but "a couple of Sputniks and a dead dog."

So said Professor Northrop Frye, principal of Victoria College, and an ordained minister, in a lecture yesterday.

Dr. Frye's brief outline of his religious thesis provoked a few uneasy laughs and a barrage of sceptical questions from his attentive audience. An eminent scholar in the fields of theology, philosophy and literature, he was difficult to refute.

The essence of Dr. Frye's religious theory is that religious reality exists only in human understanding. If God existed in nature, He would be "dismally stupid". Thus a natural religion "is not worth a damn". It is impossible to find God through scientific reasoning because our conception is a limiting barricade.

It is stupid to assert or deny that God exists because this is not within the realm of human perception. "Unless the Divine takes a human form, there is nothing in the Divine worth bothering about," he said.

To find reality in religion, one is confined to the articulation of one's beliefs through symbolism. Christianity and indeed all religions take an iconic approach, the only acceptable approach.

The historical approach to religion is highly unsatisfactory, Dr. Frye said. The Bible

AVR attendance low; could mean end of show

This year's All Varsity Revue is an artistic success but seems to be a financial failure.

Opening night ticket sales amounted to only 50 and Wednesday's paid admissions were 40.

Thursday was better. The number was 75. The two weekend nights promise to be double that each.

The capacity of Hart House Theatre is 495.

If Friday and Saturday sell out, the revue will still lose almost $200, and this could mean the end of AVRs.

Earl Rosen (III UC), producer of the show, attributes the poor attendance to the one-week-later-than-usual date and to the unusually large number of musicals produced on campus this year.

Ignorance about Thurber, one of America's great humorists is another, he said.

The show has received almost unanimously excellent reviews from the press.

Herbert Whittaker (of the Globe), called it "one of the best AVR offerings in recent history" and "well-paced, well-staged".

The Varsity's Eric Rump, said Thurber is better on the page but admitted that the show was "presented with considerable skill". He especially singled out Joy Teperman as the "most assured" of the performers with "a fine gritty voice, full of character".

He placed the main weakness of the show upon the audience — "Those who haven't bought tickets yet" and said they "should do so, for there is enough poignant humor and wistful charm to make the visit worthwhile."

Rose Macdonald (of the Tely) called the show enchanting. "The co-eds were pretty and gay," she said.

Further proof of critical acceptance of the show, is Ryerson's FM Station's decision to tape the show and broadcast it sometime next week.

The question of recognition of fraternities, which flared briefly at the previous Students' Administrative Council meeting, subsided in the opening minutes of the meeting Wednesday.

Larry Ward (IV Vic), who had moved two weeks ago that the SAC recognize the fraternities and sororities, withdrew his motion.

SAC votes to raise CUS levy

By DON SMITH
Varsity SAC Reporter

The Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night voted to raise the per capita levy for the Canadian Union of Students to 60 cents.

This will raise the sum which the U of T contributes to the national CUS organization to $8,800, an increase of almost $3,000.

Previously the levy had been 60 cents for the first 1,500 students, 55 cents for the next 1,000, 45 cents for the next 1,000 and 35 cents for the balance.

The motion to raise the levy met strong initial opposition from both the medical and engineering societies, whose representatives said that their organizations were dissatisfied with the local CUS committee, and were not willing to increase their support of the national organization.

A motion to raise the honorarium of the director of the U of T Chorus from $500 to $1,000 also passed after brief debate.

Nancy Caldecott (III Vic), music committee chairman, said in introducing the motion that the sum was necessary to attract a professional director.

Stan Adelman (II New) mused: "I shall have to vote for this motion out of ignorance."

Council also voted to discontinue hosting visiting councils at a luncheon or football weekends, and allot free Blue and White dance tickets to other councils, cheerleaders, majorettes, bands and football players.

The University of Toronto Degating Union was authorized to appoint a debating coach who would receive an honorarium of up to $100 plus travelling expenses.

A motion to change the SAC constitution by electing two vice-presidents instead of one was withdrawn, and another to give the School of Business a separate representative on council was ruled out of order since the business students now are represented by the School of Graduate Studies representatives.

Debate doesn't deplore Quebec

By MIKE GRAY

The resolution that "this house deplores Quebec's current aspirations" was defeated last night at Hart House 28-17. Speaking for the Noes were two representatives of the University of Montreal.

Howard Simmons (SGS) said the "gut issues" such as economic relations and centralization of government were being avoided in discussion of the Quebec question. Too much attention is being focused today upon biculturalism, he said.

Michel Vaillancourt, said English-speaking Canadians, to whom he had spoken regarding what action they would undertake if they were in the position of the Quebecois, replied that they would achieve separation within five years through revolution.

Taking a more extreme tack, Michel Gouault concluded for the Noes that French Canadians feel at home only in Quebec, "within sight of the fleur de lis", and cannot realize individual aspirations while enclosed within the jail of Canadian federalism.

John Godfrey (III Trin) noted in true Churchillian fashion that, "nous combattons le separatisme la dernière fortresse — la reigne Elizabeth."

Warden Joseph McCulley attributed poor attendance (50 persons) at the debate to lack of publicity by The Varsity.

Bladen blasts practices in Arts faculty

Sharp criticism of the existing facilities and practices in the faculties of Arts and Science and Medicine has been made by faculty and college spokesmen in the annual University of Toronto report.

Arts and Science Dean Vincent Bladen said in the report released yesterday that too much time which should be devoted to education is being taken up by examinations. He called for extension of lectures into mid-May, and greater use of term marks and essay marks in determining standing.

Dean Bladen said the faculty was suffering chiefly from shortage of space and funds, noting that science equipment costs should be tripled.

Academic Vice-President Moffatt Woodside said too many students in second-year courses branching from Mathematics, Physics and Chemistry were failing. Last year, 23 of 54 enrolled in three of the courses failed. He attributed failure to apparent weakness.

Faculty of Medicine Dean John Hamilton expressed fear that there will be a shortage of doctors by 1970 unless more students can be trained. He felt Ontario's promised universal health insurance plan would cut the number by depriving medical schools of teaching patients (who would get free private care) and not paying students for teaching or research.

briefs

Students who heard Harry H. Hallatt speak on a "New Economics" yesterday seemed confused about exactly what he was trying to say. Mr. Hallatt has been running ads in The Varsity to recruit students interested in a "practical, economical, politician-proof system of issuing and controlling the volume of our required money supply... which will enable us to end poverty in the midst of potential plenty." His main point seemed to be that the problem of national growth is one of manpower, not of money. He challenged his listeners to have the guts to do something about truth, and to see that Canadian economic policy runs the way it says it does.

Funeral service for Professor William John MacAndrew, former registrar of University College, was held Tuesday. Prof. MacAndrew died Sunday after a brief illness at the age of 77.

University of Toronto's first Peace Corps exam was given at St. Michael's College Monday. Rev. John Madden, head of the English department at SMC was responsible for arranging the unique event on campus so that it would not be necessary for those interested to leave Canada.

Frye (contd.)

and other sacred books, although usually shaded down into "authentic history", are really collections of myths. In fact the only sensible attitude toward history is that of James Joyce's Stephen Daedalus: "History is a nightmare".

Dr. Frye loosely defined religion as being "whatever a man wants to identify himself with." A man's beliefs are not what he says or thinks he believes, but what his actions show he believes. He thus identifies himself with the symbols of his actions.

These symbols are purely arbitrary but the most primitive ones lead to the most comprehensive understanding.

He said the Bible turns on aphorisms and parables because, as in art, symbolism does not restrict mental approaches. It is written such that there is no possibility of definitive belief in anything but the mythical presentation itself. Symbolism becomes the only language for something existential, for something that is both understandable and inexhaustible.

Symbolism is the only thing that stands out in all religion, the only thing that gives all religions a uniformity, he said.

Symbolism is the key to what religion is all about, but not to the "Truth", which is something that cannot be known. It is impossible to base a religion on pure faith in something unknown because this leads to a "desperate insecurity".

Dr. Frye concluded by asserting that symbolism is the only satisfying way of approaching religion. Saying "I believe in God" or "I am an atheist" only provokes the response "So what?"

A common man surrounded by flunkies

"Surrounded by noble flunkies," Pope John XXIII nevertheless was one with the people, Rev. Stanley Kutz of St. Michael's College said yesterday.

"I saw him once at close range, carried on an elaborate chair," Father Kutz said in an SCM lecture.

"He was a man big enough to transcend this anomalous situation. Some men would feel at home, some liberal men would be disturbed and show it.

"Pope John didn't let it cramp his style... it couldn't separate him from the people."

In the diplomatic corps as a priest, John "felt as though he were in the desert eating locusts and honey," bound up as he was by protocol and separated from humble people. "He was not particularly successful there: he bungled a few important jobs."

By CAROL PATTERSON

The Pope, in his last encyclical Pacem in Terris "gave every man the benefit of the doubt," Father Kutz quoted from it — "We cannot identify certain ideologies with the persons who express them."

"Obviously Pope John was thinking of Communism here."

Pope John was "unique among Popes" in stressing man's rights before his duties. Above all his emphasis was on the right to freedom and incentive.

Men will never arrive at a perfect political structure, rather they should understand and appreciate basic principles, such as truth.

Pope John urged Christians, especially Catholics, to get out and live in this world, that there was no excuse for turning out mediocre work.

In Father Kutz's words: "It is not really Christian to just look forward to the next world and make no effort in this one."

Question student loan decision

The Canadian Union of Students is examining the proposals for interest-free loans to students mentioned in the recent speech from the throne.

CUS President David Jenkins said earlier this week that consultation with the provinces should begin immediately, so that final agreement can be arrived at during the dominion-provincial conference March 31.

This was necessary, said the CUS president, because "we don't want the federal government interfering in affairs which are strictly provincial responsibilities under the BNA Act.

"It may be impossible to implement loans as proposed by the Pearson government without infringing upon provincial sovereignty in the field of education.

"If that is the case, and it may well be, then the only solution is for the federal government to turn over certain areas of taxation to the provincial governments so that the latter can pay for the carrying out of their responsibilities toward education," Jenkins said.

"We urge the Federal and provincial governments to examine this loan plan very carefully."

The proposed federal plan would give interest-free loans to university students for the period of their university training.

However, education is defined as a provincial responsibility under Section 92 of the BNA Act.

Quebec to opt out of loan program

QUEBEC (Special) — The Quebec government has given notice that it will opt out of any program of interest-free loans to university students, as announced in Tuesday's throne speech in Ottawa.

Youth Minister Paul Gérin-Lajoie said there is little doubt that the federal government's promise constituted a clear intrusion into the education field, which in Quebec's eyes is under exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Government and opposition spokesman had made the same point earlier in the legislature.

Under the formula of fiscal alternatives worked out in recent federal-provincial conferences, a province has the right to opt out of any federally-sponsored joint program and receive its own share of the money with no strings attached.

Questioned on the loan promise by Opposition Leader Daniel Johnson, Mr. Lesage said: "At first glance, unless the contrary is demonstrated, have the impression that it is an indirect intrusion, through the back door, into the domain of education."

Appoint new dean at UC

Charity L. Grant will become dean of women in University College July 1, President Claude Bissell announced this week.

Miss Grant will succeed Mrs. Mary Quayle Innis, who is retiring to devote her time Mrs. Innis, retiring after to writing on Canadian history.

Miss Grant was educated at the University of Toronto, where she earned B.A. and M.S.W. degrees; and at Vienna, where she studied art and German.

Her previous work has included working for different departments of the government, including the department of citizenship and immigration, and department of public welfare.

nine years as dean of women, is the author of several books, including An Economic History of Canada and a history of the YWCA.

She is the widow of the late Professor H. A. Innis, who was dean of the School of Graduate Studies and head of the department of political economy at the time of his death in 1952. U of T's newest multi-faculty college is to be named Innis College in his honor.

New BC university to adopt trimester plan

VANCOUVER (Special) — Simon Fraser University, scheduled to open in Burnaby in 1965, will be the first in Canada to adopt year-round operation.

Chancellor Gordon Shrum said the university will have three 16-week terms, and of these the students will ordinarily attend two.

Voluntary attendance at three terms will be possible and will allow a student to complete a four-year course in 2 2/3 years.

Created by the British Columbia legislature last March, the university will open to receive 3,000 students by the fall of 1965.

"This idea of taking five months off from university studies to go working as a cook somewhere is no way to cope with the great increase in the amount of knowledge to be mastered," the chancellor said. "We could cut a four-year course to at least three for gifted students if they had the chance to study the year round."

In the sciences, he said, the years before 35 are the most productive, but these under present university systems may be spent in mere college preparation for a career.

a responsible decision

The Students' Administrative Council's decision to acquire legal advice and openly push for the constitutional changes being asked of the board of governors is one of the most important moves the SAC has made.

The principles involved and the changes asked for have long been discussed in The Varsity, as well as by an informed few students. It is good that these discussions have been brought into the open where they can be debated by all students.

The principle involved in this sophisticated conflict is of extreme importance to all students. It involves more than students being able to freely administer their own affairs. At stake is the whole attitude of the administration toward students.

One view holds that students are responsible citizens in a democratic society, and as such should be responsible for their actions. The other, which has prevailed for too long, maintains that university students require supervision of their activities and affairs.

The conclusions reached by the board of governors next week mean for more than the right of the SAC to administer its own affairs. They involve the acceptance or rejection of the idea that the students at this university, both individually and collectively, are mature enough to be responsible for their actions.

The SAC is to be commended for the decision it made Wednesday night, and deserves the active support of all students.

mike, baby

Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, Ottawa, Canada.

Mike:

It's about the mix-up over the loans and scholarships for university students. You remember. The 10,000 university scholarships for $1,000 each you talked about during the last two election campaigns.

Yeah, that's right. The same ones the minister of northern affairs, Arthur Laing, mentioned after you were elected.

Sure, sure, you wrote The Varsity a letter in October saying you were working on them and that there were problems involved in the provincial-federal constitutional matter of who has jurisdiction over education.

And it's not that we think you were making hollow election promises . . . or anything. But people (particularly the handful of students who don't make more than $2,000 a year) are starting to get suspicious.

But Mike, loans? Who needs them? I mean really. They're easy enough to get now. Loans, schmooons. I mean, who goofed?

A few of us thought at first that you offered the loan scheme to get around the question of provincial jurisdiction over education, but then you yourself pointed out that negotiations with the provinces would be needed to put the loan bit into effect.

Well, it would sort of appear that, just possibly, it wouldn't be any more difficult to negotiate a scholarship system.

A few of the party stalwarts are saying there isn't enough money in the ol' checking account to pay the scholarships, but we know you better than that Mike. Hell, you wouldn't make a promise like that during an election campaign just to get the student vote, would you?

So we've been thinking that maybe things got fouled up a bit in the rush of writing the throne speech. You know, somebody slipped up and by mistake that ridiculous section on loans got in, instead of the good old scholarship idea.

Well, best of luck Mike. We're sure you'll straighten things out; and we'll see you at the next election campaign.

Sincerely yours,
A. Student.

Counselling service would solve most student emotional problems

by DONNA MASON

"It's ridiculous that an educational institution the size of the University of Toronto does not have a counselling service."

"Existing facilities are adequate to handle the problem. I don't think a counselling service is really necessary."

These two statements from Dr. Bruce Quarrington, U of T psychology lecturer, and Dr. A.S.P. Wodehouse, head of the Health Service, represent differing points of view in the student mental health controversy at U of T.

Three qualified psychiatrists are at present working part-time in connection with the Health Service, and last year almost 300 students took advantage of this service.

These students were given psychiatric help after being referred to the Health Service by faculty members, or other Health Service doctors who had been treating a physical complaint and had recognized psychological stresses. Many, of course, came of their own accord.

Those who feel that such a service is not sufficient to handle the needs of U of T's swelling student population point to the examples of American universities in the same size-range.

Most have mental health facilities with a staff of psychologists trained in special counselling techniques, and many also have trained social workers and psychiatrists working with the service. But the basic staff of these services is equipped to deal with all facets of mental and emotional disturbances.

Others would suggest that existing facilities provide for student counselling in all but the most serious cases, which can, of course, be referred to the Health Service. But many psychologists feel that this is not sufficient, that the problem of student mental health is too important to leave to the administrators. Registrars and chaplains, professors and residence dons are rarely trained in psychological counselling which is becoming a more and more specialized field. People lacking such training may easily mistake the seriousness of a student's problem.

Also as the university grows staff-student contracts become necessarily less frequent and more impersonal. A professor cannot be expected to notice signs of trouble in a few members of a lecture class of 200. And since most professors do not take attendance, a serious drop in marks is the only sign that they can be expected to notice.

Registrars and other staff members face a similar handicap. The very size of the student body at U of T imposes these restrictions. Although most staff members are genuinely interested and willing to help have neither the time nor the opportunity to do so.

Most students simply need an impartial person to talk to. Student problems are capable for the most part of fairly easy solution. Serious personality disorders and suicides, although spectacular, are infrequent, and are by no means the important problem of university mental health. In any case, at American universities it has been found that a specialized counselling service is better equipped to spot these disturbances before they become serious.

Then, too, many students shy away from actual psychiatry, yet do not wish to confide in anyone connected with the actual academic life. Nor do they wish to talk to a chaplain or other religious advisor. Often a short conversation with a trained counsellor can help a student handle his own problem. And if the problem is more serious, the trained counsellor can judge and decide what course of action is best fitted to it.

The service presently provided by the university of Toronto is superior to that of many other Canadian universities. But it is inferior to the standards of most American universities, and is, in the opinion of many people, not suited to the size and organization of U of T.

A basic reason for this is not that people are unaware of the problem, for throughout the university community there is a growing knowledge that it exists. The difficulties chiefly involve finances, qualified staff, and accommodation, troubles common to all departments of an institution like U of T. But surely a problem so basic and universal should receive early consideration in expansion programs.

"Until a counselling service is set up by the university we are putting blocks in the way of those who need help," a member of the psychology staff said, "because we are strengthening the natural reluctance of students to admit and discuss their emotional or psychological problems."

Weekends have been maligned

by N. DAVID GREYSON

It is not surprising that "Weekends" have been harshly criticized in the past. It is not surprising that people have considered weekend exchanges to be extravagant luxuries. It is not surprising that a great number of people think only in terms of the social side of "Weekend" activities.

It is not surprising, but such a reputation is notifiable.

The only valid criticism which can be levelled at the exchange program is that there are too few exchanges, and not enough people have a chance to participate.

For those who do participate, whether they be collegiate politicians, Varsity reporters, or campus "dogooders", invariably come out with the same high opinion of the value of the exchange. Similarly, anyone who has attended, as a guest speaker or a reporter, any of the study sessions, which are the basis of the exchange, is impressed with the seriousness and high level of interest and inquiry.

The recently completed "Tarheel" Exchange with North Carolina is a good case in point, as it was the most severely criticized of the exchange weekend.

Its program included lectures by professors who could outline the basic issues of separatism, and Canadian-U.S. affairs.

COMMENT

These sessions resulted in informal question and answer periods, and private discussions which in turn lead to a mutual understanding which none of us could ever have hoped to attain by any other means. These sessions also resulted in the developing of a self-awareness, or the unveiling of a self-awareness which might never have had an opportunity to manifest itself.

Its program included round-table discussions of questions, such as "Is religion necessary for morality?"

Its program included less formal meetings. It was against these that most of the disfavor has fallen, although they were a minor part of the weekend. Critics apparently feel that no time should be allowed for social activities. And while they protest in favor of campus pub "to provide a meeting ground for informal academic discussion in surroundings conducive to good fellowship", they do not realize that a "Weekend" house party provides the same type of atmosphere.

Criticism of exchanges, when based on prejudice and ignorance, is grossly unfair, and misleading.

Exchanges such as the Carabin, Tarheel and Harvard Weekends open our eyes and make us see our own failings—make us see the danger of ignorance and prejudice here and elsewhere.

Exchanges have been criticized. It is not surprising. If more students could participate, we could all see their value.

White men are inherently racist

By ROSEMARY SPEIRS

Austin Clarke is an author and novelist who has worked in Toronto for the Globe and Mail, written for Maclean's, and done freelance work for the CBC. He has written two novels, the first of which, The Survivors of the Crossing, will be published simultaneously in Canada and Great Britain this summer. Toronto has not proved an author's haven for Mr. Clarke, however, and increasingly he finds that his work is becoming a complaint.

He has much that he is bitter about. He voices the usual complaints about the standardization of American society and finds Canada a very mediocre country. And he objects to the Canadian disregard for the creative artist. By far the most upsetting problem however, is discrimination.

Mr. Clarke has found that although there is less overt discrimination in Canada than in the United States there is not less discrimination. "The ordinary middle-class Anglo-Saxon in Canada would have little problem joining the extreme groups of the Southern United States."

Mr. Clarke thinks that the Canadian attitude is non-committal—that the average man has never thought about discrimination or how to put an end to it. Since the white Canadian is ignorant about the problem and therefore extremely susceptible to argument "a sufficiently strong force could push him into either camp."

Unfortunately most of the pushing comes from the racist camp. "All of American society is based upon race—television, newspapers, magazines, even the 'Whitey-White' models in Ebony reflect delusions of white superiority."

Mr. Clarke feels that racism is ingrained in this society: "All whites are inherently racists." White people have an ingrained belief in their own superiority. They live with a myth about the negro and can see him only through this distorted lens. "Canadians do not hate the negro, however. Hate implies contact and few people care enough to try such contact."

Most Canadians do not really know the negro—and what it means to be black in predominantly white society.

Mr. Clarke's basic reason for being so pessimistic about racist attitudes is the white man's failure to enter the fight against discrimination.

Those who are not physically involved are doing nothing. You cannot be a pacifist about the negro problem."

He wonders why university students in particular have not made it their business to protest against discrimination if they oppose it. Mr. Clarke feels that Canadians have no right to assume they are not involved in what happens in the United States. Even negro students on campus he thinks, wish to disassociate themselves from the problem. "The black student here is a middle class colonial either from Africa or the West Indies. He feels he is different, that he is a special case, and he looks down on the ordinary negro."

All suffer discrimination but the negro from the colonies regard it distasteful to talk about it. They feel the university would not like its black students to cause trouble. They do not realize that they have a more important obligation to satisfy their racial pride and conscience."

In America only the Black Muslim seem to be filling the role which Mr. Clarke feels protest must take. The

Levine Machines

By ANNE LINDER

Les Levine. 28. Artist. Residence: third floor factory loft in Toronto's slums.

These are the bare facts about one of many young men and women who work in obscurity and poverty and yet persevere in producing paintings, sculpture and drawings that few people see and even fewer appreciate.

Les Levine works at a hack job to earn a pittance of money to spend on canvas and chairs. After work he returns to his studio to work late into the night ripping apart chairs, screwing them together in new forms and stretching canvas over them. The canvas is plasticized and painted a shiny aluminum. The result he humorously names "Levine Machines".

The coffin and bed-like constructions will not sell. He knows that when he has a show, people will scoff, sneer, perhaps like, but never buy. The pieces are impractical, not flat and painterly they project up to three feet from the wall. His titles indicate that he thinks abstract art should communicate without the help of a "clue" title. Hence such humoresques as "All the things you could have been if Freud's wife had been your mother" and "Will all Canadian art please step forward?" appear on his works.

Les, of necessity, has a gargantuan ego. He knows that his work is among the best in Canada right now—he knows that his one-man show will be the hottest of the year, and that his pieces can match any hanging in New York.

Besides dividing an eighteen hour day between his job and his art, he manages to read an occasional "Fanny Hill". About that his comment was: "too romantic about sex". He believes that there is no such thing as pornography.

Thus a single artist lives in a white-washed loft, storing his food in a cardboard box, washing in a tinny shower stall, and always making "Levine Machines". With conviction and drive and twenty years, he may well be an international figure; but now? Few know of him or his struggle. Few care about his artistic fight for survival.

His rewards are yet to come. His shows in March at the Mirvish Gallery and in October at Hart House promise to rock Toronto.

But there are many more Les Levines; some older, some younger, some fags and some flagellants (and hard to find) and some who have already had the bitter taste of success and sales. How do they live with their art?

Next week: Martin Berkovitz, drawings of lesbians and women . . . a man with one triumph.

Cinema of the absurd

by DAVID SECTER

Hallelujah the Hills is a surreal life adventure story by a new production team working out of New York. Written and directed by Adolfas Mekas, a young American filmmaker with a fertile imagination and a wacky sense of nonsense.

Most of the film deals with an absurd camping trip in the hills of Vermont which stretches into all four seasons. Jack and Leo are both in love with Vera, but different actresses play Jack's Vera (winter) and Leo's Vera (summer). She marries somebody else, however, and the two boys go romping back to the woods.

The bizarre appears everywhere in this happy farce. When Jack and Leo are duelling samurai-style, Japanese subtitles flash onto the screen. Mekas, not wishing to affront the Soviet Union, uses Russian titles later. In the midst of the spring sequence, we see Lillian Gish floating towards a water fall on a chunk of ice. She is rescued in the nick of time by Richard Barthelmess, ending a memorable episode from D. W. Griffith's epic Way Down East. Other vignettes in the movie are reminiscent of film-makers from Chaplin and Mack Sennet to Fellini and Antonioni.

The film was shot on location in South Londonderry, Vermont (pop 206). Most of the faces are unfamiliar. Jack (Peter H. Beard) is a staff photographer for Vogue; Leo (Maty Greenbaum) is a poet, artist, and social worker. The two Veras are played by a fashion model and an off-Broadway actress. The musical score by Meyer Unconcerned with over-exposure, this abominable snowman chases damsels through the hills.

Kupfleman has the same eclectic tempo of the video. Vitality and cameraderie scintillate through the entire production, suggesting that it was made by a group of good friends for a kibitz.

Hallelujah the Hills has represented the U.S. at several international film festivals, which is not surprising in view of the sparsity of creative films in America. The low-budget needed for this type of picture makes it a logical genre for Canadian producers to attempt.

Don't look for any profound significance in Hallelujah - it is supposed to be absurd. Just get comfortable and enjoy it for what it is - a testimony to friendship, laughter, and nature.

An honest look at spiritual crisis

Producer Alan Pakula and director Robert Mulligan have created films which are both popular on the grand American scale, and substantial. Their first was To Kill A Mockingbird; their second is Love With The Proper Stranger, starring Natalie Wood and Steve McQueen.

There is no denying the validity and artistry of the European statements concerning social sterility and spiritual crisis. But Arnold Shulman's original screenplay for this movie is refreshing in its affirmation of the existence of honest human beings who neither allow their problems to sink to the level of bathos, nor balloon to the level of allegory; rather, they resolve them with dignity and, praised be, humour.

Angela has, the summer before, succumbed to excitement and curiosity, and slept with a complete stranger. She becomes pregnant. She finds him through his musicians' union in order to ask his help in getting an abortion. Rocky, doesn't even remember her, but, he turns out to be a "proper" stranger. In fact, he becomes even more proper as time goes on,

In the background is Angie's overly-protective, but well-meaning family. In the best Italian tradition, they direct all efforts to marrying her off to a clumsy, but sincere and generous man. He even offers to announce that he is the father of her baby. So far, mediocrity.

What makes this picture successful is its director's fairly consistent instinct for reality. His lower middle-class New York neighborhoods, tempt has been made by the director and writer to keep her role from being merely a stereotype.

The major credit must go to Miss Wood and Mr. McQueen. Both are good. She manages to be tempestuous and stubborn, yet dewy and vulnerable. Sexy, too in a clean and dignified way. He presents a character who is glib, cool, slightly rebellious with boyish charm, yet tender and decent to the core. But they are not excellent. Miss Wood occasionally becomes too histrionic; when she stalks about in anger, she looks as if she wished she were six feet tall; hair flies and eyes flash all over the place. Mr. McQueen shows the tendency to establish a personality rather than a performance.

The film manages in its light-handed fashion to make a considerable number of observations about society, the family, and mature love. Nothing is new, or tremendously powerful; everything is presented perfectly naturally in its relationship to the characters and their story.

with their cramped apartments, and old-fashion kitchens and bathrooms belong to lower middle-class New York, not Hollywood fantasy. Both Angie's and Rocky's families have that combination of ferocity, and love - but all characters are portrayed as individuals by fine supporting actors.

Herschel Bernardi as Angie's older brother contributes a notable performance, as does Tom Boswell as Columbo, Angie's Sutor. Edie Adams as Rocky's stripper is only adequate, but every at-

NAACP, he says, has been in existence for over 50 years and has made no major gains. The March on Washington was a failure since it proved to be nothing more than a big picnic where film stars and celebrities, white and black, got together in hollywood style. CORE, he says, has recently begun to understand the need to get down to the grass roots, but on the whole the working class negro remains untouched by such groups as the NAACP and the Negro League. The NAACP is full of college graduates but is out of touch with the negro who needs its help most — the unskilled, those who are unable even to get a job.

Mr. Clarke insists that the Black Muslim are the only group fighting for the negro which really represents him. "They are the only movement which is reminding the negro of the ghetto slum that he is not only a statistic but a human being. Slavery was so successful and the negro has become so accustomed to being fed, that the spirit of self-help is not inherent. The Black Muslim give the negro pride and teach him to fight back like a man."

Feeling that racism is so inbred in the United States that the white man will never voluntarily stop his dehumanization and attempt to rob the black man of his pride. Mr. Clarke stresses pride. He stresses that the battle is left to the blacks and that that battle is being waged most vigorously by the Muslims. Yet he has his reservations. "Temperamentally I am a Muslim but their aim of separation is not a practical solution to the problem. If they cannot be left in peace from white discrimination and white violence, the Black Muslim want to form a separate negro state in America. The negro would then have a chance to do for himself — to prove that he can manage as well, or even better, than the white man. But separation is impracticable. Congress would never allow it. And if it did, oppression and invasion from white America would be a constant fear."

Mr. Clarke is left then in a pessimistic position. Even though it is now becoming fashionable to listen to the negro voice he does not see any alternation in the profound reservation with which the two races confront one another. He sees a possible solution to racism in a careful program of education — particularly among children and young people. He wants these children to be able to see the negro operating in situations of equality, not, as is usually the case, in domestic positions, as servants to the white man.

But education takes a long time and even in Canada he feels that a crisis may come too soon. "We are not yet embroiled in a race war in a physical sense but the germs are here from which one could develop."

Tales from the Quarter

By LARRY GARBER

Prior to the fatal Barcelona trip, I was seeing a great deal of Rose the Newzealand. Rose had the foulest mouth of any woman I have ever known; her curses and judgements were monumental. "Garber", she once said to me, "you are a Mort Sahl monster!" She later made up for this in her own inevitable way, but the tag stuck to my vanity and no matter what I did or felt, for weeks I functioned exactly like a Mort Sahl monster. Rose had a tremendous bosom that dropped in a series of bulbous folds; she seldom wore underwear, it made her itch, and she was something to see on windy Paris mornings. She also had an extremely ruddy face, she always looked as if she had been eating jam, and everything she did, she did loudly and with abandon. For instance, she had an insatiable appetite for food and men; she could not distinguish the one hunger from the other, but watching her eat was a sight I could have easily spared myself. She was never, in all that time, completely sober in bed; there was a reckless, drunken curiosity to her prowess; if the proof was in the pudding, the pudding was endless. She seemed to store insults in her cheeks like a dyspeptic squirrel. Of course, she was never wrong.

Her most charming feature was her houseboat in the Seine; it was docked just under the pont alexandre, a very wealthy bridge. Not within the memory of man had that boat ever floated on the river, it merely rested against the Quai day after day and threw parties. For years, it had been passed from hand to hand like a talisman, and there was some question as to whether it would sink to the bottom of the river if let loose, or simply drift towards the open sea disguised as a death ship. Originally, Rose had bought it for herself and her husband, intending that they should live in it forever and watch the city from the shore. No man, however, could live with Rose indefinitely, it was against the laws of gravity, eventually you were going to lose your balance, Rose allowed you to believe anything, except the illusion that you were free of her bite; if she told you to heel you were supposed to heel, and if you could salvage your dignity while heeling, that was fine but incidental. Her husband had run away to Portugal.

Because she was inconsolably husbandless, she was to some extent easy game. She liked to wallow in self-pity, it was the privilege of the deserted and she knew it. She allowed herself to cry publicly for the sad little man she had finally driven to lunacy and flight; the tears would curl down her great red cheeks like scraps of tin foil and her mouth would open to receive them, and from her throat a noise unlike a rattle would heave and burp its tragedy into the night. So Rose was two people, which I suppose is getting off easy. She was capable of the greatest dominance, and because of it, she could afford to reveal her sorrow and loss as a gift to those she had already trapped into patience and fright. For even when she bawled (an awesome spectacle) she could never let you forget that she was able to break your back.

Although she was probably worth it; that's hard to say. One of the many services she performed for us was the trapping of rich Americans etc., in the Quarter; her disheveled kind of wildness seemed to promise a great deal to someone, say, from Pembroke here was an experience, and she got us more drinks and meals per square Yank than anyone else. She wasn't beautiful by any means (imagine a large pink girl), but she was promiscuous. She'd bring her latest conquest into the Cafe Tournon, seat him at a large empty table, and wave us over. We'd move in like vultures, order our evening drinks and meal, and leave the bill for the good time.

Away from the boat, Rose, myself, Dixie and Iris maintained a ritual that was not unusual. Every morning or so, we would go to the petit bar for breakfast, discuss the day's potential, then walk to the American Express for our mail. Having mail sent to the American Express was a sensible idea, because no one really trusts a hotel concierge. And the American Gregory Corso once wrote an underground novel about it: a man and woman meet in front of the American Express; they fall instantly in love and fornicate on the vestibule floor; nine months later, she returns and drops a baby in the doorway; the child grows up thinking the American Express is its mother and eventually becomes a clerk in the Letters Department. Nevertheless, Dixie didn't like the place, he used to say its sounds were all wrong but Iris loved to wait in the long queues and stare at the world as if she were about to disembowel it and throw its skin away.

One day some weeks after the old foire Valley group had split up, I received a letter at the American Express from Stephen U. in London. He carefully explained where he had hidden his car, and authorized Bobby E Lee to sell it as best he could. Accordingly, Bobby E Lee decided to take it to Spain and push it over the Pyrennes. So we went along on that long hard trip.

*Dear reader, WKR, abbreviated personality, walks into the Cafe Tournon with Rose; she is fat and pink, he is pale and anxious and leaking from the face. A retched sight. "I want a steak," says Bobby E Lee; "I want everything," says Cheryl crotchily; "I'll take what I can get," says WKR, forming an abbreviated pool at our feet, and fumbling for his large, working-class wallet. He gets two whiffs from Rose, a belch from Cheryl, and directions gratis to the nearest pissoir. Honest reader

Castro..... oh so lenient

By IAN GENTLES

Christianity and Revolution by Leslie Dewart; Herder and Herder; 316 pp.

Dr. Dewart may well be the best informed man on Cuba in North America. Spanish by birth, he was raised in Cuba where he received his primary and secondary education. The reader of Christianity and Revolution benefits from Dr. Dewart's original and intimate connection with Cuba which has been carefully maintained through personal contacts in that country, and a continuous following of the Cuban press and radio.

Dr. Dewart describes the history of the Cuban Revolution and the position of the Catholic Church in the communization of the Revolution. In the third and fourth parts of the book he puts the Revolution in a larger perspective and considers the challenge of history to the Christian Faith, and in particular the challenge presented to Catholic theology by international politics in the thermodynamic age.

Dr. Dewart's exact knowledge of the details of the Cuban Revolution enables him to set the record straight on many issues which have been clouded by inaccurate journalism or dishonest diplomacy. For example, he disproves notions that Castro was a communist before the revolution, that he was later 'captured' by the communists, or even that he was driven to communism by American foreign policy. He also shows that much of Castro's provocative behaviour can be ascribed less to a deliberate in tention to elicit an aggressive response than to the fact that he is a stock Cuban character. He has the typical defects of garrulousness, oversensitivity, pride, thoughtlessness, vanity and volatility.

In dealing with the Church's estrangement from the Revolution, Dr. Dewart points to the fact that the Cuban Church was a Spanish colonial church, that its hierarchy was Spanish and therefore mediaeval in outlook. It had opposed Cuban independence in 1898 and was thereafter discredited and powerless in the eyes of the Cuban people. The church aligned itself with the wealthy and for the most part ignored the plight of the ordinary Cuban. Dr. Dewart shows however, that Castro was quite tolerant in his attitude toward the Church and in many ways treated it better than Batista had done.

Junior Award: S. Kezes: The Friendly Policeman

In the spring of 1959 for example, he agreed to allow, for the first time in republican Cuba's history, religious instruction in the public schools.

In spite of such concessions, many Catholics were concerned because Castro did not immediately repudiate communist support. Christianity was equated in their minds with anti-communism and a pro-American foreign policy. Some clergy began to celebrate masses for victims of communist persecution in other countries, and for the anniversary of Franco's victory over international communism. Castro remained quite tolerant of religion and only struck out against the Catholic Church when it was guilty of counter-revolutionary activities.

In an excellent chapter on the American political character Dr. Dewart defines its two dominant features as ethnocentricity and Christian Humanism—a combination which produces national frustration. Americans are unable to understand or empathize with an alien people. Their reaction to the evil committed by another country is one of disbelief, horror and amazement. At the same time their moral sense makes them incapable of machiavellianism. The failure of machiavellianism in Laos, in Cuba, and in the U-2 incident are evidence of this. The European Powers have already recognized that in the nuclear age machiavellian strategies are an 18th century anachronism. The disturbing thing about the Kennedy regime was its contribution to a moralizing cynicism in foreign affairs and its attempt to repudiate moral principles as a sign of weakness and soft-mindedness. Dr. Dewart remains confident however, that there is enough 'moral habituation' in the American people to ensure that they will eventually do the right thing in international affairs. One only hopes that the people responsible for handling American policy in Cuba, Panama and South Vietnam, have enough of this 'moral habituation' to justify Dewart's confidence.

The whole Cuban situation is for Dr. Dewart emblematic of the challenge of the twentieth century which faces the Catholic Church everywhere. "What must be feared," he says, "is not so much the danger of persecution as the possibility that the emerging Catholic universe might remain outside the World Church. What must be feared

Tail in the Fifth

By ALAN WALKER

Pain flickered back and forth across Cheryl's ashen face as she walked through the puce neon slushiness of the Parisian nocturnal time.

It was her leotards again. She insisted on wearing them tight and her crotch was badly blistered. It reminded Emmanuel the Spanish of the time his onion soup had spilled into the blades of the electric fan in the Cafe Monaco. It was really quite unaccountable. Emmanuel had to admit that most things unaccountably reminded him of the time he spilled his onion soup into the electric fan in the Cafe Monaco. The croutons left little brown smudges like squished cockroaches — as though they had been pressed unspeakably flat in their tiresome journeys among the dried defecation on the wall against which had pressed so many of Paris' most noted pooves.

Pooves. Ah, the memory of it. Larry the Barber mused poetically as the pot-smoke curled listlessly but in some way also purposely among his spiky hair, past Cheryl's abraised crotch and upwards into the all-seeing unknowable Paris night.

For this was the Fifth, filled with Americans in self-exile, and he loved it all, from its odor of freshly-committed abortions (perhaps the cockroaches had in some accountable way known which splotches were defecation and which foetal, he pondered,) to the friendly rats that clogged the turdful Seine across which he and Jules and the Seducer had swum the night before, haunch to haunch in their nude nakedness.

The Seine. Ah, to be in it again. And the cries of the gendarme that met them at the other side: "C'est très froid monsieur, n'est-ce pas?" The essential poetry of that remark. The world will stop and everyone will get off when I write the poetry that can match that remark, Larry the Barber brooded as the smoke got thicker around his head.

Jules the Seducer was attempting the Gottlieb. The spherical objects jangled and clashed as he plunged the lever backwards and forwards. Bonnie and Anne the Pregnant watched in awestruck disgust. Jules the Seducer had attempted Bonnie the week before and Anne the Pregnant had suffered a similar fate. Bonnie the Pregnant II in a week or so. Barber knew it. The cool, dry smoke that frisked about his septum gave him third sight at least. He frotteured his pink trotters together in time to the sound of Bonnie's nylons. Whisk whisk whisk. The smoke curled onwards.

Madame Turn-on was turning on Bobby E. Lee in the corner by the nude painting of General Petain. Stephen U. was doing the usual, struggling to remember his last name. The waste of it all impressed Barber. He puffed more furiously at his pot-pipe and laquiter:

"Goddamn it, the waste! Goddamn it! Goddamn it! Goddamn it! Nothing to waste but time. Time is the outhouse of the best of philosophers and what is a poor poet to do with his meagre share? Goddamn it, we protest!"

The Gottlieb was attempting Anne the Pregnant.

"Goddamn Gottlieb," Barber shrieked, "you (censored) pervert, leave Anne the Pregnant alone. You'll mess the floor."

Emmanuel the Spanish leaned over from his task of licking the squished croutons off the wall and silently in his own cool, hip Spanish way castrated the Gottlieb by pulling its plug out of the wall.

Rivulets of runny urine lapped to the afterbirth-stained floor of the Cafe Monaco. Madame Turn-on flicked another pair of sawdust on the floor. It promised to be another evening. Another Goddamn unadjectival evening, Barber decided discontentedly, and lit another pipe.

Madame Turn-on must be explained. She was that sort of creature that people referred to as a woman among women. They said that over and over again with intense rapidity and assurance, mollifying her insistence to the contrary. As if Barber wouldn't recognize a Bull-Dike when he saw one! I ask you.

But Madame Turn-on. Ah, if mere words can describe her loveable grotesquery, which the French word can sum up better than any mere translation. Grotesquerie, what a charming and unbeatable way to describe Madame Turn-on, that terror of the seas, that frightener of little children and seducer of Gottliebs. Owen the Welsh bounded into the Cafe Monaco. He always bounded when he entered the Cafe Monaco. It was the pool of blood just inside the door that bothered him. MacTavish the Arabic had slashed his wrists there earlier in the evening and nobody had seen to his needs except Anne the Pregnant, who, identifying briefly, tried and failed to get down on her knees to cuddle MacTavish's head in her threshing stomach. Barber had remarked wryly that they should call her Anne the Very Pregnant.

Barber was proud of that remark. He smiled as the smoke curled listlessly but somehow greedily among his polish-black hair. Yes, it had been a good remark. Jules the Seducer his idol had laughed until he vomited. Then everyone else laughed.

Barber felt that in many ways this was the most meaningful evening he had ever spent in the Fifth.

is not so much that it shall suffer as that it might fail; not so much that the world might crush it as that the world might pass it by; not so much that the church's mission might be opposed by others as that it might be left unfulfilled by us."

In parts III and IV of the book the theme broadens to deal with Christianity and history, and the present world crisis. Before the sixteenth century, the Church was so well integrated with secular society that it became easy to think that to be a Christian was the same as to preserve the existing state of affairs. This conservative heritage is still with us, and today prevents the Church from wholeheartedly embracing the world. Instead, it cloaks itself in a protective other-worldliness and concerns itself more with man's immortal soul than with his existential needs.

Dr. Dewart asserts that the Catholic concept of the Just War is impossible in the thermonuclear age when a major war is bound to be a total war. The traditional right to self-defence has never, in the Judaeo-Christian tradition, included the absolute right to exist. A nuclear war is intrinsically aggressive and total and denies the concept of the unity of mankind. Dr. Dewart is thus opposed to nuclear weapons for the United States. In a footnote he confesses himself "quite unable to follow the reasoning of those who object to nuclear weapons in Cuba but not in the U.S." Under present conditions he believes that we would be better to suffer injustice than let injustice take possession of us, for "it might be worse to win a nuclear war than to lose one."

I can only wonder why the principles on which Dr. Dewart bases his nuclear pacifism do not also lead him to accept pacifism at the individual level, particularly in view of his assertion that whatever we predicate of individual freedom should be essentially predictable of both society and history. If it is better for society to suffer injustice rather than inflict it, why is it not better for the individual also to suffer injustice? If the destruction of a society is an essential denial of the unity of mankind, why is not the destruction of a single individual also a denial of that unity?

Apart from this one objection (which most people would not accept anyway), Christianity and Revolution is in my opinion an excellent book. Both for its detailed and cogent analysis of the Cuban Revolution and for its wise and compassionate suggestions for a new Catholic theology for the nuclear age, it is important reading for the student of international affairs and the concerned Christian. Let us hope that there are a few who fall under both categories.

A splendid addition

by PAUL RUSSELL
Two Figures X

The Art Committee has recently made a splendid addition to the Hart House permanent collection of Canadian art. The paintink I refer to is "TWO FIGURES N. 10" by Graham Coughtry.

Mr. Coughtry, born in St. Lambert, Quebec in 1931, studied at the Montreal Museum of Fine Art and at the Ontario College of Art. He won scholarships for travel to Europe in 1951 and 1953. During the last decade he has gained considerable prestige due to solid representation in such major exhibitions as the Guggenheim International (1958), the Carnegie International (1958-59), the Biennial do Musu de Arte Moderna de Sao Paulo (1959), and the Venice Biennale (1960).

During the fifties he was known for his subtly colored abstracts. His particular talent as a colorist and his extraordinary feeling for paint were pronounced qualities in these earlier works.

But Mr. Coughtry returned to the figure. His abstractions had always tended to evoke a figurative image as opposed to the action painting of someone like Riopelle. Furthermore, in figure painting, his great skill as a draughtsman and the rich sensuality of his brushstroke stand him in good stead.

In 1962, the artist began work on the TWO FIGURE SERIES — a visually expressive exploration of the love act. Such a theme could easily tend towards the erotic and the banal. No painting in the series crosses this border.

Mr. Andrew Hudson gave a very graphic description of Coughtry's style at this point in the December 1963 edition of Canadian Art:

"Coughtry's present concern is to make his semiabstract, rather clumsy, boneless figures as ultra-expressive as possible and yet still credible as figures. To do this he has limited their color and form to a range of bright flesh tones heaped up in cakes of paint that struggle within a restless complex of curves and diagonals. To further accentuate his figures he subdues or ablates his background colors with a uniform trickle of muddy paint."

"Two Figures N. 10" by Graham Coughtry.

"TWO FIGURES N. 10" is a large canvas (60 by 72). With its beautiful and dynamic shapes and colors it is a fascinating painting. The two figures are separated — the only painting in the series where this is the case. The male figure hovers diagonally above a stretched out languorous female form. The vivid, contrasting colours are juxtaposed dramatically — a cold blue outlining a smouldering orange. The whole effect is a shimmering image of melting colours — very beautiful and frankly sensual. The figures are faceless, the head of the female form is outside the frame. Thus the impact is general and universal. The theme is MAN AND WOMAN — just that basic.

This purchase cannot be considered as a bold and daring venture into the forefront of contemporary art. Paintings from the series appeared in the Dunn International Exhibition and the Guggenheim International. Two have been purchased by the Art Gallery of Toronto and the National Gallery in Ottawa. Thus TWO FIGURES N. 10 comes to Hart House with good credentials. The Art Committee can be credited with making a careful and judicious survey of the present art scene in Canada and making a responsible purchase.

The painting is on view in the Reading Room at Hart House this week.

Sleepy John returns from the grave

by PHIL MAUDE

Sleepy John Estes returned from the grave this week. Pronounced dead by the jazz world in 1953, he was discovered very much alive two years ago. But whether it was a man or a ghost is really unimportant. The music was.

Widespread venereal disease half a century ago caused many Negro children to be born maimed. Many of these had to rely on natural musical ability to keep alive. Some developed into great musicians. The list is long and colorful; Blind Blake, Crippled Clarence Lofton, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Sonny Terry, Blind Willy Johnson, and Sleepy John Estes are only a few. But the contribution is large.

Sleepy John is blind. When led to the stand he resembles one of the sightless beggars out of Dr. No. He sits lifeless sly on a chair, hidden behind dark glasses, like a wind-up toy, waiting. But when his guitar is handed to him it becomes apparent that his lifelessness is complete relaxation.

Sleepy John is a living link with the past. His songs have meaning now because they were written about changeless things, love, whisky, infidelity, poverty, jail, expectations... the blues. His hands are still firm and quick, his voice mellow and soft.

A typical blues was the "I may look like a crazy/ poor dog don't know right from wrong/ my mamma don't love me/ fool round all night long." Most of the songs convey the Negro attitude of humorous self-criticism: "grandfather walks around with his hand on his hip/ he can't do nothin' but kick up a little shit."

Sleepy John's music emits a rich odor of the black South. Train whistles, swamp gas, back alleys and jail cells. Each song tells its own simple story, "take you down to that county jail/ boy that grass looks better on the inside."

A curious mixture of happy and sad, Sleepy John's blues represent a philosophical acceptance of life, unlike the harsher, threatening Negro blues of today.

Mao Tse-Tung, Bartok and the TSO

By PAUL ENNIS

"The peasantry is the chief concern of China's cultural movement at the present stage. Would not universal education, art and literature for the people, public health service and the elimination of illiteracy become largely idle talk if the 360 million peasants were left out of account?"—Mao Tse-Tung, 1945.

He descended Brock's Monument rapidly, dodging some hatted women along the way. He reached the acoustical base where the first balcony staircase converges on the main entrance. It was the foyer of Massey Hall so he walked out onto Shuter Street. A poet and two girls were talking. It was mild. There were no cars.

"Shoot Low Sheriff, They're Riding Shetland Ponies." spake the poet.

"I wonder if the Haydn was as good as the last five minutes of the Strauss," said the first girl.

"Undoubtedly. At least very likely. But then again, I haven't read the reviews," said the other.

"That's the trouble with going on a Tuesday. You don't know what to expect. (To poet, putting on his glasses) Do you?"

"You're only referring to the actual performance. It's the music that matters most to me. The music evokes images in my mind. Like the Elegy in the Bartok Concerto For Orchestra. I feel death everywhere. Except for one man. There's a confrontation with death which isn't resolved even by the end of the last movement."

(interrupting) "But they haven't done the Bartok yet."

"Bartok's alternate use of the grotesque and the beautiful in the Intermezzo is pure genius. How else could the appalling finality of the death-song be bridged to the hope and desire of the finale?"

(raising her voice) "Pardon me, but can you just perceive these things even though the intermission is still going on? (pauses) You don't know Greek do you?"

(Poet to other fellow) "Are they out of it?"

(to herself) "That priest was all wet. (to other girl) I guess we should be going."

(other fellow) "You mean you're not staying for the Concerto For Orchestra. One of the greatest works of all time. It's not even atonal."

"The general mood of the work represents, apart from the jesting second movement, a gradual transition from the sternness of the first movement and the lugubrious death-song of the third, to the life-assertion of the last one."

— Bela Bartok, 1944

Bartok Highlights Concert

The TSO concert this week ranged from the heaviness of the first half of Haydn's London Symphony, through a musically uninteresting performance of the Strauss Oboe Concerto, to a brilliant Bartok Concerto For Orchestra.

The Haydn suffered from lifeless string playing. The last three chords of the opening movement weren't bold enough; the second movement lacked exuberance; the Menuetto lacked grace. The superlative woodwind playing of the Trio was the only really outstanding feature of the whole performance.

Jiri Tancibudek, the guest soloist in the Strauss, has an extraordinary technique. He also plays in tune. Yet his playing lacked so much variety in tonal contrast that the concerto, for all its notes, was generally dull. Only the one-bar-long sixteenth-note phrases were consistently well-shaped. Dynamic contrasts explicitly called for were ignored, even in the slower passages. To play the notes, difficult as they are, demands great skill. To play Strauss' music apparently demanded more than Mr. Tancibudek had last Tuesday.

Slowly but inevitably, Toronto audiences are getting caught up in the music of the Twentieth Century. Only two weeks ago there was the Lenox Quartet's magnificent performance of Elliot Carter's Second String Quartet. This week there was the TSO's equally magnificent Bartok. The tragedy of Twentieth Century music, let alone contemporary music, however, is the unwillingness of the public to taste it before spitting it out. Already the Concerto For Orchestra belongs to another generation, yet many of those people who braved the unfamiliar oboe, left at intermission, without hearing the Bartok ("Who's he?").

The Bartok is such a difficult and fantastically wonderful piece that to have it come off as it did is evidence of a superlative performance. Although the string sound was really full, the brass overshadowed any other section. Aside from the strings' lack of passion in the Intermezzo and the tailing off of the fugue in the last movement, the performance was superb.

Great performance of Haydn HH

By PAUL ENNIS

It is ironic that the Hart House Orchestra, Toronto's oldest chamber music organization and its most consistently musical group, should have to appeal to its audience to ensure a concert series for next year. On last week's performance the audience should have been overflowing the Great Hall instead of filling only half the seats. The performance, the final concert of the present season, was typical of the orchestra's high quality.

What better way is there to show the genius of Haydn than by a direct comparison with two of his contemporaries. The two Haydn symphonies were far more original and complex than either the Toeschi or the Schwindl works.

The Symphony in D is one of sixty-three such compositions Toeschi wrote while concertmaster of the Mannheim Orchestra. It is an exceedingly simple piece. From the rising and falling passages of the opening movement to the banal slow movement to the crescendos of the first ale, Toeschi's piece did nothing but point up the greatness of Haydn.

The Symphony in F by the Dutch composer Schwindl was better shaped and more emotional. The opening movement was almost moody and the third was always building, always leading somewhere.

Of the two Haydn Symphonies, Number 49 in F minor (La Passione) and Number 57 in D, the latter was Haydn at his best. Here were contrast, drive, shape, surprise, and the typical combination of raucous play and mysterious quiet so characteristic of Haydn. By juxtaposing Haydn with these contemporaries it is apparent how much more he put into his works and how they completely overshadow these others.

The Orchestra, under Boyd Neel, was great. They played with precision and life, and a real awareness of the importance of both the obvious and the subtle contrasts. (It was these qualities which were missing in the TSO's obtuse performance of Haydn two days later). The three pizzicato chords of the third movement of No. 57, the very full chords of the fourth movement, and the rhythmic accented finale were excellent. The added winds were fine throughout particularly the oboe duets in La Passione and the Schwindl.

There is no doubt that the Hart House Orchestra is one of the finest chamber groups on the continent. Sunday their playing was particularly suited to the variety of Haydn's music. They deserved much more than a half-empty hall.

RECITAL

A violin sonata by a University of Toronto student will be performed next Wednesday in Hart House.

Sigmund Steinberg, accompanied by his wife Gwladys, will play the work by Charles Camilleri (III Mus) at 5 p.m. in the music room.

The program will also include a difficult Bach chaconne and a selection of other pieces ranging from baroque to romantic.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ Crest plays Shaw: Shaw trounced 10-1

Frances Hyland (Cleopatra) and Maureen Fitzgerald (Ftataetea) in CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA opening Feb. 8 at the Crest Theatre.

By CALINESCU

As I was watching the Crest production of what was supposed to have been Shaw's CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA, two famous reviews of other things came to mind. Adapted to this play, they go as follows: "Cleopatra came barging down the Nile at the Crest last night - and sank", and "Last night the Crest Company played Shaw - Shaw lost!"

I sat there in stunned disbelief, not knowing whether I was at a performance of a Gilbert and Sullivan opus being performed without songs, or the Toronto version of A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON THE WAY TO THE FOR-UM. It certainly was NOT Shaw. Director Curt Reis has achieved the almost impossible task of removing every bit of wit and subtle humour from Shaw's poignant satire on politics and turns a brilliant play into a broad, meaningless farce.

This is of course a danger that faces anyone attempting the production of a Shaw play, but I did not think that Mr. Reis, who scored solidly earlier this year with his direction of OF MICE AND MEN, would succumb to it so easily and so completely. And the fault does lie with the director, for all his actors have proven themselves previously to be excellent performers when given proper direction.

Chris Wiggins, as the mighty Caesar, is remembered for his fine portrayals in three earlier Crest Productions. Mr. Wiggins appears to be fighting constantly against the interpretation he is supposed to give and he tries to play his part according to Shaw. But alas - he has a lot to fight against and so we can see only occasional flashes of his real ability.

The serpent of the Nile, as portrayed by Frances Hyland, is hardly a serpent at all. A garter snake maybe - but no serpent. It is in this part where the directors blunder is most obvious. The transition from the pampered school-girl to the Queen of all Egypt, shows Shaw's complete understanding of human nature and its frailties and is apparent in Miss Hyland's performance, and I can only say - I'm sorry.

When the director created Maureen Fitzgerald's part of Ftataetea, he must have suffered of an overdose of Rodgers and Hammerstein, for Miss Fitzgerald gives an excellent portrayal of Bloody Mary, right out of SOUTH PACIFIC.

Whenever Pothinus, in the person of Michael Snow, appeared on stage, I expected him to burst into the song "I am the Lord High Executioner" from G & S's MIKADO. He didn't - so I'm afraid he too was out of character.

Did you ever wonder what ever happened to Baby Jane? Well, she came to the Crest to play King Ptolemy in this production, Barry Lavender gives this part such an abundance of overacting, that we are concerned with the influence it might have on his real life. After all, people could get a trauma from acting like that.

You might be pleased to know, that the emphasis on physical fitness has found its way into the Crest. Apollodoros the Sicilian, as portrayed by Ken James, looks, feels and talks like a Vic Tanny Grad, class of 64. Also I believe it is the first time this part was played with an Italian accent (Whatsa matter, ya no speak de language?).

Bill Brydon's Rufio is about the only part that creates the impression that this play was once good drama. He tries hard to overcome the inadequacies of the production and succeeds most of the time.

The unexciting and sometimes ridiculous costumes, such as Ftataetea's Hawaiian grass skirt and Pothinus' gown that made him look like a pregnant beetle, and the set that consisted of some stairs that kept whirling around on the revolving stage, supplemented by one white sail (don't ask me what it was for, I haven't the faintest idea), added to the traumatic effect of this misbegotten production. Our apologies to Mr. Shaw and a speedy recovery to the temporarily incapacitated cast.

The election for the presidency ONLY of each club will be held and voting will be preferential. Nominations for the office of president for each club must be signed by two voting members of the club in question and filed with the Secretary of the Athletic Association, Benson Building, by Friday March 6, 4:00 pm.

Voting members for each club are restricted to those who have been registered as playing members of an intramural or intercollegiate sport during the past academic year, or who are certified by a team manager to have attended at least 50 per cent of the practices of that team; members of the club executive and managers of all teams playing under the club.

The sound of surprise

By DAVID JACKEL

The most impressive thing currently on display at the Friars is the price of beer. Anyone experiencing a financial depression at the moment is advised to stay home and listen to records. But if you can get over the shock caused by finding out that two beers now cost more than a case of twelve, then by all means make the pilgrimage. Stan Getz and his quartet are almost worth these exorbitant entertainment surcharges. Judging from the lineup at the door of the Friars, some jazz fans will pay anything demanded of them for the privilege of hearing Getz.

The tenor saxophonist is playing very well, with the new warmth characteristic of his work since his return to North America from Sweden in 1962. The fact that Getz is one of the best and most distinctive jazz soloists around today was largely obscured by the bossa nova craze, which the tenor man helped to start. But the present setting provided for Getz at the Friars gives the saxophonist a chance to convince any unbelievers of his ability. Everything from stamps with his own definitive new ballads to bop tunes Getz sound, and only occasionally do his solos sink to the level of meaningless running through the changes.

But the most pleasant surprise is the group with Getz, a group of young musicians who provide the saxophonist with better backing than he has received for some time.

Vibraphonist Gary Burton is the alternate solo voice in the quartet, and he is in the process of developing an interesting style of his own, although he is influenced to some extent by the ideas of pianist Bill Evans. Burton's solos on medium or uptempo numbers usually consist of single-note right hand lines, supported by two-note chords played with the left hand. On ballads Burton uses four mallets, and can produce solos of great lyrical beauty. His four-mallet comping behind Getz during the ensembles gives the group a sound which is a pleasant change from the usual tenor-piano combinations.

Chuck Israels, bassist in the quartet, is another of that large group of young and talented bass players who are bringing about a revolution on this instrument. Some of the things he plays behind Getz and Burton are almost better than the solos. Israels himself is an excellent soloist, and on ballads he combines with Burton in duets which are fascinating excursions into the realm of simultaneous improvisation.

Drummer Joe Hunt's solos are worth hearing, and the rest of the time he provides generally unobtrusive backing for the group. There are moments when his style does not quite seem to mesh with that of Getz, but these moments are fortunately very few.

As an added attraction the Friars is presenting Brazilian singer Joao Gilberto, which should satisfy those who want still more bossa nova music. Gilberto has a softly understated manner of singing, and his two numbers at the end of each set are quietly attractive. The rest of the musicians don't seem too enthusiastic, however. Getz looks as though he could play any of these Latin numbers in his sleep.

The whole production is worth hearing. But remember those prices. Some people may have decided that the traffic won't bear any more.

Down at the Town, another distinctive jazz soloist is playing his own pleasantly uncomplicated style of music. This, of course, is trumpeter Clark Terry, who was for a number of years featured with the Duke Ellington orchestra.

Terry's sound and style are immediately recognizable in any setting, and they have never been successfully copied by any other musician. Because of this, the trumpeter has never received the acclaim which some of his more influential contemporaries such as Davis and Gillespie have obtained.

The inimitable Clark Terry trumpet sound is partly the result of his technique, which utilizes the half-depressed valve in order to produce a note slightly off-pitch from the conventional ones. It is also the result of his own personal ideas of solo construction, which have a somewhat boppish flavor but utilize older concepts as well.

At the Town, Terry plays flugelhorn as well as trumpet, and the larger horn with its mellower sound is particularly effective on ballads. Terry manages to invest old standards such as Stardust and Lullaby of the Leaves with some fresh ideas, something which is a tribute to his musicianship, and to his sense of humor as well. The latter characteristic is evident in almost all of what he plays, and he has the skill and the taste to make such musical humor successful most of the time.

The Norm Amadio trio is still the house band at the Town, and the group does a fairly competent job of backing the trumpeter. Drummer Archie Alleyne is most impressive, although he has a tendency to play too much, and pianist Amadio can play some good solos if the mood strikes him. He seems to be somewhat hampered by a piano which sounds slightly out of tune.

Blues hold tort against Warriors' late attack

By PAUL HENDERSON

Varsity cagers survived a fourth-quarter Waterloo drive to defeat Warriors, 100-95, in a fast Intercollegiate game at Hart House Wednesday night.

Blues led 81-60 with about 10 minutes remaining after dominating play to that point. They went ahead by five at the end of the first quarter and increased the margin to 55-42 at the half.

But then Blues, as has been their tendency this year, worked too hard instead of slowing down the pace and forcing Warriors to carry the attack. Consequently, their play became ragged and both teams incurred numerous fouls. Blues starting five, Dave West, Vlad Baranowicz, Bill Woloshyn, Ron Kimel and Ed Bordas, all fouled out of active duty and viewed the final minutes of the battle from the sidelines.

The fouls precipitated a sustained march of Warriors to the foul line. The most deadly combatants, Jerry Raphael and Bob Pando, were instrumental in diminishing Blues' advantage to four points. Waterloo made 33 of 47 foul opportunities resulting from Blues' 35 personal fouls.

Warriors also caught the eyes of arbitrators Lorry Moffatt and Harry Bocknek, and John O'Neill scored Blues' final four points on free throws to assure the victory. Two of Waterloo's 22 fouls were technical arising from vehement protestations by Raphael and Jim Hann. Hann was ejected from the contest for propelling his gum at the referee.

Both teams were dissatisfied with the refereeing, which was basically unsatisfactory. The style of play made it increasingly difficult, however, to call infractions accurately.

Toronto field-general West led Blues' attack with 32 points, 10 from the foul line. He scored a large percentage of his field-goals on drives, several of which came after he stole the ball through his close checking. West raised his average to 25 points per game and maintained his league scoring lead over Raphael.

Raphael netted 34 to top all performers. His strong play all-round brought his average to 23.4 and enabled him to keep pace with West. Pando worked well for Warriors, especially in the latter stages. He hooped 16 of his 24 points in the second half.

Blues' Ed Bordas contributed 22 points and some good defensive rebounding to the Toronto cause. His checking limited Raphael to 10 points in the first half before the latter broke loose when Bordas was not in the game. Raphael netted 7 in the final 3 1/2 minutes after Bordas fouled out.

O'Neill, who returned to his early-season form, matched the 12 points hooped by Warriors Hann and Bill Steinburg.

The Waterloo loss assures Windsor University Lancers of at least a tie for first place. Second-place Warriors now possess a 7-3 record, Blues are 5-5.

Blues: — West (32), Bordas (22), O'Neill (12), Baranowicz (9), Woloshyn (8), McKenzie (6), Neidre (6), Kimel (5), Sheldon, Kono.
Warriors: — Raphael (34), Pando (24), Hann (12), Steinburg (12), Aldridge (9), Balchura (2), Demko (2), Finch, Schwartzkopf.

WIN TITLE

QUEEN'S CUP

Overwhelm Marlins 7-3, Redmen tie Carabins 2-2

By GORD BELLMORE

DUNDAS, ONT. — Varsity hockey Blues are Queen's Cup champions again, regaining the title they relinquished last season to McMaster Marlins.

Blues clinched first place and the Cup when they overwhelmed Marlins, 7-3, here Wednesday in their best performance of the season. The victory, combined with a 2-2 tie between Montreal Carabins and McGill Redmen in Montreal, eliminated Carabins from contention and gave Blues their seventh title in 10 years. Blues are three points ahead of second-place Montreal with one game left to play for each.

Spurred on by an unexpected but very vocal contingent from Toronto, Blues broke a tight 2-2 deadlock midway through the second period and went on to crush Marlins.

Blues left no doubt they are the best team in the inter-collegiate league and full value for their success. In league play the new champions boast an impressive record of 9 wins, 1 loss and 2 ties and play Laval Rouge et Or in their final game at Varsity Arena tonight.

For the fourth game in a row, Varsity's superlative forward line of Sonny Osborne and Hank Monteith and Steve Monteith was considerably more than the opposition could handle. The trio totalled 13 points, the Monteiths each registering a pair of goals and pair of assists and Osborne one goal and four assists.

After a close, carefully played first period, in which Blues seemed slightly tense, McMaster roared out and overcame Blues' 2-1 lead when league scoring leader Bobby Apps scored after only 15 seconds of the second period.

Marlins applied pressure for the next seven minutes and only the fine work of Varsity goaltender Gary Aitken, who was steady all night, kept Blues in the game. Aitken made two exceptional stops on Jim McLellan.

If Marlins had scored at this point the final verdict may have been entirely different. But instead, Blues bounced back when Don Fuller steered in a passout to give Varsity the lead to stay, 3-2. Fuller's goal turned the tide and Marlins, disheartened by the turn of events, never threatened again.

Steve Monteith made it 4-2 before the period ended and Hank Monteith, Bob Awrey and Steve Monteith again, put the game away with third-period goals.

In the cautious first period, Osborne and Hank Monteith gave Blues their 2-1 lead. Osborne's goal, scored with Blues a man short, was the prettiest of the game. He was put in the clear by Steve Monteith and beat Mac netminder Jimmy Cannon with a low hard shot from 15 feet out.

Bill Gibson scored Marlins' first-period goal and Apps got his second of the game at 18:38 of the third period.

Credit for the big win can't go entirely to Blues' first line because the whole team turned in an outstanding effort. Varsity's second line of Bobby Apps, George Olah and Fuller checked and skated fiercely and neutralized whichever of Marlins' two high-scoring lines it faced.

This was one of the few times Blues' big line failed to score. Sonny Osborne just misses putting the puck past Marlins' Jimmy Cannon while Hank Monteith (right) moves in.

Blues' defence, best in the league all season, was steady as usual, especially in the first half of the game when Marlins played their best hockey.

Johnny Taylor gave Blues all the help they needed for the title win, scoring both McGill goals against Montreal. Taylor also hit the goal post on a third-period breakaway. Andre Boucher and Gilles Lefort scored for Carabins, who saw their Cinderella dreams go out the window.

Tonight's final game against Laval is important to Blues for two reasons—both named Monteith. Either brother can win the scoring title with a performance similar to their last few games. Hank Monteith trails leader Apps by two points and defending champ Steve is four behind.

Stray Shots: Blues were entrenched at Paddy Green's (that's a pub in Hamilton, dear) celebrating their big win when they got news of the 2-2 tie at Montreal. The news occasioned more hearty celebrations, to say the least, and a rather tumultuous bus ride home... which is again a helluva understatement... Coach Joe Kane and trainer "Fast Eddie" Armstrong are making sure they keep in the good graces of U of T Athletic Director Warren Stevens. Both men recently had additions to their families. Fast Ed named his new son Warren and... you guessed it... Kane's new boy is Steven.

Kane finds 'perfect' combinations

HANK MONTEITH

STEVE MONTEITH

Much of Varsity Blues' success over the past two seasons can be attributed to the ability of coach Joe Kane to come up with the right line combinations.

Last season, Blues big "Mop Line" of Steve Monteith, Sonny Osborne and Ward Passi was the scourge of the league and finished 1-2-3 in league scoring. After Passi broke his leg in Blues' fifth game the season Kane put Hank Monteith between brother Steve and Stu McNeil and this trio scored six goals in two games before McNeil was injured.

For the last four games Kane found another "perfect" combination, Osborne and the two Monteiths. This line has scored 13 goals in four games and Hank and Steve are in an excellent position to win the scoring title in Blues' final game of the season tonight against Laval.

Rookie Hank Monteith trails leader Bobby Apps of McMaster by two points and Steve is four points back. Osborne is now 10th in scoring with 17 points.

Extraordinary SAC meeting to hear report on position

An extraordinary meeting of the Students' Administrative Council tomorrow will hear a report on the SAC's legal position under the University of Toronto Act, prepared by former Ontario minister of energy and resources Robert Macaulay.

Mr. Macaulay agreed to prepare the report at the request of council President Doug Ward (III Emm), who was empowered by the council at its meeting last Wednesday to seek legal counsel.

Ward will also present to the special meeting a partial text on his report to the board of governors, and on the basis of the two reports council will instruct Ward what action to take.

Ward's submission was originally intended as his personal viewpoint of the report of a special committee of the board on a new bylaw concerning the relation of the SAC to the board.

Because of the action taken by council last week, it now will become his official position as council president.

Only part of Ward's report will be revealed at the Tuesday meeting because he agreed to keep the governor's report confidential when it was first given to him for comment.

The meeting will be held at 5:15 p.m. in the Map Room, Hart House, and is open to all students.

Students must request counselling

By DONNA MASON

Student responsibility in the field of student mental health was the dominant theme at the Students' Administrative Council staff-student symposium on mental health Saturday at Trinity.

About 50 staff members and 30 student representatives attended the day-long conference.

Keynote speaker Dr. Graham Blaine of the Harvard University psychiatric service, stressed the necessity for united student action.

"If students feel a counselling service is necessary, they must ask for it," he said. "They must let the administration know how they feel. The initiative must come from the students themselves."

Dr. Blaine outlined the common areas and sources of student stress, especially in five areas: independence, personal identity, study problems, commitment, and sex.

He said that the undergraduate is usually a late adolescent still troubled with many of the difficulties common to adolescence.

"The college student," he said, "is at a vulnerable, but treatable stage. He is flexible and plastic, subject to serious stresses, but capable of undergoing almost miraculous psychic cures."

He said he felt students everywhere suffer much the same stresses. "At Harvard the students seem to have more academic difficulties," he said, "but the results of your questionnaire are about what might have been expected."

A panel discussion later in the afternoon brought out several of the difficulties of creating at U of T a counselling service along the lines of that at Harvard—a bureau of study counselling combined with an actual psychiatric-psychological service.

Panelists generally felt that scarcity of qualified counsellors would necessitate the development of a new concept of counselling. Group therapy and greater use of present personnel were among the suggestions made. All agreed that the "eight qualified psychiatrists" recommended by Dr. Blaine for U of T's student population could not be found, even if finances and facilities were available.

Blasts press on Africa

By LARRY GREENSPAN

The public press is uninformed, maligning and presumptuous when it comes to African affairs, said Stephen Lewis, MPP for Scarborough East, at a meeting of the United Nations Association in Wymilwood last night.

Mr. Lewis, who recently spent two years teaching in Africa, said the Toronto press is no exception in its characterization of African society. The Toronto Daily Star in recent articles talked about the "witch-doctor influence" in Angola, the "Cuban-dominated coup" in Zanzibar and the "Moscow spy tactics of Nyerere's right-hand man."

"One wonders about the sobriety of journalists" such as Blair Fraser of Maclean's and Robert Miller of the Globe and Mail, who in recent articles were guilty of the "most unpleasant journalistic" and "vulgarity of mind which are intemperate and premature," Mr. Lewis said.

At the root of Western misconceptions are "a profound psychological fear" for Africa as the "darkest continent" and our "imposition of 20th-century value judgments which are totally meaningless."

Mr. Lewis explained the tendency to authoritarian regimes as a "natural transfer in hierarchy from the tribal to political structure."

"The idea of the two-party state is foreign to them. The official opposition is considered subversive and an anomaly."

In addition, the newly independent African states were left with a colonial legacy which was, in effect, an authoritarian regime. "There was no democracy in Africa at the point of independence, there was no education, and there was no trained civil service. The public did not

A VR drops $1,000: future uncertain

Despite excellent notices from the Toronto press, the 1964 All Varsity Revue closed Saturday $1,000 in the red.

Friday and Saturday nights' near-capacity audiences of around 400 failed to compensate for the poor showings on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday when attendance averaged a paltry 50.

Explaining the marked increase in weekend attendance, AVR Director Earl Rosen (III UC) told The Varsity last night: "Towards the end of the year people cut down on their mid-week social activities."

The $1,000 loss compares with the $2,700 the Revue lost last year. But the 1963 budget of $5,200 was more than twice the budget the SAC allowed the revue this year.

Asked what chance the AVR had of being staged in future, Rosen said it depends on whether the AVR committee decides to put it on or not.

WE GOOFED AGAIN

The Varsity apologizes for its confusion in Friday's issue when it incorrectly identified the head of the University of Toronto health service.

A feature article on student mental problems named "Dr. A. S. P. Wodehouse" as the head of the service.

That name was an unhappy combination of Dr. A. S. P. Woodhouse, retiring head of the University College English department, and Dr. G. E. Wodehouse, actual head of the health service.

Jefferson elected Skule president

The Engineering Society Friday elected new officials for next year.

The new president, elected by acclamation, is David Jefferson (III APSC). Also elected by acclamation were First Vice-President Peter Stern and Second Vice-President Jeff Davis.

Dennis Tiberius was elected treasurer, and Jim Smith, secretary. Also: director of publicity and publications, Norm Fisher; director of professional relations, Bob Morris; fourth-year SAC rep, Bernie Little; and third-year SAC rep, Doug Burnett.

These positions become effective in two weeks' time.

U of T cops college bridge title

MONTREAL (Staff) — Bridge teams from Toronto finished first and second Saturday in the Canadian Intercollegiate Championship here to wrest the trophy from McGill University, which has held it for the last seven years.

Toronto has never won the trophy since it was put in play in 1949, but McGill has won it a total of eight times.

The team of Tom Greer (III Vic), John Laskin (III UC), Ivan Struminger (I UC), and Rich Ingram (III Trin) displayed consistent good form as it won 34 of the 48 hands they played in the two sessions.

The team of Mike Wise (II New), Marty Ellis (III New),

Mike Schoenborn (II UC), and Dave Bryce (Special) finished two points behind. A strong afternoon session could not make up completely for a fair showing in the morning.

McGill took both third and fourth places, but several points behind the second Toronto team.

Davies calls Fanny jolly

Professor Robertson Davies testified last week in defence of Fanny Hill, the prostitute of the 1740s.

The book, alleged to be obscene, is the subject of a hearing under the Criminal Code at City Hall.

Prof. Davies, master of Massey College, said under oath that the novel is a "jolly sort of book" reflecting the 18th century when it was written. The emphasis on sex in the novel is not for a base purpose, he said.

"If you are going to write about a girl like Fanny Hill, you are going to have to write about sex," said Prof. Davies.

Judge William Sheppard had authorized seizure of the book. Two thousand copies were taken from Coles' book stores on Yonge St.

The company must show why the seized copies should not be forfeited.

U of T chorus to appear at Lincoln Centre

The University of Toronto Chorus will represent Canada at the first annual International University Choral Festival in New York in September.

Choruses from 12 countries and eight from the United States will attend the festival at the Lincoln Centre for the Performing Arts for one week in September.

The final concert of the season at U of T will be held Wednesday. It will consist entirely of sacred music from the 16th, 18th, and 20th century.

Next year the University Chorus hopes to perform works especially written for the group.

The film concerns the examination of the demands of war upon two lovers and their families.

Lewis (contd.)

Since the African slave trade there has been a deep African inferiority complex — evident in the fact that there is no African history. African government truculence and belligerence is not pro-communism, it is pro-Africanism, Lewis said.

Canada is in a unique position to help, because it does not have a colonial heritage.

"But Canada has never really embraced the idea of economic aid and technical assistance. Of these countries participating in the Organization for Economic Aid and Development, only Denmark has contributed less in proportion to its national wealth than Canada," Lewis said.

In the 10 years of the Colombo Plan (1950-60) the total which Canada contributed amounted to only one per cent of our Gross National Product for one of those years.

"This essential intransigence is characteristic of all Western countries."

Mr. Lewis called Canadian attitudes toward the Union of South Africa and Angola "most unutterable folly." For years Canada abstained from voting on motions of censure in the United Nations. In 1960, when the UN finally did pass a resolution censuring the Union of South Africa, only two white, Christian nations voted for it—Cyprus and Mexico.

"With this effort to international morality we are contributing to the alienation of the Western world in the eyes of Africa," Mr. Lewis said. "We cannot expect the African nations to associate with the Western world in the future."

Protest Ga. prisons

MONTREAL (Staff) — Wind screamed, teeth chattered and fingers froze to placards carried by demonstrators in front of the United States Consulate his weekend.

Far away, in warm Albany, Ga., people were suffering too. That's what was bothering the Montreal students. That's why they leaned against the shrill blasts that lashed McGregor Street on Montreal mountain.

Mary Suzuki, 26, of Montreal, vowed to continue her fast in the Albany jail where she has been since her arrest during a Quebec-to-Cuba protest march.

She has lost more than 18 pounds.

With her in cells are Peter Light, 20, of Montreal and Michael Newman, 19, of Vancouver.

All together, 24 demonstrators, mostly students, are being held on "contempt of court" charges. Police Chief Phil Hamilton says they'll be held until they agree to walk to the courthouse for trial. They won't budge though.

Neither will Montreal's students who parade before a burly, comfortably-dressed policeman.

Sometimes they carry their placards demanding Georgia be forced to dispense justice as it is known in the free world outside the United States.

Sometimes they just stare accusingly in the consulate's windows.

The consulate staff close expensive drapes and their electric typewriters hum on.

LONDON (Special) — Members of Britain's Committee of 100 demonstrated outside the United States Embassy here Saturday in protest against detention of one of their members in Albany, Ga.

The committee says John Papworth, a Briton, is in jail with 23 other persons, including three Canadians.

The committee's delegation charged Papworth had been assaulted twice. An embassy official said he would pass the charges on to Washington.

ALBANY, Ga. (Special) — An Albany police spokesman denied late Saturday that John Papworth, British member of the Committee of 100, had been assaulted during his detention here which interrupted a Quebec-to-Cuba march.

The spokesman said Papworth was arrested for "failing to obey an officer, idling and loitering" and was taken into custody after twice ignoring requests to leave the police station where some of his companions were being held.

Offer playwriting prizes

The National Playwriting Seminar is again offering awards for the best full-length play and the best one-act play written by a resident in Canada.

The purpose of the awards is to stimulate Canadian playwriting for the 1967 Dominion Drama Festival, scheduled to present plays written by Canadians in celebration of Canada's centennial.

The award for the best full-length play is $200 and for the best one-act play $100.

A full-length play is considered to be about two hours long in playing time. A one-act play is considered to be under an hour

A scholarship in the form of free tuition to the 1964 Playwriting Seminar at London, Ont., will be awarded to the winner in each category.

The adjudicator is New York playwright, critic and essayist Stanley Richards, who has been instructor of the playwriting seminar since its beginning.

Deadline for mailing scripts is March 1, 1964.

For further information on the conditions of the contest or on the seminar itself, contact Professor George E. Buckley, 42 Belgrave Ave., London, Ont.

Little use of film library

Officials at the Metropolitan Film Library are disturbed that university groups are not using their facilities.

The library has become the unofficial film library of the university, and a wide range of documentaries 10-30 minutes long pertaining to university courses is available.

Any club, organization, or class on campus may obtain any film for a small fee.

An interested group should purchase the complete catalogue of the films for $1.25. A film is selected, "ordered" (927-3901), and picked up at the library at St. George and College Streets.

a french house

There has been a considerable amount of talk among students and faculty members concerning the possibility of establishing a French house at the University of Toronto.

This house would serve as a residence and meeting place for students studying French; and would serve as a focal point for the multitude of activities conducted by such students.

Considering the work of the Students' Administrative Council's Canadian/Canadian Committee, such a house would be of great value. It could serve as a gathering place for all students interested in French Canada; it could house the committee's growing library of French publications; it would provide a site for student-teacher meetings that now are limited to crowded coffee-shops or private homes; and it would be an enclave where people could speak French.

The problem now appears to be one of finances. The university cannot scrape up enough money to establish basic residence needs, so it is doubtful that it could branch out into such a specialized field.

But there are two campus organizations with the resources and administrative backing to support such a venture—the SAC and the Campus Co-operative Incorporated.

The Campus Co-op already has about 30 houses. Surely there would be few problems in making one or more of these French houses. By using the administrative resources of the Co-op, such a venture would not run the risk of floundering because of a lack of administrative knowledge.

The SAC, while lacking houses, has financial strength. It has almost $30,000, which now is invested in low-interest, long-term bonds. This money could just as well be invested in a real estate venture such as a French house. The SAC would not have to worry about losing money, for as the Campus Co-op has demonstrated, the housing business can be a money-making business.

But no matter which of the two organizations initiates the plan, its need is obvious. Both groups are asking the university for increased responsibilities; this would be one way they could demonstrate their ability to accept such responsibility.

...five, sex, seven...

Intelligent persons will surely agree that the young St. Michael's College chap who complained about the popularity of stripper Libby Jones' lecture is just a trifle prudish, not to say bigoted. about sex.

That 600 students should listen to the unique experiences of this woman, who has a university degree in English literature, is for the complaining student "a damn disgrace for The Varsity and this university."

That there should be any pleasure attached to sex is absurd for this fellow. Society advances. People, or at least the majority of people, have recently tended to become more tolerant.

Miss Jones gave an entertaining and intelligent talk. Prof. Tillich drew 1,500 and Miss Jones drew 600. That seems fair, let's not overestimate her worth.

She brings pleasure to many. She does no harm. Chacun a son gout — if the miffed student can see nothing but evil in Miss Jones on or off the burlesque stage, let him frolic to the garden and eat worms.

Leave it to Prof. Tillich to criticize contemporary attitudes.

Letters to the Editor

Should print Jargon

The question of publishing Jargon has been raised again at the SAC. It seems to me that the issue is not in very clear perspective.

The chances of getting out a good Jargon are very slim, unless the four college magazines amalgamate for one issue a year. And there is probably no good reason for them to do so. In theory, there should be nothing to hinder a university body of more than twenty thousand from publishing a good literary magazine. In practice, there is one very real hindrance: so little good writing comes in that the results are wretched.

The issue for the SAC, then, is whether or not they should subsidize a (relatively cheap) attempt to produce a worthwhile Jargon, when the odds are strongly against success. My own feeling is that a large-minded council would do so, provided that funds were not urgently needed elsewhere.

Dennis Lee

Revive Jargon

I urge all students at this university to join me in one minute of organized merriment. Why? Last year's SAC has solemnly cancelled Jargon, our literary showcase.

Perhaps Jargon was cancelled because one issue was not felt (by SAC) to be entirely satisfactory (to SAC). One issue. How many recent football teams have been satisfactory? But the team plays on.

We really must conclude that the essence of this campus is better expressed by football than by poetry. But perhaps this year's SAC wants a less physical image. If so, they can prove it by reviving Jargon in 1964-65.

Alan Hughes. S.G.S.

Bloomington student grateful

Grateful indeed are my feelings at the very warm response I received on your campus this week. As students across America fight to resist major encroachments on academic freedom, they will surely be inspired by the way their fellow Canadian students have reacted to the importance of protecting civil liberties in all of North America. Enemies of freedom have not stopped at the border before, and are not likely to again; all the more reason for Canadian and American students to close ranks together as mutual defenders of academic freedom.

With this in mind, it is not gratitude I feel for Canadian charity, but respect for Canadian common sense in recognizing a common enemy of academic freedom in the Indiana witch hunt.

If Ralph, Jim, and I do not win our acquittal this March, it will certainly not be due to any lack of enthusiastic support from Toronto.

He who laughs
Has not yet heard
The terrible tidings.

Brecht.

When Bertolt Brecht wrote these words, about 20 years ago, he may have been making an accurate assessment of his age.

Today a more likely statement would be: He who laughs has heard the terrible tidings, but laughs anyway. Today's man, who knows that many things are wrong, has a marked tendency to accept them in resignation.

This is the day when a politician, John Wintermeyer, can be defeated for exposing corruption in the government.

It is the age when a newspaper like the Toronto Globe and Mail is accused of scandal-mongering when it exposes the state of organized crime, which ultimately led to the Ontario crime probe. Today, muckraking is a dirty word; 30 years ago the muckraker threw corrupt politicians out of office.

Today, on the rare occasions when corrupt politicians are forced out of office, they occasionally get back in again, as was the case with Edmonton mayor, William Hawrelak.

In 1959 Hawrelak resigned when the city found itself short of about $100,000. Last fall he was re-elected by an 8,000 vote majority. I can remember Edmontonians saying in 1959 that they would sooner have a corrupt, but competent, administrator like Hawrelak than an honest, but less competent, replacement.

The proven and charged corruption of the Bennett government in British Columbia did nothing to harm the Sacred candidates in the last BC provin-

Conservatory installs

By BOB AARON

Installation of a new, three-manual Casavant organ is currently under way at the Royal Conservatory of Music on Bloor Street. The job is scheduled for completion at the end of February, after an additional four weeks will be required to install the pipes.

The $40,000 Casavant organ was designed and pre-assembled especially for the Conservatory last year in St. Hyacinthe, Quebec. Following dismantling, it was shipped to Toronto four weeks ago in one 11-ton package.

The organ has three manuals, 33 stops, and individual pipes. The pipes are made of zinc metal (a tin-lead alloy), copper, and even mail. They range in size from 22 feet long to 6 inches in diameter, varying from 10 inches to one inch, respectively. The speaking length of the longest pipe, which resembles a drinking straw, is eight-eighths of an inch.

The three manual divisions of the organ are great, swell and positive, and for the feet the pedal organ comprising ten ranks of pipes. The stops on the organ represent voices which have been contained in the instruments of the German, Dutch and English schools of organ building since the 15th century.

Three pipe organs were installed in the conservatory building at the corner of University College. When the Ontario Hydro took over cial election; instead it was returned with a majority.

But perhaps the epitome of our situation was clear in the last two issues of Maclean's. In January Maclean's ran an article which doctored public indifference to politicians of questionable ethics. The public reaction to the article appeared to be one of indifference, and Maclean's eventually to print an apology to Ontario's Lands and Minister Kelso Roberts, a man whose ethics had been subject to question on more than one occasion.

The immediate public reaction to the Kelso assassination was one of horror and shock; but the communications media had milked the story all it was worth, the public interest appeared all but died. Stories on the trial of Jack Ruby are buried in the back pages of our newspapers; the front pages carry new stories of violence and corruption, that also are forgotten in a few days.

On the international political scene, President Charles de Gaulle is accepted as a sort of savior. An article in the last issue of Maclean's by a former man journalist, warning that Germans are arrogant, undemocratic—and dangerous, provoked a public reaction.

And now in Canada Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, a politician who was once noted for his work for world peace, is involving Canada in a clear race and renegeing on campaign promises. It appears that Mr. Pearson has been forced into a position of doing everything he deplored a few years ago and yet there is no public outcry over this.

On a more intangible level, many of our institutions are crumbling around us. Our religions and the churches are becoming more and more remote, offering less to the people and most persons are unable to rely only mises last year, the Conservatory considered selling the instruments or moving them to the new building. However, in view of the prohibitive cost, the organs were left intact, and new ones were bought. The organs were purchased by the Hydro employees for a token sum, and are now used for their lunch-hour amusement.

During assembly of the pipes in recent weeks, the seven-man crew was occasionally interrupted by the presence of a bat in the upper regions of the organ loft. Attempts were made to get rid of it by "finding its frequency" on one of the pipes, but to no avail. The winged creature could still be there, and will probably become a legend.

Unlike the concert hall organs of the 19th century which were used for orchestral transcriptions, the new Conservatory organ is designed to interpret organ music as such. The live and intimate acoustics of the small recital hall, which was once the chapel of McMaster College, coupled with the quick clear speech of the new organ, will combine to ensure organ music at its best.

The new pipe organ is to be used for student instruction and practise, and for Conservatory recitals. A dozen top flight teachers are on the organ faculty at the Conservatory, including such well-known names as Dr. Charles Peaker and David Ouchterlony. Teachers and students feel that the new Casavant is going to add immeasurably to interest and progress in organ study.

derstanding of their inner self for the strength needed to justify their existence.

The communications media, while becoming almost omniscient, have lost much of their power. Stories, which 40 years ago would have rocked the country, now hardly cause a ripple.

In the realm of politics, conflicts of principles are resolved by compromise of principles, with the explanation of: "Yes, I know it's not right, but that's the way things work." And this too is accepted by the electorate—in fact, it tends to be preferable to the politician who will stand or fall on his principles.

And today our art forms do not communicate, except to an inner circle; and most of these persons are indifferent to the message, if any, that the art form communicates.

The other day Paul Tillich said there is no progress in morality, only in the framework within which that morality exists. It should be obvious that our existing framework of institutions is rotten and crumbling.

What, then, do we do? Repair our framework? Reconstruct our religions, our political system, our communications media and our art forms? Perhaps, but if we concentrate on one to the exclusion of the others we will be in even worse shape.

We already have the Hawrelaks, the Bennett and Roberts type politicians; we have our de Gaulle's and our Franz-Josef Strausses. So far we have not managed to find an acceptable latter-day messiah who will relieve us of our duty to ourselves; but if the trend continues we may start looking for him in earnest.

But meanwhile, even to think about the situation is agony; to act is to be frustrated; and peace of mind can only be found in indifference and complacency.

The second session of the 26th Parliament of Canada has been convened. The peech from the throne clearly indicates that the nation's business will just be more of the same. We will muddle along by trial and error without any basic economic principles having been "nailed down" and acted upon.

The prime consideration of all members of parties will continue to be vote catching measures. The antics and utterances of party stalwarts leave no room for doubt that they are imbued with the idea that attaining party power is the purpose of parliament even at the expense of orderly national development and prosperity.

"The job is the thing" - $18,000.00 and up, and having gotten it they are all scared that they might lose it. Those not in the inner sanctum will bluster and fume in criticism of the present management, but they will not vote for a new set of managers until the old ones flounder in the mire of incompetence because of ignorance of basic economic principles.

On Front Page Challenge this week Norman Thomas, the erudite U.S. socialist leader said that Roosevelt was elected because his name was not Hoover - the depression incumbent. Certainly Mackenzie King was elected because his name was not Bennett - the Canadian depression incumbent.

The rising crescendo of criticism of the speech from the throne is that it contains nothing to enliven and rejuvenate our stagnant economy, and this from "parties" who themselves have nothing to offer—just whines and half-baked mixtures of inflation, welfareism and bureaucracy.

When, oh when are we going to have a government of laws and regulations based on principles and ideas which have been "nailed down" as fundamental verities that all citizens are taught and understood?

Do you say that we must continue to allow private institutions to create and cancel - manufacture and destroy - our money units? Do you say that the interest rate - the fee for creating our money - should be used as a gimmick for controlling our economy? Do you say that governments and home owners should continue to pay ten times more for the financing of public enterprise projects and the ownership of homes than such financing service need or should cost. Does it make sense that able and willing workers should remain idle, when materials in abundance are available, and not be allowed to build decent homes for their families?

Is anybody interested in helping to "nailed down" the facts and figures that will show how inexcusably stupid we have been in allowing the money creating monopolists - whose only stock-in-trade is money - to hoodwink us into accepting their dictum that money must have a job at a fat profit before there can be work for men? Is the verdict of history to be - another gutless generation?

Literature in danger

New College's literary annual The Seraph is in trouble because of a lack of contributions.

"Frankly with over 500 students in the college we expected few problems of this kind," said Editor Bernard Katz (III New) last night "but when the deadline came last Friday we found ourselves caught short.

"Either the talent just isn't there, or we haven't made ourselves known to those who, aside from their essay assignments are doing some writing. I'm putting my faith in the latter and am extending the deadline to Monday, March 2."

Katz said a campaign will be carried out by mail and telephone in an effort to seek out New College hidden talent. Contributions of prose, poetry, drama, essays, articles and drawings should be left in the college office, 65 St. George St., addressed to The Seraph.

A bunch of nuts

Results of a recent mental health questionnaire issued by the Students' Administrative Council indicate that almost three-quarters of the student population is unaware of psychiatric counselling facilities offered by the University of Toronto Health Service.

Seventy-five per cent of men and 63 per cent of women questioned said they did not know anything about this service. (At present the U of T Health Service has the part-time services of three psychiatrists.)

Fifty per cent of the men and 64 per cent of the women said that at some time in their university career they had felt in need of advice or counsel.

Most said they felt their college or faculty offered only fair to poor counsel in emotional and social areas, though they rated them good to excellent on financial and academic counselling. Students generally indicated that they had at some time needed help in these four areas, although social and emotional problems scored highest among the girls.

Over a third of these replying indicated they had at some time taken pen pills or tranquilizers.

An unprecedented 89 per cent return of questionnaires seemed to indicate general deep concern about the problem of mental health on the part of the body.

Get ready to bleed

The campus Spring drive for blood donors begins this week, with a challenge for the Engineers to muster their masculinity and come up to their assigned quota.

Nancy Finnegan (III SMC), publicity director for the campus drive, said yesterday that Engineers never make their quota, while "St. Michaels always comes up to their quota."

She also noted that other perpetual slackers are Meds-men and Pharmacists, who rarely make 60 per cent of their quota. "I don't know why they don't give—maybe they're chicken," she mused. Quotas are based on a fixed percent of the school enrolment.

Phlebotomizing starts Wednesday at the Buttery, when Trinity, St. Hilda's, Law, Wycliffe and Massey College will be expected to come. Times are 9-11 a.m. and 12:30-4 p.m.

On Thursday, Music, Emmanuel and Victoria College will be giving at Margaret Addison Hall, from 9-11 a.m. and 12:30-4 p.m. Further times will be announced Friday.

St. Michael's will give Friday at Lorretto College Lounge during the same hours. The Red Cross Clinic, 67 College St. will also be open to all from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Aggies lose suet, win title as Blues matmen second

Top-calibre wrestlers must watch their weight like movie stars, for a redundant ripple can force a wrestler to fight in a 10-pound higher weight class.

But the uncanny ability of Ontario Agricultural College's wrestling squad to lose excess suet allowed OAC to retain the Porter Trophy Saturday at Guelph.

Aggies captured their second consecutive title by piling up 82 points against 63 for Varsity, 60 for Western, 29 for McGill and 19 for Queen's. In most classes Aggies wrestled 10 pounds below their normal weights as they did in last year's championships.

The home squad took three individual crowns, all by victories over Blues. Tom Burns out-pointed Clive Good 5-3 in the 130-pound division; Nick Shori pinned Larry Angus in the 157-pound division; and Neil Patterson edged John Holt with a riding time advantage in the 167-pound class.

For Blues, it was a story of fighting OVER their normal weight. A deficiency of wrestlers in all classes forced the Varsity squad to fight against heavier opponents.

Don Merker, a 170-pound veteran who has held the 177-pound title for two years, stepped up to 191-pounds to win still another title. Merker pinned Doug Brown of OAC at the 6:30 mark of his final bout.

Blues' sole other win came from freshman Alvin McKenzie. McKenzie topped a perfect afternoon (two pins in the preliminaries) by defeating Tony Brebner of Queen's 5-0, in the final.

In a bout which had David-and-Goliath overtones, 150-pound John Holt almost repeated Merker's underdog victory in the 167-pound title bout. Holt, twice 147-pound champ, lost to usually 191-pound wrestler Neil Patterson on the riding time rule. This means that although the bout was tied, 4-4, Patterson was given the decision because he held the lead longer than Holt.

The Keegan Trophy, awarded to the meet's outstanding performer, went to OAC's Nick Shori.

In the heavyweight division, the final pitted two OCAA all-star footballers against each other. After the dust had settled, Western's Jack Cowin was given a 3-1 decision over Blues' Bill Waters.

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Klimas paces PHE cagers to first-place doorstep

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Physical & Health Education clinched at least a tie for top spot in Group I basketball by defeating University College, 48-39. Andy Klimas led the winners with 12 points.

St. Mike's A, taking advantage of the Redmen loss, moved into a second-place tie with UC by trouncing Sr. SPS, 51-31. Skule's Grant Leishman was high man in the game with 16 points while Tom Kent and Tony MacGinnis paced the Irish with 12 and 11 respectively.

Medicine A all but clinched top spot in Group II with a pair of easy victories, 38-26 over Dents A and 39-18 over Law A. Dents A also edged PHE II, 28-26, to hand the hapless Phys Ed squad its tenth defeat without a win.

Pharmacy A remains a head of Group III after a 57-14 slaughter of winless New College, paced by a 17-point performance by Mike Moore.

Meds B remained on Pharmacy's heels with a 43-18 win over Trinity A as Paul Bernstein hit for 10 points.

New College came close against Architecture A but still lost, 31-27.

HOCKEY

Sr. SPS played the role of spoilers Friday, handing first-place UC I a 6-3 setback in Group I action. Skule is already out of contention but made the confused and lackadaisical Redmen look sick.

Meanwhile, goals by Mike Jones and Keith Noble gave Victoria College I a 2-0 verdict over St. Mike's A to put Vic within one point of the UC Redmen.

As the Group I schedule winds up today with a pair of games not one playoff spot has been decided. At 12:30 p.m. Vic I (7-3-1) meets UC I (7-2-2) to decide top spot. Then at 4 p.m. PHE I (4-6-1) battles St. Mike's A

Score 115 points for new league record

Lancers win Wilson Cup

By PAUL HENDERSON

University of Windsor Lancers clinched their second consecutive Intercollegiate basketball championship with a 115-53 trouncing of winless McGill Redmen Saturday night in Windsor.

Lancers, undefeated in two seasons, proceed to the second annual Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union Championships, March 13-14 in Windsor. Lancers won the national title last year.

Windsor scored 52 field goals to register a new team record in this category. Their point total of 115 was a new conference mark.

Ed Petryshyn and Tom Henderson netted 17 points apiece to pace Lancers. Bill Hassett hooper 16 to equal the total of George Lengvari, McGill's top performer.

Waterloo Warriors secured second place in Friday night when they defeated Queen's Golden Gaels, 94-68, in Waterloo Warriors' record is 8 wins and 3 losses.

Jerry Raphael broke loose for 35 points to pace Waterloo. Bob Pando added 16 and Dick Aldridge, 15. Al Raisbeck topped Queen's with 19 points.

Raphael's 35 points give him an average of 24.4 per game and put him very close to Dave West of Toronto in the race for league scoring honors. West is averaging 25.0 and has two games to play while Raphael has one, that against the tough Windsor squad.

Tom Williamson, defending champion, holds down third spot with an average of 22.3. He scored 29 Saturday in leading Western Mustangs to a 82-60 victory over Queen's in London. Barry Mitchelson added 19 and Leo Innocente 14 to the Mustang total which was the highest output this year for the third-place squad.

McGill assured itself of 12 straight losses when they dropped a 62-43 decision to McMaster in Hamilton Friday. George Lengvari again led Redmen, scoring 18, tops in the game. Jim Daly and Jim Saddler netted 16 and 13 respectively to pace Marauders.

Varsity Blues complete their schedule this week when they encounter McMaster in Hamilton Wednesday and return to Hart House Saturday to meet Queen's.

German traded turns pro before he

Ray German isn't a professional football player yet, but already he's been involved in a Canadian Football League player trade.

German, an all-star linebacker with Varsity Blues last season, was technically "traded" Friday by Montreal Alouettes of the Eastern Football Conference to Toronto Argonauts.

In effect, however, only the professional rights to German were acquired by Argos. If German decides to play pro football Argos have exclusive rights to him.

Alouettes gain first rights to German by selecting him in the 1963 college draft after his final season with Ontario Agricultural College Redmen. German came to Varsity last fall for his graduating year of Engineering.

The trade also sent end Don Paquette to Argos in exchange for end Jerry Philp, halfback Clare Exelby and guard Chuck Wood. Wood was an intercollegiate all-star guard and linebacker with McGill Redmen in 1961.

Monteiths-Osborne net 5 as Blues bomb Laval 9-3

By GORD BELLMORE

In one of the most entertaining games of the season, Hank and Steve Monteith took over first and second place in league scoring as they led Varsity Blues to a 9-3 rout of Laval Rouge et Or Friday night at Varsity Arena.

The Stratford Ont., brothers both needed top performances in the season wind-up to overcome scoring leader Bobby Apps of McMaster, who had finished his schedule two nights before. To the delight of over 2,000 fans the Monteiths turned in performances that can only be described in superlatives.

Hank Monteith scored a goal and three assists to grab first place in scoring with 30 points and Steve registered the elusive hat-trick of three goals. He also assisted on two others to bring his total to 29 points, good for second place. Steve's mark of 16 goals in the 12-game schedule is the highest in the league.

The two will finish in their present positions unless Gilles Lefort on Montreal Carabins, who has 25 points, can catch them in his one remaining game.

Hank, an 18-year-old rookie who caught fire in the last half of the season, gained his 28th point late in the first period to tie Apps. He then tried frantically to get the tie-breaking point as the crowd urged him on.

Although his mates kept feeding him the puck, the rookie just couldn't find the range, while coming close on several occasions. With less than four minutes remaining he banged in a loose puck from a scramble in front of the Laval net.

The goal occasioned a standing ovation from the crowd and a gleeful war dance from Monteith.

The crowd then took up a chant for Steve Monteith, who already had two goals and two assists and needed another point to pass Apps. He responded with a goal only two minutes later and Hank and linemate Sonny Osborne collected assists.

Osborne picked up a goal and four assists to give the line a total of five goals and nine assists for the night.

Since Blues had already won the Queen's Cup two days before, the game was meaningless. But both teams gave it their all and the play was wide open and fast from beginning to end. Laval tired toward the end, due to the long train ride from Quebec City, but goalie Maurice Grenier was brilliant throughout, despite the score. Blues fired 51 shots at him.

The fans were further delighted in the third period when a Detroit Olympia-type octopus put in an appearance at centre ice, and a few minutes later the players crawled around on their hands and knees looking for the lost contact lens of Blues' Chris Speyer.

On the more serious side, Blues' classy defenceman Ian Sinclair received the Dr. W. Daffoe Trophy, as the team's most valuable player as chosen by his teammates. For Sinclair, who graduates from OCE this spring, the game marked the end of a great four-year career in college hockey. It was the second time he has won the coveted award, an unprecedented feat.

Sinclair was the stabilizing force on the team, both on and off the ice. His steady, efficient style of play causes him to go unnoticed by many fans, but his talents earn him the rating of a hockey player's hockey player.

Strangely enough, Laval led the game in the first period when Michel Roy scored twice in a row to give Rouges a 2-1 lead. Harold Martel scored the other Laval marker in the third period.

For Blues, Bryan Tompson and Doug Jones scored their first goals of the season and defenceman Bob Hamilton his first point, an assist. Other goals went to Don Fuller and Bob Awrcy.

STRAY SHOTS: The three stars were the first line... in any order... shots on goal were 51-26... Blues host Western here Thursday at 5:30 p.m.

Defenceman Ian Sinclair (right) is congratulated by Dr. W. Daffoe, donor of the Daffoe trophy for Blues' most valuable player as chosen by his teammates. Sinclair, who graduates after a brilliant four-year college career, won the award, for the second time, this season. (See story).

Blues' rookie Hank Monteith beams as he displays the puck with which he scored the goal that gave him the scoring lead in the intercollegiate hockey league.

Swimmers drown Detroit

Varsity swimmers prepared for the Intercollegiate Championships here Saturday by trouncing Detroit Tech, 69-25, at Hart House Saturday.

Graeme Barber, Mike Chapelle and Pete Richardson perpetuated their supremacy in dual meets to pace the water Blues. Barber and Chapelle reduced their best times in the 200-yard freestyle and breaststroke respectively by posting marks of 2:11:3 and 2:25:6.

Richardson was the only dual winner for Blues. He took the 50-yard and 100-yard freestyles with times of 23.3 and 51.8.

Barber and Richardson teamed with John Weekes and Tom Verth to win the 400-yard freestyle relay. Their time of 3:30 is 2.8 seconds better than the existing Intercollegiate record but is not acceptable because it was not established in OQAA competition.

In the absence of backstrokers Don Wheeler and Stan Walker, Varsity coach John Ridpath was pressed into action and won an exhibition. Two other competitors joined the team for the first time; Tony Little entered the backstroke events and Andy Szandtner the diving.

Blues may play in national final after all

By RICK KOLLINS

Varsity Sports Editor

Queen's Cup champions Varsity Blues may have a crack at the Canadian national intercollegiate title after all.

Blues' coach Joe Kane told his players after their final league game Friday night that U of T athletic director Warren Stevens will allow Blues to play in the national tournament at Kingston, March 13 and 14, if they so desire.

Last fall, U of T Athletic Directorate ruled Varsity's hockey and basketball teams would not be able to compete in the national finals if they won league championships because regular schedules are completed by the end of February and the dates of the finals are close to final examinations.

The Varsity players will reach a decision tonight and it is expected they will agree to compete with the nation's three other top conference winners for the University Cup. Blues' captain Sonny Osborne said the players will be willing to compete provided they won't have to practise every night until the finals. . . .

The statistics on the late-season surge by the Monteiths Osborne line are almost unbelievable. The unit scored 20 goals in the five games it played together and added 34 assists for 54 points. . . . Osborne had 19 points in the five-game span, Steve Monteith 18 and Hank Monteith 17. . . . Over the whole season these three scored 34 of Blues' 63 goals. . . .

If Steve Monteith stays second to brother Hank in league scoring (and it is unlikely anyone will catch the brothers in the final week of the season) it will mark the third year in a row he has finished among the league's top three scorers. In his rookie year Steve was third, last year he was first. . . . It is also unlikely that anyone will surpass his league-leading total of 16 goals. Harold Martel of Laval has 12 with one game to play. . . .

Lost in the excitement Friday was the fact that Laval goaltender Maurice Grenier played his last college game in Toronto. This was the first season Blues were able to finish ahead of Laval while Rouge et Or had Grenier in the nets. The only three times in the last 10 years Blues failed to win the title, 1960, '61 and '63 were the same years Grenier minded the Laval cage. . . .

SAC fears bylaw, asks board of governors for mercy

Attempting to curb a bylaw that could make the SAC the most restricted student government in Canada, council last night sped a report to the board of governors asking mercy and consideration.

President Doug Ward presented the lengthy report and, with an attached amendment, it passed council 24 to 1.

The amendment asks the board to refrain from passing any bylaws concerning the SAC-board relationship until the council has clarified its position by presenting a new constitution to the board.

The report is the outgrowth of great concern among some council members and other student leaders that the present status of the SAC, under the University of Toronto Act of 1906 — a piece of provincial legislation — is a threat both potential and actual to the SAC's function as a body truly representing its electors.

Besides the report, Ward read a letter from the law firm of Haines, Thomson, Rogers, Macaulay, Howie and Freeman in which a legal opinion was given on the present relationship between the council and the board.

"Some people were thinking we were going to take the board of governors to court," Ward said with a wry smile. And he quoted:

"The Students' Administrative Council... exists solely as a creature of the board of governors and at the pleasure of the board of governors."

But he said that although strictly legally the SAC is at the board's mercy, there was an optimistic addition to the law firm's opinion, based on precedence, which he also read:

"We believe that any negotiations entered into by the officers of the Students' Administrative Council with the board of governors or any of its representatives should be conducted on the basis that although the Students' Administrative Council in a legal sense is subservient to the board of governors and, in fact, probably subject to its whims, practically speaking the board of governors is dependent upon the Students' Administrative Council as their responsibility is necessary for the function of the university."

The opinion also said: "The very lifeblood of the university certainly in the modern North American concept is the student body and experience shows us that student councils are becoming more and more responsible in the full meaning of that word."

Last year a committee under the board of governors, with no student representative, was charged to examine and propose legislation for the SAC.

Ward said he was duly given notice of a proposed bylaw, in confidence, and that he was asked to comment.

"My comments were very negative," he said.

"I happen to know the

Views on mental counselling vary

A wide difference between the attitudes of staff and students on the need for psychiatric counselling was revealed this week by answers to similar questionnaires on the subject.

Fifty per cent of male students and 64 per cent of female students said they had at some time felt a need for advice and counsel. By contrast, the majority of college and faculty deans and principals stated that only a few of their students were seeking counsel.

Two of the 13 college heads agreed that 50 per cent of their students had expressed a desire for help, but replies from the others ranged from "20 to 30 per cent (on academic problems only)" to "none". Several said they were "unsure".

At only four of the colleges or faculties is any specific individual assigned to counselling. Three more spread the duties among the entire staff, and the balance make no provision.

The questionnaires answered by the students revealed that the majority did not know of the counselling services which are available, including those of three part-time psychiatrists attached to university health service.

Some faculties apparently feel no problem exists. One in particular replied to the series of questions that: no faculty members were assigned to counselling; the problems were mainly academic; he had no idea of the number of requests for help; he had

Revolutionaries agents of progress

By DAVE GRANT

The main agents of progress in this century may be revolutionaries in the awakening nations of Africa and Asia, a senior staff member in the department of political economy yesterday told a student audience at University College yesterday.

Prof. C. B. Macpherson, speaking in the series "Progress Reconsidered", sponsored by the University College Literary and Athletic Society, said the main function of the revolutionaries would be to redirect man's attention away from economic values and toward human values.

In the past power has accrued to possessing peoples, but now is shifting to nations which have rejected the capitalist market society, he said.

"We must co-exist with, and even learn something from these people. Future progress will be away from the Western concepts of Political Man and Economic Man."

Prof. Macpherson said the universal belief that the progress of man would inevitably follow scientific and technological development was shattered in 1914.

"Since then," he said, "this century has become the age of the Frankenstein Effect. Man has created forces too great to control, and instead of liberating him from his en-

Status of B of G report on SAC uncertain

It remained uncertain last night if the report of the board of governors' committee on the status and constitution of the Students' Administrative Council would be considered at the board meeting tomorrow.

Board secretary D. S. Claringbold said he would not know until late this morning whether or not the report would be on the agenda for the meeting.

Senior members of the committee said they were unsure of the fate of the report, and had not been advised.

One of the general bylaws of the board states that all matters which are to be included on the agenda must be in the hands of the secretary at least three days before the meeting.

Hockey player dies

Harvey Clarke, the 33-year-old amateur hockey player whose jugular vein was cut by a skate at Varsity Arena Feb. 16, died yesterday in General Hospital.

He had been in critical condition since a team of surgeons restored his heart beat following the accident in which he lost almost four pints of blood.

Blood drive opens today

Six to 10 lives may depend on the generosity of University of Toronto students in giving their blood.

This is the number of heart operations normally scheduled for one week, apart from the normal operations requiring blood. Each heart operation requires about 30 pints of blood. The survival of the patients will depend on the availability of blood.

U of T students are being asked to provide 2,000 pints of blood at clinics being held all over the campus during the next 10 days.

Clinics will be held in the Buttery today, Margaret Addison Hall on Thursday, and Loretto College Lounge on Friday. The hours of the clinics are 9-11 a.m. and 12:30-4 p.m.

College Grits demand bilingualism

OTTAWA (CUP) — The Canadian University Liberal Federation Sunday called for the recognition of the French language and for the establishment of French schools anywhere in Canada where there is a concentration of 10 per cent or more French-speaking population.

Another resolution asked that bilingualism be a reality at the higher levels of the civil service and that all civil servants be bilingual in areas where there is a high concentration of French-speaking people.

The 300 student Liberals said Friday Canada should be given the right to withdraw from joint federal-provincial programs and receive compensation.

Prime Minister Pearson said Friday Canada should have closer ties with Latin America but the decision to join the OAS should await clarification of its rules.

CULF asked for an increase to $3,000 in the income tax exemption for students.

No resolutions were offered concerning the 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 promised by the Liberals in the election campaign last April, and little was said about the government's mention in the throne speech of federal interest-free loans to students.

The prime minister told the convention Friday the scholarships were a party commitment, but the party had many commitments and some would have to be met during the normal four-year term of Parliament and not all in the first session.

Robert D. Peyton of the University of British Columbia was elected president of the federation over the first female candidate to seek the office, Miss Sharon Sholberg, 21-year-old McGill University law student.

Peyton in his nomination speech said that the Liberals were losing too many members to the New Democratic Party because of the impression that the NDP was the only party of reform.

Criticize UC Lit elections

Political deals, voter apathy and carnival-style electioneering seem to have combined to produce a situation at University College that many students feel is a disgrace.

Of the 18 positions available in the UC Literary and Athletic Society, nine were filled with no contest this year.

Ed Greenspan got to be president without a fight. Susan Beckerman became vice-president. Donna Cooper became secretary. Dianne Bennett became female SAC representative. And so it went. The election is tomorrow.

The Lit has often been accused of being a self-perpetuating clique. Outgoing president Phil Epstein denied that.

But he admitted he knew of at least three offices which would have been contested if the candidates had not phoned one another and made deals.

"These prospective politicians made strong efforts to see that their campaigns would not be contested," he said, and remarked that two such friendly hopefuls were inclined to agree not to run for the same office.

It's election time again

It's that time of year again. Next year's politicians are being born all over the campus.

Today, male members of the university elect next year's executive for Hart House. Officers for five committees will be elected from 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Thursday, the University College Literary and Athletic Society will elect officers to positions for next year not already acclaimed.

Acclamations to date, two less than last year, include President Ed Greenspan (II), Vice Pres. Susan Beckerman (II), Sec. Donna Cooper (III), Woman SAC rep Dianne Bennett (III), Graduate Year rep John Cowan (III), and four others. Eleven posts remain contested.

In yesterday's Victoria College Union elections, Bob Malcolmson (III) was voted president for 675. Other chief positions were won by: Ginny Dent (III), associate president; Jeff Heath (III), treasurer; and Linda Millar (III), secretary — both by acclamation.

Tomorrow, the Trinity Board of Stewards elects its new executive. The St. Michael's College SAC follows suit Friday.

Election of the Liberal Party Club executive will be the last party elections this term. The PCs and NDPs have elected their slate already.

Credit union plans drive

U of T's new credit union is preparing for a massive enrolment drive next September, according to its secretary Howard Adelman (S-GS).

The credit union, recently opened to all students at the university, was started last fall by the Campus Co-op. Chequing privileges have not yet been obtained, but are expected within the next month.

Already some students from outside the Co-op have joined, including a U of T graduate now studying theology in the United States.

Adelman said "very few" U of T students not members of the Co-op itself have joined the credit union so far.

New Dems plan deep thinking for next year

The U of T New Democrats will undertake "a year of deepening intellectual activities" next year, according to newly-elected President Mike McDonald (III SMC).

After his election Monday, McDonald commented that the club would concentrate on "studying the emerging political and social problems of Canada, especially in the fields of communications, economics, and defence, and show the relevance of New Democratic philosophy to all areas of Canadian life."

Other officers elected were First Vice-President Bob Bryant (II Vic), Director of Organization Mike Lewis (I New), Secretary Jean McIsaac (II Trin) Treasurer David Lloyd-Jones (II UC) and Editor Danny Izenberg (III UC). Vice - Presidents from colleges were Stan Adelman (II New), Harvey Cooper (II UC), Martin Davies (I Trin), Tom Good (II Vic) and Joe Meuleman (I SMC).

who is responsible?

The board of governors is scheduled to meet tomorrow to decide whether the students of this university are responsible enough to manage their own affairs.

The board has been asked by the Students' Administrative Council to amend the bylaws so that the student government will be able to hire its own staff and be responsible for its own financial decisions.

This request was made a year ago, and since then there has been verbal conflict, closed meetings, indications of a split between senior members of the administration and a report that proposed changes drawn up by two board members give no increased autonomy to the SAC.

Last weekend a student-organized symposium on student mental health brought together about 80 students, teachers and administrators. Many of the administrators who attended were shocked over the indications that there is a serious mental health problem among students.

The symposium held last weekend was only the second conference on student mental health to be held in Canada. The first was held in Kingston last year, and was also initiated by students. At the Kingston conference it was recommended that a further conference be held, including participation of administrators who are in a position to take action on the problem. A few of these persons were present at the student-organized symposium last weekend.

The mental health problem and the way it is being approached by students is only one refutation of the theory that students are not responsible enough to administer their own affairs. The SAC's establishment of the employment and housing services are other examples.

It could be argued that the mental health of university students is to some degree the responsibility of the university's administration. But as we have seen, both in the results of the SAC survey and the symposium, mental health services at this and other universities have been woefully inadequate.

The administration has in the past failed to recognize this inadequacy, and in fact, many administrators are not yet convinced that a problem exists.

But while administrators ignored the problem, students did not. The final result of the students' actions has been to bring the problem into the open and make a few persons realize that it does exist. Only time will tell who chooses to act on the evidence gathered so far.

But basic to the situation is the question of student autonomy. If students can research, investigate and bring to light the complex problem of student mental health, who can be so naive as to say they are not capable of making their own administrative decisions and hiring their own staff?

We would hazard a guess that some members of the board of governors and at least one senior member of the administration are this naive.

We would like to ask those members of the board and the administration how concerned they have been with student mental health, with student housing, with student employment, with scholarships and with the dozens of other problems that hinder a student in his search for an education.

And if these persons can honestly say they have been concerned, we would like to ask them what they have done to help alleviate these problems.

We suspect that in most cases, particularly with those persons opposing student autonomy, that they have not done near as much as have the students.

We suggest to those persons, and they know who they are better than we do, that they let some light into their reactionary minds and give the requested autonomy to the students, who thus far have been far more concerned with some of the important problems facing the university today.

Text of Doug Ward's brief to B of G on student government

Background

A year ago, the Students' Administrative Council passed a series of amendments to its constitution for the purpose of making the council "subject to its electors and to the intent of the University of Toronto Act", in regard to its "policies, personnel and finances". Caput approved of the amendments, but the board of governors instructed the president of the university to strike a special committee "to examine and make recommendations to the board upon the organizational structure and constitutional aspects of the Students' Administrative Council. Council was informed that their amendments were "without force or effect" in these circumstances.

The committee was struck, and its membership comprised Mr. Sidney Hermant and Mr. Justice Arthur Kelly from the Board, Mr. Woodside and Dean Wright from the Caput, and President Bissell, Mr. Sword, Mr. Stone and Mr. Ross from the administration. There was to be no student representation on the committee, but the president of council, Mr. Sullivan, was invited to make representation to the committee at an early meeting.

It was expected that the committee would report to the board in the early fall, especially since the council had been obliged to fill the post of its senior employee on a temporary and inadequate basis until the report had been presented. However, the committee encountered some complications which demanded additional time. Early this year, some members of the committee presented recommendation to the board, although it is considered that this was less than, and other than a report of the whole committee with recommendations upon the organization and the constitution of the council.

The president of council was asked to comment in confidence upon these recommendations. This he did, and also informed the president of the university that he wished to present a full report to the board on the general topic of SAC-Board of Governors relations, and on the particular topic of the recommendations. At a meeting of council on February 20, the president was mandated to present his report, exclusive of those portions dealing with the particular recommendations of committee members to the board, to the council for approval at a special meeting to be held before the next meeting of the Board. This report then, is an official communication of the council to the board.

Present Relationship

In the present relationship, all council expenses, in theory must meet the approval of the vice-president, administration, if under $200, and the full board, if over $200. This includes both money which is handed over to the SAC from the student levy, and also that money which is income from other council sources. In addition, we do not have the full use of the levy throughout the year for investment purposes, and we have only a questionable control over the SAC reserves.

The board of governors has interpreted Section 34 of the University of Toronto Act to mean that the SAC is one of its subsidiaries. In this relationship, the chief financial officer of the SAC must be an appointee of the board, and all monies of the SAC are in the control of the Board through its vice-president administrative. Furthermore, all policies of the council are ultimately subject to the approval of the board.

The problem itself arises in the attempt to square this fact with the intent of the Act, as interpreted by council, that the SAC exists foremost as a representative committee of the students, the official medium of communication to the board of governors. Mr. Sullivan commented upon this last year: "It is incongruous that such a representative group should receive its duties and responsibilities from that very board to which it is a representative."

Thus council passed amendments which were designed to secure the status of the council as representative of the students rather than as subsidiary of the board.

The Nature of the Council

Primarily, the SAC exists as a student government, representative of, and responsible to, its electors. This emphasis is found in both the University of Toronto Act, and in the constitution of the SAC.

But government includes more than representation pure and simple, and in its constitution, the council is also charged with the responsibility for initiation and sponsorship of campus-wide activities and publications for its students. Such a development draws the council out of the realm of simple representation, and into an area in which financing of this government and its activities, it is necessary for the council to ensure to the board that council stewardship of its funds will be responsible and consistent with the purposes of a student government within the University of Toronto.

The working out of such an arrangement is thus at the centre of any discussion on the relationship of the council to the board.

Independent of any by-laws of the board, certain controls by the board are either explicit in the U of T Act or implicit in the fiscal relationship. The board has the power to enable the students to form a representative committee of themselves, that is the council, and it further has control over the method of election and representation to that council. Finally, the board has the ultimate power of financial supply because it raises the fees which compose the largest single item of council income. Council appreciates these facts, and our contention is not here, but in the practice whereby these powers could be enforced to encroach upon the integrity of the council as responsible to its electors.

To draw an analogy, the government of the province is the authority upon which monies are collected through taxation for the needs of the university. However, it is accepted that the integrity of the university is best served if those monies are turned over to the university to be appropriated and budgeted from within. We consider that the integrity of an elected council should be assured in like fashion.

If the board were to wish complete control over student activities, then it could theoretically set up a subsidiary which, as a branch of the administration could finance student activities.

Obviously, an "activities subsidiary of the board" is not desirable for either the board or the students. If council is to assume these activities, then the council should have a voice in the negotiation of such financial relationships. It is the opinion of council that the present relationship betrays an acceptance of financial arrangements at the expenses of the idea of a representative committee. We also consider ourselves partly guilty because the administration undoubtedly assumed such authority in the past by default of the council at that time.

These controls which exist independent of the present by-law of the board of governors, could in themselves be an adequate basis for a financial arrangement between the board and the council. Just as the University must account scrupulously to the province for its monies, so the SAC would be in the position of wishing to present to the board of its officers, full information concerning our fiscal arrangements, in order that supply would not be cut off. Council would be pleased to

Editorial attack on U of M rector produces Valentine's Day Massacre

By MICHEL BEAULIEU

(Michel Beaulieu was the co-editor of the University of Montreal student newspaper Le Quartier Latin. He resigned following the vote of censure by the U of M student council against the editor for printing an article attacking Mgr. Lussier, the rector of U of M.)

It was almost the Valentine's Day Massacre, but on a smaller scale—the mass resignation of the staff of Le Quartier Latin University of Montreal's student newspaper. The resignation occurred the day after a vote of censure passed on February 13 against the editor.

The motion of censure did not ask the resignation of the student journalists but acted only as a warning. It followed an editorial published January 30 in the student newspaper.

The editorial in question written by Pierre Emanuel Garon, was aimed at the participation of Mgr. I. Lussier, rector of the University in a textbook racket. In extremely violent terms the author of the text denounced the rector and placed him in a dilemma: "one of two things: either the rector knew that he was being dishonest in combining the two duties or he did not know. If he did not know, he was a poor fool and completely senseless — if he knew and nevertheless exercised both duties simultaneously, he shows us that he is a petty individual for whom the individual good is preferable to that of the community."

This editorial followed what can be called a scandal. The Bouchard commission instituted by the Quebec government to study the sales of books had come to the conclusion that several personalities, and not lesser ones, were involved in situations of conflicting interests. Mgr. Lussier was among these.

However, university authorities took no measures against the editorial. The freedom of the press of the students was respected, and while the text in question was deplored the AGEUM (Student Council) was raised to take its responsibility in the matter.

The executive council presented the motion of censure to the council February 13. After more than two hours of violent arguments, some of which were personality clashes, the Council adopted the motion by a 19-12 vote. During the discussion the editor of Le Quartier Latin had stated that if the same circumstances recurred he would publish the same text again.

It was understood even if the voters did not understand it at the moment, that he would not remain at Le Quartier Latin once the motion was passed. They did not succeed however in making him say he would resign if the motion passed, since the discussion were limited strictly to the tone of the text and not to the content or the editor.

The next day, Valentine's Day, Guy Bertrand announced his resignation. The staff supported him at this moment as several of them had already agreed about ten days before the meeting.

This, however, was only to be the first of a play that was in danger of lasting. Certain weekend papers in Montreal announced that the students were furious with their council. It was rumoured that they were preparing a demonstration with the idea of dismissing the student council executive of its functions. Now if it is true that several students were furious with the student council and that several of them saw in this vote of censure a concession by the council to the wishes of the university, it is also true that any demonstration would have been out of place under the circumstances. Le Quartier Latin staff had faced up to its responsibilities. Having no more confidence in the council it had preferred resigning to working in an atmosphere that had become unbearable.

It is to be noted finally that the Quartier Latin staff agreed to stay until the council should find another editor, an editor who will have to be found elsewhere than in the resigning staff since these members signed a common letter promising not to accept a new position on the paper from now to the end of the year.

status was affixed to council, and we contend that our student council, and the scope and concept of student government have changed substantially in this time. The student governments at McGill and Carleton, for example, are responsible, and yet apart from the direct control of the university officers or board.

The change can be witnessed at Toronto too. Our activities show a steadily increasing feeling of responsibility for the university community and the larger community. Two weekends ago a conference was held at Toronto, in which a prognosis of Confederation was discussed among students, professors, journalists and politicians. This past weekend, a symposium for the staff and students of this university was held on the topic of student mental health. Both activities were sponsored and paid for by the SAC.

When the SAC was set up, it was probably not envisaged that council would operate in such fields as the above. Students are ready and willing to accept greater responsibility within the university community, and they have a positive contribution to make. If we are to militate against a 'super-market' variety of university education, then we all have a task: the administration, to free faculty and students for study and decision making; the faculty, to maintain personal relations with their student colleagues; and the students, to bring identity to their membership, to attract the best students to their leadership, and to participate in activities and decisions in their own spheres which are both responsible and important.

SIR DAN. WILSON RES.

Brief text (contd.)

negotiate such arrangements whereby auditing and accounting practices are adhered to, and that arrangements are made for the security of the students levy. It would be to our advantage to negotiate such arrangements.

Responsible Government

The issue has been raised that the SAC is not a truly responsible government because of its method of representation. Two points must be presented here: first, the whole problem of representivity in a federated university demands study by council, and is receiving it; secondly the University of Toronto Act states that it is for the board to approve the method of representation to the council. If the board is held back from granting us the right to be responsible to our electors on this ground, then there is a clear channel open to amend the situation. The board should disprove our system of representation, and we shall be both pleased and obliged to work out a new one which would then be subject to the approval of the board. Thus board initiative can clear up this matter to the benefit of all.

Conclusion

It is respectfully hoped that the board of governors will understand why the council makes representation at the present time. Generations have gone by since subsidiary

STUDENTS

The overflow meeting at New College last Thursday was both gratifying and saddening. Too many of the questions asked indicated a serious lack of understanding of basic economic principles — of even a knowledge of the meaning and purposes of exchange and banking terms and practices. It disclosed the failure of our educators to realize that this vital subject is of first importance in our work-a-day world.

Several questions indicated a belief that the Bank of Canada had control of our money supply — of the issuance and maintenance of our requirements of money. One might as well say that a mule driver has control of his mule if he can stop him but can't start him. Mr. Atkinson, President of The Canadian Bankers' Association, stated, in answer to a question asked at the last Commerce and Banking Committee Hearing that, "Making additional credit available for loans would be a matter for the banks themselves."

One student expressed a view that no two people would agree on the value and life of a building in attempting to set up an amortization schedule, completely ignoring the practical experience of NHA in respect to all government guaranteed mortgages, in keeping well within safe valuation and time factors. Another expressed a view that if a building burned, money issued by the government to finance it would result in inflation, indicating a lack of knowledge of the purpose of reserve funds. Another view that a builder doesn't know whether he can sell a house that he may build, clearly points up the urgent need of instruction in the law of averages — in actuarial calculations — in all phases of our economic activities.

Several questions indicated a mistaken belief that if the government issued money at its administrative cost for financing public projects and housing, the money supply would be inflated. Other questions respecting amortization and monetization indicated complete unfamiliarity with the terms, and a shortcoming — a failure in our educational system.

But I know from experience in addressing such groups that there were many present who were giving serious thought to the analysis and proposals presented, and to the answers to questions, although some of the questioners didn't seem to be interested in answers, especially to any one else's questions.

As for the ninety five percent of those present, who listened attentively throughout, I have reason to believe that many of them will appreciate a letter I received, following a series of broadcasts, from Mr. J. P. Williams, Hon. President of Great West Life Hundred Thousand Club: "You no doubt realize that there are many people who have been listening to your broadcasts and giving them careful thought, yet have hesitated about writing to you until they were fully persuaded that you were right in this vital matter. I am one of these, I feel sure that your thoughts are sinking much deeper into the minds of our Canadian citizens than you perhaps realize."

I have been asked by a member of the Commerce and Finance Association to address a meeting in Hart House during the first week in March. It will be my hope that any discussion that may ensue will be initiated by written questions respecting basic economic principles in order that I may correlate my answers with an explanation of my analysis and proposals. However, I want to emphasize that this is not just a matter for so-called finance and economic experts. The only requirements in attaining an understanding of our economic processes is the capacity to think "in a straight row", a little common sense, and, of course, a determination to learn.

Really Brief Briefs

OTTAWA (CUP) — The 1964 Canadian Union of Students national seminar will be held at Laval University Aug. 31 — Sept. 6, and the national congress at York Sept. 10 — 16; CUS headquarters have announced.

University of Waterloo students are collecting books to restock the library of the University of Algeria.

Algerian students have been without their library since it was burned down in 1962 during their struggle for independence. Although Waterloo students are themselves waiting for their library to be built, they are sending many books in French as well as scientific or technical material.

CUSO enlists students for 'peace'

By ANTHONY MYRANS

(Anthony Myrans (IV Vic) has worked with CUSO for several years. In 1961 he served overseas in Jamaica.)

The history of CUSO (Canadian University Service Overseas) on the Toronto campus is reaching a turning point. The organization has now become well established at the university and present plans call for the enlistment of as many interested students as possible to insure its continued existence and success on the campus.

This month, for the second year in a row, the Toronto committee of CUSO submitted applications of its Toronto hopefuls to the national selection board for final approval. The successful candidates were chosen in Ottawa on February 8 and will leave for their overseas posts this coming summer. They will be part of the 1964 Canadian contingent replacing the 1961-3 volunteers, many of whom are en route to Canada after their two years of service in Asia, Africa, the West Indies and South America.

CUSO was established in June 1961 as a national agency to develop and promote schemes to send Canadian graduate students to serve overseas. During the first year of operation CUSO committees were established at 44 universities and colleges in Canada and approximately 200 applications were received from individuals across the country. Personnel overseas as of September 1963 numbered 128 and even with this small total Canada has (in CUSO) the fifth largest "Peace corps" contingent in the world. The largest of the thirteen agencies in existence is the U.S. Peace Corps with 4,215 persons overseas; the smallest is Switzerland with a proposed contingent of 10.

Since its inception, CUSO has been financed by interested private individuals and industry. But the Canadian government has kept in close contact with the CUSO's development. The organization has been fortunate to receive advice and assistance from the department of external affairs and external aid from time to time. It is expected that the Canadian government will give financial aid this year.

Toronto students formed the nucleus of original volunteers in 1960-1. The Toronto student administrators and returned volunteers have been responsible for creating, developing and implementing the philosophy of volunteering that lies behind the national program. In fact, CUSO essentially developed from two U of T pioneer programs in this field: Canadian Voluntary Commonwealth Service established in 1960 by Mr. Guy Arnold, a Don at Victoria College and Canadian Overseas Volunteers, established in the same year by Keith Spicer, a graduate of U of T.

It is generally agreed that CUSO's objective is the recruiting of qualified graduates who are willing to serve and learn overseas. Graduates are only sent abroad in reply to requests for their services by governments and other appropriate agencies.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION ELECTIONS

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC DIRECTORATE

The electoral meeting of the University of Toronto Women's Athletic Association to elect six student representatives of the Women's Athletic Directorate for 1964-65 will be held in the Lecture Room, Benson Building on Monday, March 16 at 5:00 pm. sharp.

Nominations will be received by the Secretary of the Association until Tuesday March 10 at 4:00 pm. Nominations must be signed by two members of the University of Toronto W. A. A. and must be made on the forms to be obtained from the secretary in the Athletic Association Office, Benson Building.

Representatives to the Electoral Body must be appointed and sent to the meeting as follows:

  - Skiing Club
  - Fencing Club
  - Curling Club
  - Golf Club
  - Bowling Club
- 8) The Undergraduate members of the 1962-63 Directorate

Names of voting representatives must be given to the Secretary not later than Thursday, March 12, 4:00 pm. No proxies will be permitted except upon written notice to the Secretary prior to the election. Electoral Body representatives may only carry one vote each.

*Note: Deadline for submitting names is MARCH 12 NOT March 2 as stated in Friday's Varsity.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB

The annual election for the women's Basketball, Curling, Golf, Ice Hockey, Swimming, Tennis, Badminton, Softball, Volleyball, Skiing, Archery, Bowling and Fencing Clubs will be held on Tuesday, March 11. Voting will be held from 9:00 am. to 5:00 pm. in Room 102, Benson Building.

The election for the presidency ONLY of each club will be held and voting will be preferential. Nominations for the office of president for each club must be signed by two voting members of the club in question and filed with the Secretary of the Athletic Association, Benson Building, by Friday March 6, 4:00 pm.

Voting members for each club are restricted to those who have been registered as playing members of an intramural or intercollegiate sport during the past academic year, or who are certified by a team manager to have attended at least 50 per cent of the practices of that team; members of the club executive and managers of all teams playing under the club.

Excerpts from a CUSO field report

By JUDY PULLEN

(Former U of T student Judy Pullen is serving with CUSO in the Punjab in India. Following are several excerpts of her report of Sept. 25, 1963.)

A magnificent reception and dinner was held for us by the planning commission, the department in the Indian government in charge of the Peace Corps and CUSO in Hyderabad House, a very grand and splendid palace. The dishes themselves were highly spice and they made our native food seem pale. Dr. Houston in charge of the 200 Peace Corps volunteers in India was there and had an exciting story to tell. He came to India first in 1930 when he climbed K2, a mountain 800 feet lower than Mount Everest. Since then he has remained in India contributing to the progress of cardiovascular surgery.

We had a marathon CUSO meeting in the offices of the Indian Planning Commission. It went from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. with only a lunchbreak. Five more old volunteers arrived from Ceylon and South India.

We had quite a session discussing all sorts of problems, plans for the future of CUSO in India etc. John Wood will take over as our co-ordinating secretary. In October. He will be responsible for lining up next year's positions. John has been in a village in Gujarat for the past year. He speaks the language fluently and has apparently done a fabulous job. He started a night school in the village (in addition to his teacher duties all day at the neary boarding school) for the Harijan or outcaste children.

He had rocks thrown at him each night as he collected the children for the school.

Mr. Khentul took us down to the boys' school at the foot of the hill. It is a big brick and wooden ramshackle building fronting on a mud yard. There is a large room upstairs which serves as classroom, dining room and bedroom for us. We were greeted by throngs of boys dressed in khaki brown shorts and shirts which had been made for them. There were a few teen-aged girls who are going to train for the clinic . . .

At twilight we went down to see the temple on the hill. This is festival time, so that drums and horns are constantly blowing. We arrived at the school unannounced and found the boys sitting in a large square on mats in the yard. They were singing their prayers in high, shrill tones — the Tibetan singing is all done at shouting pitch—while the prayer flag fluttered from a nearby tree.

Friday we rode out of the girls' school two miles away. There are only two Tibetan boys in charge, and the place is terrible, old and falling down, with no running water. We are trying to get a large building right besides the boys' school where we can instruct the girls, since the teaching at the two places will have to be done by us alone.

NOTICE

Regarding Elections

Procedure

Members are elected to the five standing committees by a system which combines the straight popular vote system with a proportional vote system to recognize as many faculties as possible.

- THE 30% RULE Any candidate who receives less than 30% of the number of votes polled by the leading candidate is automatically eliminated from the running.
- FACULTY REPRESENTATION The leading man from each faculty is then selected.
- POPULAR VOTE From this point on, if the eight members are not yet elected, candidates are selected simply by the popular vote received. At this time, the Rule of Three comes into effect. No college or faculty may be represented by more than three men on any one committee. This rule includes the three carry-overs already elected by the Committee itself.
- If, on completion of this procedure, a full committee is not elected, it becomes the Warden's prerogative to co-opt any member he deems suitable.

vironment, these forces have had the effect of dehumanizing him."

He cited the constant demoralizing effect of the Bomb as well as the use of psychology in brainwashing and indoctrination.

Himself author of the controversial book The Political Theory of Possessive Individualism, Prof. Macpherson said the classic criterion of progress is one of an individual free to make the best of himself, and for the past 200 years he has done this in the context of the capitalist market society.

He said the assumption of this society is that freedom, not a divine spark, is what makes man human, and essential freedom lies in the contractual power to enter into only such relations as he voluntarily chooses.

Counselling (contd.)

no knowledge of a need for counselling on social problems; only three or four referrals a year were made to the Health Service; response to services offered had been poor; and that consequently there was no need for an expansion of counselling services.

This contrasts with the responses of students who felt that their college or faculty was giving only fair to poor service in this field, and with the views of Dr. Graham Blaine of Harvard University, who recommended to a staff-student mental health symposium that U of T have eight qualified psychiatrists.

Seven of the 13 faculty heads could see no need for an expanded service, and none thought his own college or faculty should expand its activities.

Older students don't seem to have problems—only one or two in graduate studies and four or five in law ask for advice each year.

Three of the 13 college or faculty heads admitted that they didn't know what facilities existed or were not sufficiently well informed to make any recommendations.

SAC meeting (contd.)

bylaw that they want to impose. It would make us the most restricted student government in Canada. We'd have to pull out of CUS (The Canadian Union of Students) because we wouldn't satisfy its definition of a student government."

But the situation could be worse, he said. He indicated certain board members intend to offer mollifying amendments to the bylaw when the board meets tomorrow.

Ward stressed the necessity of getting his report, with any necessary changes, through the council at last night's extraordinary session because "we have our backs to the wall."

He said although he had made his views known to the board, "since I was doing the negotiating in secret, they may have thought that I was the only one who gave a damn."

And although Publications Commissioner Dave Beatty expressed concern at possible railroading — "What's happening around this place?" he yelled at one point — the report and amendment were passed without serious opposition.

(Ian MacDonald, the Pharmacy rep, was the only council member to vote against the acceptance of Ward's report. MacDonald made no comments during the three-hour meeting.)

Most troublesome thorn in the SAC's side in its tussling with the board is the ruling that all council expenses must be approved by the vice-president (administration) if under $200 or by the board as a whole if over $200.

While Ward said "neither side adheres to it as long as there is no trouble," nevertheless it was felt this was a potential source of ill will, at least.

But out of this ruling comes what the report considers the essential incongruity in relations between the board and the SAC.

The board interprets the Act as saying all policies and financial dealings of the council are ultimately subject to approval of the board.

(The legal opinion obtained by council bears this out.)

But the council's report says the intent of the Act is to make the SAC firstly a representative committee of the students — the official medium of communication to the board.

The report quotes Jordan Sullivan last year's SAC president, as saying:

"It is incongruous that such a representative group should receive its duties and responsibilities from that very board to which it is a representative."

The report bows to the de facto authority of the board, as set down by the Act of 1906, but complains that the legal powers "could be enforced to encroach upon the integrity of the council as responsible to its electors."

"It is the opinion of council that the present relationship betrays an acceptance of financial arrangements at the expense of the idea of a representative committee."

And Ward said the looming bylaw which could pass the board tomorrow would make matters even worse unless its strictures were eased by amendments.

While admitting the SAC has no power to force the board to do anything, Ward expressed the hope that a strong opinion from the SAC might produce a change in the proposed bylaw.

Athletic Directorate Elections 1964 - 1965

The Electoral Meeting of the University of Toronto Athletic Association to elect representatives to the Athletic Directorate for 1964-65 will be held on Monday, March 9th at 4.45 p.m. sharp, in the Debates Room, Hart House (south side, upstairs).

Under the Constitution of the Athletic Association (Article VIII), all Athletic Club Executives and College and Faculty Athletic Associations are entitled to send representatives to this meeting. These representatives must be male undergraduates of the University of Toronto or one of the affiliated colleges, who are proceeding to a degree, are in actual attendance upon lectures, and who have paid the annual fee required (By-law 1). The Club Executives and Athletic Associations are being notified to meet at an early date, appoint their representatives and give them their credentials for the electoral meeting.

PROCEDURE FOR NOMINATION

A student to be elected to the Directorate must, at the time of his nomination, be in the second or higher year of his course, at the University, but not in his final year. The nominations must be in writing on the form provided for the purposes, signed by two male undergraduate members of the Athletic Association, in good standing, and filed with Secretary of the Athletic Association not later than Thursday, March 5th. The nomination form may be obtained at the Athletic Office.

J. P. LODSEMORE

BRIEFS

Twenty seven Canada-to-Cuba peace walkers marched away from Albany, Ga., on Monday carrying signs urging peace and universal brotherhood. They had spent most of their two months there in jail.

Those who wish to go to Germany this summer are strongly recommended to travel light and, if hitchhiking, to carry a sign saying, "Canada, Student, POOR". "The German people are more sympathetic than," April Sugai (IV Vic), told an audience yesterday.

Rumors that T. E. (Al) Grundy, candidate for student services director, is really Ralph Caninsein have been scotched by Grundy's campaign manager, Sheldon Gilbert (III UC). Mr. Caninsein, famed JCR dog, ran unsuccessfully for the presidency of the Lit in 1962.

The Bald Soprano, a one act anti-play by Eugene Ionesco, is playing at the Women's Union Theatre from today until Friday between 1:15 and 2 p.m.

CURLERS RUNNERS-UP IN W.I.A.U. BONSPIEL

The Catarqui Golf and Country Club in Kingston saw its favorite daughters, Queen's women's curlers, defeat Varsity 9-4 to parade to the winner's circle Saturday. The Blue and White rock tossers emerged with a spray of heather by defeating McMaster 7-5 and Queen's "B", 5-4 to capture a strong second spot.

Peggy Dewhirst, Varsity skip and sometime cheerleader, manoeuvred her team through several close and exciting ends. The curlers, playing chiefly a draw game, came through with some crucial shots when the going got rough. The vigorous sweeping of Ann Mutrie, vice-skip, Junith Barron, lead, and Liz Werner, second, made a big difference on ice that stubbornly refused to give the rocks adequate speed. Bandages and liniment were the order of the day after the marathon sweep.

INTERFACULTY RESULTS

Curling

Barb Walsh's St. Mikes crew whitewashed Kathy Leal's Nurses, 11-2, to claim the first Interfaculty Curling championship. Runner-up spot was awarded to Vic I when they defeated their second team, 6-1. Ruth Nott and Barb Clemett were the respective team skips.

Volleyball

A select PHE II team climaxed a brilliant undefeated season with a 15-4, 8-10, 14-10 match defeat of PHE III in the finals Thursday. Both teams remained so evenly matched during play that only the clock gave the winners the advantage at the final whistle. Pharmacy, first place winners of League Three, remained undefeated until they met PHE II in the semi-finals and lost out 15-6, 6-10, and 15-3. PHE I was tops in League II with UC placing close behind.

Archery

Interfac bowmen innovated an "A" Tournament for advanced archers and a "B" Tournament for beginners to give the latter a fairer chance at the spoils. PHE II was high scorer in the "A" round (4 ends each at 15, and 20 yards on a 24" target) with 810 points followed by UC, Vic and PHE III. In the "B" round (with a 36" target) Vic I led UC, PHE I, Vic II and P&OT II with a 740 total. High scorers for the meets were Gail White (II PHE) with 416 and Edith Suekis (I Vic) with 388.

Bowling

Vic-ites, Liz Armstrong, Junith Barron, Carolyn Ball, Anita Blaauw and Beverly Ball accumulated 2256 points to capture the top team score in the interfaculty championships. Vic also placed second to give their college a total point-count of 30 with PHE trailing with 17 and Dents 7. Sharon Fisher (II Dents) pulled off individual scoring honors with 634, 56 points ahead of second-place finisher, Liz Armstrong (II Vic).

Fencing

The Fencing Tournament took its first bow into Interfac competition this year. Out of 26 participants, 10 made the finals with five winning in each pool. Debbie Webster (SMC IV) fenced her way to first place with Carolyn Morris (I Vic), placing in that order.

Swimming

A bulletin from the ever-active swim club gave Carol McBain the Seaway Swim Trophy in the swift time of 8 hours and 43 minutes. The swimmers were only allowed to swim 75 lengths a day to make up the 800-mile total. Wendy Livingston III UC placed second in 10 hours, 32 minutes.

Skiing

Victoria's Juni Barron took first and second places in the downhill and slalom respectively to help her team to an overall first place team standing in the interfac ski meet. Jan Staples, also of Vic, contributed her third and fourth standing in the two events to give Vic a 25-point total, only 8 points ahead of St. Mike's. Heidi Kemper, the sole St. Mike's entrant, made up for her lack of support with a 36.1-sec. slalom run for first place and a 12.2-second downhill run for second. A team from POTS was third with 7 points and PHE fourth with 3.

Clarke faces Bruce Kidd after world record 3-mile

By UNCLE HARRY

The track monolith from Hart House hits the airwaves again tomorrow after a two-week layoff, sending eight performers to compete in the New York Knights of Columbus Indoor Games.

Heading the contingent will be University of Toronto's Bruce Kidd, who will provide the major opposition for Australia's Ron Clarke in the two-mile run. Clarke lost the first two races on his current American board tour, but surged back to win his last three appearances, including a world-record 13:12.4 three-miles last week in New York.

Kidd is making his third and final pilgrimage to Madison Square Garden this season, earlier having won races at the Millrose and NYAC Games. In 1962, Kidd won the NY KofC two-mile run in 8:59.5.

This will be Kidd's last outing against Clarke before the Olympic 10,000 metres final in Tokyo next October. Clarke's recent world record for that distance marks him as morning line favorite for the Tokyo race.

In the alumnus contingent, Bill Crothers steps down from his usual 1,000-yard distance to try the 600-yard run. Crothers faces opposition from Yale's Jay Luck, and the Marine Corps' Charles Buchta, both of whom have won races over 600 yards on the boards this season.

Other members of the Hart House touring team are George Shepherd (1,000 yards), Dave Bailey (one mile), and a mile relay quartet.

INTERFACULTY ROUNDUP

Vic, PHE take first place in top puck & cage groups

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Victoria College Searlet and Gold eked out a close 2-1 win over University College Redmen Monday to edge the Cinderella team for the Group I hockey title by a single point, in the final game of the year.

Stu Grasham and Rick Elliot counted for Vic, Jody Curran for Redmen. All scoring came in the first period as Vic was content to check every UC move in the second half while Brian Lyons turned in some excellent stops in nets for the winners.

Physical and Health Education took the third and final playoff spot in Group I in a well-played scoreless tie with St. Michael's College A. Both goalies, Ron Belcher for PHE and Casey Soden for the Irish, turned in sparkling performances backed by able defensive corps. The Irish need a win to take the last playoff spot from an ever-improving squad from Hart House.

A pair of nothing games in Group II saw Trinity A run its record to 10-2 with a 3-2 win over St. Mike's B, and Don Stemp scored four times to give Meds A a 6-1 rout over Dents A.

Jr. SPS took the second and last Group III playoff berth with a close 6-4 win over UC II. Steve Wilson had a pair for Skule and Len Good and Tony DiCorpo each had two for UC. A 3-2 Pharmacy A win over PHE II then killed any playoff hopes for the latter.

Group IV is still undecided pending the result of last night's late game between Law and Wycliffe. Forestry A is currently tied with Wycliffe in second place.

Most intermediate league titles were decided in the past week.

Bruce Burgess scored goals in a 4-2 win for SPS I over SPS II, while St. Mike's C, with a pair from Bill Fox, took a 5-2 Group I decision from Dents B. SPS I (5-0-1) took the top spot in Group I, followed by the Irish at 5-1.

Defending intermediate champions, Vic IV took top spot in Group II with 5-4 squeaker over SPS V, which played the entire game with six attackers. Al Crosbie had two for Vic, Jim Dickinson potted the same number for Skule.

Three goals in the last four minutes gave UC Utica Clubs a 4-2 tie with Dentistry C. UC took the Group IV title with a record of 5-0-1 against Dentistry's 4-0-2.

Architecture pulled of a 3-2 upset over previously undefeated New College in Division II.

BASKETBALL

Physical and Health Education took the Group I interfac basketball title yesterday with a 14-19 romp over last-place Sr. Skule, thus eliminating Skule from playoff contention. Andy Klimas was again the big man with 22 points for the winners, while Grant Leishman made a valiant effort with 13 points in a losing cause.

UC's junior Redmen continue to roll along in Group II, making it nine wins in eleven starts with a 34-20 win over St. Mike's B. Hans Tannemaggi hooped a dozen for the winners.

WATER POLO

PHE continued to roll along on top of Group I water polo with a 6-0 win over Sr. Skule. Tom Muranyi scored three for PHE.

New College is on top of Group II after an 8-3 win over Vic II, paced by a four-goal output from Ron Smith.

A third contest saw Jim Parker score four of five goals for SPS III in a 5-0 shutout of SPS IV.

Cagers go on T.V. in Hamilton, fourth place at stake against Mac

By PAUL HENDERSON

SO YOU THOUGHT the Leaf-Ranger deal was big stuff? You considered the Liston-Clay fiasco to be the big sports event sent over the TV this year? You were wrong. They were nothing. Varsity cagers are about to steal the spotlight.

Blues make their television debut tonight when they meet McMaster Marauders in Hamilton.

The game is to be taped by CHCH-TV and will be shown on Channel 11 Saturday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. The coverage is part of CHCH's campaign to promote the expansion drive being conducted by McMaster.

Marauders have traditionally put forth special efforts to overpower Blues in the Mac Drill Hall and are not expected to revert to a display of hospitality to impress the television audience. Last year, Marauders edged Blues, 68-64. Blues however, defeated Mac, 103-81 in Hart House earlier this season.

Blues are currently stagnated in the 500-per cent doldrums and hope to rise above this mark with victories in their final two encounters. Blues close out the schedule against Queen's in Toronto Saturday. Varsity possesses a record of 5-5, good enough for 4th place, but can overtake 3rd-spot Western (7-4) if Windsor obliges by defeating Mustangs in the last contest of the season.

On the other hand, a McMaster win tonight and a Varsity loss to Queen's will knock Blues into 5th place, currently held by Marauders. Windsor Lancers and Waterloo Warriors have clinched first and second spots respectively.

One position definitely not clinched is that of league scoring champion. Varsity guard Dave West is still enconced on the top rung with an average of 25.0 points per game. But Jerry Raphael scored 35 on the weekend to bring his average to 24.4 while West was inactive.

The Waterloo centre is 2.1 points ahead of defending champion Tom Williamson of Western. Williams' rate of 22.3 is slightly lower than his winning mark of 22.4 compiled last year.

EARN and LEARN THIS SUMMER

SCM Summer Work Projects provide students with the opportunity to live communally and study together while they are working at a summer job. In some cases the employment for students is secured in advance by the SCM. In other cases, the projects are so located as to assure maximum possibilities for securing work. There are about 20 students (10 of each sex) and directors in each project. Accommodation is provided and students are encouraged to live frugally so as to save money for returning to the University in the fall. The evening study programme relates to the topic of the projects which are as follows:

INDUSTRIAL PROJECT	Toronto
INDUSTRIAL PROJECT	Montreal
MENTAL HOSPITAL	Toronto
MENTAL HOSPITAL	Montreal
INNER CITY	Toronto
WHITE COLLAR	Winnipeg
PEACE	Toronto
CANADIEN/CANADIAN	Montreal

Queen's Cup champions decide school still comes before hockey

By GORD BELLMORE

Varsity Blues, new Queen's Cup champions, will not compete in the National college hockey finals at Kingston, March 13 and 14.

The players decided in a team meeting Monday that the date of the games is too close to final exams for them to go. Since Blues are now finished their regular schedule, playing in the Nationals would require the team to practise regularly for the next three weeks.

While every player would relish the opportunity to win the national crown (and Blues would be favorites if they participated), most feel the time involved would be better spent studying.

It was a mature decision, and coach Joe Kane said he was proud his players had decided against going in favour of school.

In a way, the Kingston tournament would be anticlimactic. Blues had built themselves up to last week's championship over the season and especially over the difficult final game.

With four games remaining in the schedule, four teams had approximately equal chances, mathematically, to win. Of the four, Blues had the most difficult opposition and still won going away.

Winning the Queen's Cup was the primary target and the team, to a man, worked hard all season. With the exception of the Christmas vacation, Blues practised or played every school night since November. And anyone who has seen Joe Kane's practices can appreciate the meaning of this fact.

In that space Blues played 23 games, won 18, lost 3 and tied 2. The only regular season games they lost was a 1-0 decision to Montreal Carabins in Montreal, and they should have won that game on their play.

With the decision to skip the National Championships, last Friday's game against Laval was the official appearance for several Blues veterans. Varsity hosts Western Mustangs Thursday night at Varsity Arena in an informal exhibition game.

Biggest names that have just finished outstanding college careers for Toronto are two-time most-valuable-player and Dr. W. Dafeo Trophy winner Ian Sinclair and Captain Sonny Osborne. Both have played a lot of hockey over the years for Blues and they will be almost impossible to replace.

Varsity will suffer even more damage to the defence that Kane built so carefully this year as aggressive Bob Awrey and Peter Speyer are in graduating years. Speyer, however, is not certain if he will return next year for further schooling.

George Olah moves on to McMaster for a course in physical education and will be on the other side of the rink next season. Stu McNeil, who didn't play much this year because he was sidelined by an injury, also graduates in June.

Kane himself is uncertain at this time about his future with the team. He is very busy business man and has a young family that requires much of his time. More, he says, than he is devoting to them at present.

Whatever happens, Blues will have a big rebuilding job next year, especially at centre and defence.

Stray Shots: The Western game is intended to give the London crew a chance to see how it measures up to Senior Intercollegiate competition. Mustangs now in the Ontario League, hope to enter the big league when they get an arena on their campus. Game time is 5:30 p.m.

VARSITY HOCKEY FANS NEVER HAD IT SO GOOD

WHILE FOOTBALL FANS at the University of Toronto have been starving for the past three years on a diet of last-place finishes, hockey enthusiasts have become downright spoiled. The hockey Blues have won two Queen's Cup in the last three seasons, but what is of more significance for the action-starved non-participants of this campus, the hockey has been superb entertainment tinged with the spectacular.

Two seasons back, Blues picked up an 18-year-old unknown from Stratford named Steve Monteith. Monteith, who had never played above Junior "C" hockey, joined veterans Bill Kennedy and George Hicken on Blues' first line and this trio showed fans a razzle-dazzle type of play that is seldom seen even in the National Hockey League.

Kennedy had been recognized as one of the best puck-carriers in all hockey, and before very many faceoffs Monteith was knocking on the door to this exclusive club. Steve also looked like the fastest thing on blades since Gillette invented the super blue blade.

When the season ended Blues had won the Queen's Cup, Kennedy had tied for first place in league scoring, Monteith was third and Hicken fifth. The entire line was selected to the college league's first all-star team, an unprecedented feat.

But just as the super blue blade gave way to the stainless steel variety, Blues came up with something more spectacular last season—the Mop Line. Ward Passi, a freshman from Sudbury, became the new rookie sensation of the Varsity stable and together with Monteith and Sonny Osborne, an experienced Junior "A" player, terrorized the league more than the big line of the previous year.

The Moppers' blazing speed, pin-point picture passing and aggressive checking could not be contained by any opposition and when the season ended Monteith was first in league scoring, Passi second and Osborne third. And once again, an entire Varsity forward line was selected to the first all-star team.

By mid-season this year it appeared the reign of terror was over. Passi had suffered a broken leg and the Mop Line was no more. Blues' fans would just have to be satisfied with a team that won games without leaving the opposition limp from exhaustion and cross-eyed from trying to follow the passing patterns of the big line.

THE MONTEITHS MAY HAVE STARTED A DYNASTY

ENTER HANK Monteith.

As if one of the Monteith clan wasn't enough, Blues now had another. The younger Monteith was Blues' top scorer for the first seven games of the season but when he was united with brother Steve and Osborne in the eighth game the sparks really began to fly.

This threesome embarked on a scoring rampage that even topped the exploits of the Mop Line. In the final five games of the season the line had 20 goals and 54 points and its wide-open style of play and artistic passing patterns made spectators rub their eyes in disbelief. It was the Mop Line all over again.

The results of this late-season surge are well known. Hank Monteith moved to the top of league scoring, Steve is second and Osborne sixth. And Blues won their seventh Queen's Cup in 10 years with an impressive 9-1-2 record.

The Monteiths are almost sure bets for all-star recognition but Blues' record of having an entire forward line on the first all-star team is not likely to be continued. Osborne got off to a slow start with only three points in his first seven games while centres Bobby Apps of McMaster and Don Mervyn of Waterloo were prolific scorers all season and are ahead of the Toronto "wizard" in league scoring.

Any commentary on Blues' success this season would not be complete without reference to the defence. Although the big first line provided the goals, a Queen's Cup victory would not have been possible without the fine work of Ian Sinclair, Peter Speyer, Bob Awrey and Bob Hamilton.

Blues had the Mop Line in 1963 but failed to win the title because they lacked a solid defence. This season it was a different story. Sinclair, referred to as the best defenceman in college hockey anywhere, rejoined the team after one year at McMaster and was the key to the sparkling play along the rearguard. Hamilton showed veteran class in his rookie year and Speyer and Awrey were tremendously improved over the previous season when they had played defence for the first time.

Although the title victory was a team effort, one other body deserves special praise—coach Joe Kane, described recently by a prominent Toronto columnist as "burly, stocky, young and . . . well prepared." It was Kane who put together the top forward line after Passi and Stu McNeil were injured. And it was Kane who instilled in his players the belief that they were the best in the league and should not be satisfied with second best.

Blues didn't have to be satisfied with second best.

WHAT'S THIS — REST PERIOD DURING A HOCKEY GAME?

Actually, players and officials are searching for a contact lens lost by Blues' Chris Speyer (19) during Friday's game against Laval. Pictures of this type are becoming commonplace in the modern sports world.

Will write exams in Varsity Arena

Up to 600 students at one time will write their final papers in the university's newest examination room—Varsity Arena.

And exams in the one-hour Arts and Science pass options in religious knowledge or other subjects, usually scheduled for the first day in the time-table, have not been included this year, said John M. Mills, assistant secretary of the faculty.

He said the regular lecturers will handle the exams by themselves before the finals.

But still there will be 650 separate papers written for Arts and Science from April 20 to May 8.

"We have the problem of too many students in too many courses with too many papers in too few rooms in such a short period," said Mr. Mills, who for the seventh year has the job of setting the timetable.

The exact time table is not ready yet, but it may be ready before the usual time in late March. And there is no official date for the end of lectures, but most instructors plan to end two weeks before exams begin.

"Last year we undertook an experiment with Wednesday evening exams with a heavy heart, instead of extending the timetable into a fourth week. We gave it up this year," he said. Some people were writing exams through the day, then at 9:30 the same night and then next morning.

The new timetable will try to avoid scheduling more than one paper a day for each student, unless there are supplementals from the previous year.

Mr. Mills said his office had considered using IBM machines to set the table for several years, but at present the time involved for programming would take longer than doing it by hand.

The examination problem is increased since the several thousand students taking university degrees through the night course will be writing their finals along with the regulars.

Insane jaywalker

Chalk another one up for our side. Another student has beat another jaywalking summons, but by an original technique. He pleaded insanity.

Bill Connelly (II SMC) pleaded temporary insanity in York Township Magistrate's Court yesterday to a charge of walking against a red light in Forest Hill.

The presiding magistrate admitted that the excuse was original, and that he had heard jokes—but never pleas—to that effect.

Connelly explained that he was preoccupied with worries about essays and tests when he got off a bus and started walking across Bathurst St. He said the light was amber when he first noticed it.

The magistrate remarked that he had read the recently published statistics about emotional stress at U of T.

Connelly was given a suspended sentence. He saved $5 in fines and $3 in court costs.

Bissell intervenes in SAC--B of G power struggle

University of Toronto President Claude Bissell has personally taken the initiative in the Students' Administrative Council-board of governors struggle for SAC autonomy.

He said in a statement issued Wednesday:

"At my request the board of governors bylaw for the Students' Administrative Council will not be on the agenda for the meeting of the board on Thursday, Feb. 27. It is necessary to have further discussions, in which I plan to participate fully. The issues raised concern the university context. This process will take time, but it is better to move slowly and surely than to make serious errors through haste."

SAC President Doug Ward (III Emm) welcomed Dr. Bissell's move as the first thing needed to achieve the aims the council indicated at a special meeting Tuesday.

The president's action will postpone consideration of Ward's report to the board, as amended at that meeting, on a proposed bylaw concerning the SAC.

It was to have been considered with the bylaw Thursday.

Ward said: "In the present state there is misunderstanding on both sides which would not be resolved by decree."

"I only Wednesday found out the limits I had thought were imposed on our budget are not as strict as I believed. This alone leads me to think there should be discussion, if either or both sides don't now have all the pertinent information."

He stressed that this discussion did not imply that the SAC was an equal of the board of governors, since the legal opinion the council heard Tuesday indicated that it is strictly "a creature of the University of Toronto Act," but that the discussion should be within the framework of this status.

"This development means we will be able to have discussion, not just private consultation."

"I am confident that mutual discussion and negotiations will be much more fruitful for both sides," he concluded.

Bobby Fischer, 20-year old five-time winner of the U.S. Open Chess Championship, displays his award-winning strategy in Hart House last night, before beginning the "chess simul" in which he played 50 persons simultaneously. Fischer, who is considered one of the world's best, first won the U.S. Championship at the age of 14. Among his opponents last night were many of Toronto's best. By press time, 12 had resigned, and no one was close to upsetting the champ.

FANNY DIRTY AFTER ALL

Fanny Hill was declared obscene yesterday by Judge Everett L. Weaver, and 2,000 copies of the book seized from two C. Cole and Co. Ltd. bookstores are to be forfeited.

"I cannot conceive of anything more justly entitled to be called pornographic than pornography itself," Judge Weaver stated.

Last week Dr. Robertson Davies, master of Massey College, said: "If you are going to write about a girl like Fanny you have to have a lot of sex."

Judge Weaver said the book's happy ending tends to recommend a life of prostitution to its readers.

UBC pot smokers haven

VANCOUVER (CUP) — Marijuana use is more prevalent at the University of British Columbia than anyone had realized previously.

A three-week survey by Ubyssy reporter Ann Burge revealed that its use is widespread among students, that it is being grown in their homes, and that anyone who wishes can buy the drug in Vancouver.

During the past years three UBC students have been arrested on marijuana charges.
None went to jail, largely because the narcotics code has recently been changed to allow the individual justice to decide on penalties in such cases.

One of the major findings of the survey was the availability of the drug in the Vancouver area.

One user is quoted as saying: "Anyone who knows the right people has no trouble buying marijuana in Vancouver."

"And it is easy to grow.
You can plant it outdoors in the summertime here or grow it in a flower pot."

From talking to a number of users Miss Burge concluded that the plant is being grown in living rooms, back porches and back yards.

Marijuana cigarettes cost between 50 cents and $2 apiece in Vancouver, but the cost for home-grown cigarettes is much cheaper, in some cases as low as five cents.

Detective Sgt. Gillies of the city police narcotics squad admits that the only way the squad can find marijuana growing in private homes is through informers.

However, most Vancouverites wouldn't recognize a marijuana plant if they did see one, he said.

E. M. Elmore, senior counsellor at the Narcotics addiction Centre said the drug is not considered a prelude to heroin or other narcotics as it is in the United States.

"The group I know have been smoking marijuana for years. Not one has become an addict. They think heroin is silly," he said.

Under prevailing legal and judicial conditions in British Columbia, university students convicted of using marijuana are not normally sent to jail, but are put on probation, usually with specific conditions that they avoid the drug.

Old staff leaves U of M paper

MONTREAL (CUP) — Yesterday's issue of Le Quartier Latin, the University of Montreal newspaper, was the last put out by the staff which resigned earlier this month over a Student Council vote of censure.

The entire staff of the paper resigned after AGEUM (Association Generale des Etudiants de l'Universite de Montreal) passed a resolution disapproving of an editorial criticizing U of M Rector Monseigneur Irene Lussier for alleged conflict of duties in regard to a text-book monopoly.

AGEUM secretary Louis

Cote expressed regret about the resignations, but said that AGEUM had the duty to disapprove of the editorial which it considered "injurious and seriously damaging to the reputation of the Rector and thus prejudicial to the University."

Director Guy Bertrand and editorialist Emmanuel Garon had resigned immediately after the vote of censure but agreed to stay on until replacement could be found.

But then the entire staff of the paper in a signed statement reaffirmed their "total solidarity regarding the legiti-mate reaction of the directors," and promised not to accept new positions on the paper from now to the end of the year.

The Quebec provincial civil service commission will hold a special inquiry into the actions of 12 provincial officials charged with having unduly profited from their positions in the recent report of the royal commission.

The earlier report had affirmed that the civil servants, with a number of other persons, had written and sold textbooks while acting as members of the educational subcommittees responsible for choosing the books.

Co-op interested in French House

In a recent editorial, The Varsity suggested that either SAC or the Campus Co-op consider setting up a French House. These are the reactions of the presidents of the two organizations.

John Hood (President of the board of directors of Campus Co-op):

"I think it would benefit the Co-op. It would enrich it.

"The idea will be given serious consideration at a future meeting of the board of directors. We'll study it for setting up before next year.
"At the last meeting it was announced that we should expand anyway."

Doug Ward (President of SAC):

"Most people interested in French Canada tend to spread around the university. "If they were all together in the same house, it would be just as clannish as any other fraternity. If the interest in French Canada could be permeated around the campus,

I say OK, but let's not have a French ghetto.

"If some interested people want to go ahead and study the proposal, I say all right.

Special Gateway issue seized, released

EDMONTON (CUP-Special)
—Last Friday 7,000 copies of a special Varsity Guest Weekend Edition of the Gateway, University of Alberta student newspaper, were seized by officials acting under the orders of Students Union President Wes Cragg.

He said he considered the issue "in extremely bad taste".

The papers were later returned to the editors without explanation.

Several members of the student union executive were apparently angered by a front-page editorial which attacked rising education costs and the provincial government's educational policies.

The issue carried three critical editorials and a cartoon labelling the campus "a school for the rich".

A motion calling for the resignation of the editor in chief, Branny Schepanovich, was introduced on Sunday at a meeting of the Students' Council, but was defeated.

"It can't see what the fuss was all about," said one councilman during the debate. "Until this issue was foolishly suppressed, no one thought it was offensive."

Election results at HH, UC, Meds

HART HOUSE

A complicated electoral system kept ballot-counters at Hart House busy until late Wednesday night.

A full slate of 60 candidates ran for 40 positions on five committees—House, Art, Library, Debates and Music—with eight positions on each committee to be filled.

No statistics as to the turnout at the polls were released by the House Committee.

To ensure popular representation, each candidate must first obtain at least 30 per cent of the number of votes obtained by the poll-leader. The top eight vote-getters are then considered. But to ensure a broad college and faculty representation, no more than three candidates from any one college or faculty can be elected to any one committee.

So it sometimes happens that a candidate who polls in the top eight will not be elected. In this case, officials turn to candidates who poll ninth, 10th and so on. Also considered in the representation, are the three "carryovers" who are elected from each of the previous year's committees.

Many close votes resulted in recounts proceeding well into the night after the polls closed. A dead tie in the House Committee meant that nine candidates instead of the usual eight were elected.

The following candidates were elected:

ART COMMITTEE: C. G. Dunbar (I Trin), I. M. Ewing (II Vic), D. A. Legge (II Premeds), T. G. Munro (II Meds), J. St. G. O'Brian, (II Trin), P. I. Rhodes (II Trin), E. V. Rosen (III UC), D. E. Tiberius (II APSC).

DEBATES COMMITTEE: I. Binnie (II Law), P. H. T. Connolly (II SMC), H.A. Goldkind (III UC), M. R. Gray (III Trin), J. P. Huzel (III Vic), M. A. Levine (III UC), D. J. Sefton (III APSC), H. S. Simmons (SGS).

HOUSE COMMITTEE: J. C. Brown (I Premeds), J. A. Courtney (II APSC), F. G. Felkai (III UC), R. Guisio (II SMC), D. E. Moggridge (III Trin), W. J. Orr (II Vic), H. M. Rossman (II Law), L. Waverman (IV UC), J. F. Wilson (II For).

LIBRARY COMMITTEE: D. Carnegie (III Trin), G. B. Davidson (I Trin), P. L. Drake (II Vic), B. Kidd (III UC), J. P. O'Neill (I SMC), D. G. Payne (II Vic), A. Slesers (I Med), J. N. Zaritsky (II Trin).

MUSIC COMMITTEE: J. T. Bates (I Premeds), C. W. Henn (II Trin), J. Hunt (III SMC), J. D. D. McKeown (II Vic), D. M. Monro (IV APSC), J. P. Nevins (I Law), J. D. Patterson (I New), J. D. Rutherford (I PHE).

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

"These are the closest election results in my recollection that University College ever had," President Phil Epstein of the UC Literary and Athletic Society announced last night.

It took more than six hours to tally the results, because the committee had to recount the votes for male SAC representative several times.

Finally Don Rogers (III UC) was re-elected.

Other positions went to Peter Williams (III UC), treasurer; Margaret MacKay (I UC), WUS representative, Wilf Day (II UC), CUS representative; Patricia Gelber (I UC), female Blue and White representative; David Depoe (I UC), male Blue and White representative.

Sheldon Kirsh (II UC), was elected councillor; Ed Keystone (II UC), student service director, and Daniel Cooper (II UC), literary director.

The Maurice Cody Memorial Prize "for public speaking as manifested at the society's open meetings and for interest in University College and its activities" was awarded to 63—64 President Phil Epstein (III UC).

Robert G. Evans (III UC) was named "best all-round person" of the graduating class.

As reported in The Varsity earlier this week, candidates for the other nine positions, including president, were acclaimed.

MEDICINE

The results of Monday's elections for next year's Medical Society were announced yesterday by Secretary Joan Dixon.

Herman Hugenholtz (V Meds), was elected president; Bruce Pearson (IV Meds), vice-president; Dave Palframan (III Meds), treasurer; Gill Allen (II Meds), secretary.

Bob McGee (V Meds), is the new president of the Meds athletic society; Ann Haag (V Meds), was elected president of the Meds women's undergraduate association.

Mary Robertson (III Meds) and Michael Schwartz (III Meds) were elected SAC representatives.

New Liberal executive

Three out of the five members of the new executive of the University of Toronto Liberal Club are from Trinity College.

Anthony Careless (II Trin) was acclaimed president at Wednesday's annual elections in Sidney Smith Hall.

Other officers elected by the 50 students present are Colin Campbell (II Vic), first vice-president; Bill Holt (II Trin), second vice-president; Roy Clark (IV Trin), treasurer; and Lee Firestone (I UC), secretary.

STUDENTS

As I stated at New College last week, having analysed the nature of money—that it was neither gold nor silver nor any other substance, nor ever had been nor could be; That there never was nor could be a gold standard or measure of values, I had done nothing to solve our economic problems. I still had to work out a practical plan for the issuance, and the control of the volume of our requirements of money.

The essential purpose of money is to enable us to exchange our specialized production and services efficiently. The first question that arises is, how is our supply of money to be brought into being? I discovered that our private banks were performing that function despite a provision in the British North America Act giving the government power to coin and regulate the value of our money units. It seems that the members of the government at that time knew so little about money that they thought our pocket and till money was all the money we had. Even the bankers didn't know that they were creating money by monetizing the assets of the borrowers—including all branches of government.

Upon thinking through the facts of the situation—that the so-called credit banks were claiming to extend was actually money issued against the credit of the borrowers, and was the important money—ninety five percent of the money with which we were doing business, I concluded that the government should coin and otherwise create, and regulate the value of, our total requirements of money, as was obviously the intention of the framers of the B.N.A. Act.

How to have the government do this was the problem. What were the private banks doing—how were they doing it? Having thought through the facts that every loan the private banks made was the creation of new money, and that they were issuing and cancelling a money half dozen to a dozen or more times in financing every item of production as it was processed to completion, it was evident that our money was costing too much. Why not issue money once in the life time of our most useful and needed units of durable wealth—our public capital projects and our homes—and recall it as such units depreciated, and in so doing provide ample money for all purposes?

I then realized that we had been developing along two planes of production and service enterprises, one public and the other private, and that these dual activities must be financed on different bases if we were to have a truly free enterprise system. Having all the facts it was a simple matter to work out all the details for a sound, fool-proof, politician-proof system for financing our dual economy that can be adopted with gain for every one.

Our educators, politicians, editors, churchmen have known about this plan for over thirty years, yet they remain silent. Thousands of responsible citizens have expressed approval of the plan. No one who has studied the plan has made a specific objection to it. Yet it seems that there is more interest in plans that offer something for nothing: more welfare rather than jobs. Can you imagine how poverty stricken we would be if it were not for our vast store of natural resources that we are squandering for "beer and skittles" instead of using them to develop this bountiful land? Can no one SEE that in the matter of foreign trade and national development we are in an entirely different position to that of comparatively resourceless, overpopulated countries?

Liquor, Love And Teen-Agers

Teen-agers who drink increase their chances of becoming problem drinkers in later life. In March Reader's Digest read why liquor and sex are such "frequent bedfellows". The tragedies that can result from teen-age drinking are revealed in an informative article—"Booze and You". Get your copy of Reader's Digest today.

a problem revealed

The results of the recent student mental health questionnaire and the discussions at the mental health symposium last weekend have brought to light some startling, if not alarming, facts. The answers to a questionnaire distributed among deans and principals make the situation appear even worse.

The question sheet distributed among students revealed that 50 per cent of the men and 64 per cent of the women who answered have at some time or another felt in need of advice or counsel. It also showed that 75 per cent of the men and 63 per cent of the women were not aware of the fact that there are psychiatric counseling facilities at the university.

During the symposium, Dr. Graham Blaine of Harvard said that a university the size of the University of Toronto requires eight full-time psychiatrists. The U of T now has three part-time psychiatrists.

But even more disturbing are the opinions expressed by the deans and principals. Generally, they seemed to think there is not much of a problem. Only two college heads out of 13 said the number of students requiring help was as high as 50 per cent.

Others set their figures as low as one or two persons a year, some at none; and at least one answer indicated that the person who filled it in believes mental health is some sort of subversive plot.

Their answer also showed that a wide variety of persons are responsible for providing counselling. These persons range from an administrative secretary, to academic staff members, to no one in particular.

While it required the surveys and the symposium to prove that a problem does exist, it is strange that no one appears to have been vitally concerned with the problem in the past, despite the indications.

The fact that hundreds of students fail every year, scores withdraw, many have nervous breakdowns and a few commit suicide should have been some indication of the size of the problem. The fact that the health service referred only 233 students to psychiatric consultants last year should have indicated that the existing services were not being properly used.

But these factors had little impact, and it took last week-end's conference to dramatize the situation. The question which now remains is: What is going to be done?

The students have pointed out the problem, but do they have the resources to do more? It is obvious that what is needed is more investigation and a concrete plan for the future.

The proper body to conduct such an investigation would be a special presidential advisory committee, such as that on accommodations and facilities.

If this cannot or will not be done in the immediate future, then the students will have no recourse but to investigate further themselves.

there's hope yet

President Claude Bissell's decision to intervene in the Students' Administrative Council board of governors hassle over student autonomy, while not by any means premature, is most encouraging.

Dr. Bissell said he requested the matter not be considered at yesterday's board meeting; that he intends to participate fully in further discussions; and that the problem must be resolved in a university context.

Presumably Dr. Bissell means by the latter that the issue will be resolved by all concerned—the SAC, the administration and the board—and not by a couple of board members and the vice-president of administration.

Hopefully he means there will be open discussion, which can result in a mutually satisfactory solution being reached, instead of a "solution" being arrived at by the board and then imposed on the students.

If Dr. Bissell's intentions are to establish a framework for mutual discussion, with the possibility of an equitable solution, the initiative now lies with the SAC to present its case as forcefully and as intelligently as possible.

Realists and not romantics are true friends of Africa

by DAVID LLOYD-JONES

In the four years since the great year of African emancipation, changes in attitude are noticeable both among the nationals of the newly liberated countries and those on this continent who were sympathetic to their cause.

1960 was in Africa a year of feverish activity and high feeling. The final dissolution of the British Empire seemed at hand, and Africans rejoiced at the prospect. White settlers on the other hand feared for their futures, and were putting up their legislative last ditch stands against independence.

On this side of the Atlantic, black nationalism was matched by corresponding feelings among American Negroes. It was then that Max Roach wrote his celebrated Freedom Now Suite, a moving combination of African and Afro-American music which embodied the feelings of the time.

There was in North America then a tendency for white liberals to identify with both African and Negro American causes, but action based on the identification was, because of the temper of the times, over-romantic and less useful than it might have been.

Typical of actions of the 'North American white romantic' type was that of Joseph P. Kennedy in airlifting to American universities a planeload of African students. (1960 was an election year, you remember). Fine... a noble gesture, but the same money used less romantically would have done more than it actually did if spent in Africa on African schools.

The unfortunate aspect of this initial romanticism was that it was bound to lead to disillusionment; and one of the ugliest features of the disillusionment with African nationalism was the press vulgarity and intemperance to which Stephen Lewis referred at Wymilwood on Feb. 23.

COMMENT

We, like the governors of the newly independent nations, should realise that the end of the British Empire does not mean an immediate transition into utopia; and that just that the Africans' cause was right does not mean that all their actions are bound to be righteous. African leaders have, in most cases, made rational adjustments in their ways of thinking; they have abandoned the rash optimism of the early days of independence and settled down to the long slow grind of planning and working for gradual advancement.

It is unfortunate that intellectual opinion in white North America has in many instances been incapable of making the same transition. The switch from romanticism to practicality is the exception, rather than the rule; student airlifts are giving way to more rational forms of aid, such as foreign service volunteer work and the donation of money for use in Africa, but less mature people have made the irrational switch from the feelings of four years ago by condemning today what they worshipped yesterday.

A true assessment of African affairs cannot be grasped by those whose hopes have been betrayed by 'a bunch of African dictators'; such people betrayed themselves by being unrealistic in the first place. Rather, a sensible view of the role, importance, and needs of the emerging nations can only be gained by admitting the original error of over-optimism, and then using the same goodwill and sympathy which were willing to give at the time of the first flood of liberation.

Humanism is alternative to Christianity

by GEORGE BRYANT

"I happen to believe that Christianity is becoming increasingly unattractive to the average person. Some people have come to lead a double life — they're not Christian, but they profess to be because it represents the American way of life. Humanism tries to appeal to those people who oppose the dogmatic ethic of the Christian religion, but are concerned with the moral issues of modern life."

The epitome of the rare campus intellectual, Tim Adamson (III APSC), president of the University Humanist and Unitarian Society, was speaking of what he believed was "a great need for a society that is frankly agnostic and free-thinking on campus."

Soft-spoken, but intensely serious, Adamson came here from England 18 months ago. At the University of Toronto, he was surprised to find only a small humanist group for he was accustomed to the philosophy's wide acceptance in Britain. At Oxford University, the largest group on campus is the Humanists Society with a membership of 1,400. Part of the reason, he felt for the humanist's small size here that "the Student Christian Movement is enormous and it caters an awful lot to agnostics—it has some very liberal and agnostic topics."

Humanism, like Christianity, has evolved through the ages. Adamson attempted to define its present day meaning. First, he quoted Dr.

Corliss Lamont, president of the American Humanist Society: "Humanism challenges men to rely on their own intelligence, courage and effort in building their happiness and fashioning their destiny in this world of infinite possibilities."

Adamson then amplified his feelings about it: "To begin with, it is not a theology or an ethic so much—it is more an attitude. One of Humanism's real delights is that it stresses its ability to change with increased knowledge. We have to decide for ourselves what the 'good life' is, whereas those of the Christian faith are told what the 'good life' should be. Humanists have to determine their own moral values and goals, by rational and scientific means—not through mysticism," he said.

From this, it seemed that humanism might be considered anti-Christian and Adamson agreed with this view. "Well, humanists oppose all dogma, which is necessary to the Christian church, and we also reject many values of the church," he stated. Well, I queried, could he make a case for humanists being more moral than Christians? "Yes, I suppose so, simply because people who bother to call themselves humanists have to be much more concerned with moral questions," he answered.

In an age where secularism and the affluent materialistic spirit has come into popular acceptance, I wondered how humanism was faring. Adamson obviously was very interested in the implications of science on the traditional dogmatic of most Christian teaching. "I think, modern sciences has given real impetus to humanism in reducing the authority of the church to make statements about man and his place in the universe," he responded. He did feel, however, that just as the majority of us today do reject an immediate mystical element in life, so liberal Christianity is reflecting this and becoming more humanistic.

Adamson did believe that modern Christianity does have certain benefits for some people. "A lot of people would be very insecure and bewildered without these particular moral crutches. But for the people who have decided to make the break, Unitarianism can be very awful because it maintains the religious tradition, and at the same time, it brings one smoothly into the twentieth century."

Adamson would like to see a real choice presented to people on campus between Christianity and humanism. "I think people should get used to the idea that they don't have to profess to be Christians to get along in groups like the humanists and meet other people who are frankly doubters and agnostics." Thus, Adamson would like to see an SCM which was "more frankly Christian," and a larger free thinking group of people.

Alice, O.C.E., and teaching standards

"Once," said the Mock Turtle at last, with a deep sigh, "I was a real Turtle. When we were little, we went to school in the sea. The master was an old Turtle — we used to call him Tortoise —"

"Why did you call him Tortoise, if he wasn't one?" Alice asked.

"We called him Tortoise because he taught us," said the Mock Turtle angrily. "Really, you are very dull! Yes, we went to school in the sea, though you mayn't believe it. We had the best of educations — in fact, we went to school every day —"

"I've been to a day-school, too," said Alice. "You needn't be so proud as all that."

"With extras?" asked the Mock Turtle, "a little anxiously."

"Yes," said Alice; "we learned French and music"

"And washing?" said the Mock Turtle.

"Certainly not!" said Alice indignantly.

"Ah! Then yours wasn't a really good school," said the Mock Turtle in a tone of great relief. "Now, at OURS, they had, at the end of the bill, 'French, music, AND WASHING — extra.'"

"And how many hours a day did you do lessons?" said Alice.

"Ten hours the first day," said the Mock Turtle, "nine the next, and so on."

"What a curious plan!" exclaimed Alice.

"That's the reason they're called lessons," the Gryphon remarked: "because they lessen from day to day."

This was quite a new idea to Alice, and she thought it over a little before she made her next remark. "Then the eleventh day must have been a holiday?"

"Of course it was," said the Mock Turtle.

"And how did you manage on the twelfth?" Alice went on eagerly.

Although the Turtle never did answer Alice's question (the gryphon who will remember, got him to sing instead) one would not have been surprised to hear him say that on the twelfth day he and his fellows took lessons at the Ontario College of Education. Certainly the Tortoise himself must at one point have gone there because unless one has attended that College he cannot be a Tortoise.

Alice and the Mock Turtle would probably have found few essential differences between the Ontario College of Education and any of the other curious institutions down the rabbit hole. One would, for example, have been not at all surprised — indeed, he would have been relieved — to find it was in fact the White Rabbit who one day last fall paused in his lecture long enough to reassure his class that Plato's Cave Myth was just a story and that Plato really was not talking about a real cave with real men inside it at all. Or the Mad Hatter might well have been the one to demand of his classes in a recent examination in Educational Psychology which of four given height ranges between 56" and 74" one would expect to find in a group of two thousand fifteen-year-old boys. And surely it is only to avoid frightening prospective Alices away that no one has inscribed above the imposing Bloor Street entrance, so deceptively unlike a rabbit hole, those superbly appropriate words of the Queen of Hearts, "Off with their heads!"

Fortunately for the University, the College of Education lies at the very edge not only of the campus but also of the Graduate School. Though operated by the University of Toronto, it is completely controlled by the Ontario Department of Education. Nevertheless, to its academic courses at least, it admits only graduates of accredited universities.

And if anyone doubts that a degree, in itself means nothing, he would be well advised to study many of the university graduates presently enrolled at the Ontario

College of Education. It is a fact too often ignored by O.C.E.'s critics that the College can do only so much with the material supplied to it by the universities, none of which is a complete stranger to the degree-mill theory of university education and socio-economic-intellectual salvation. For many of its students, O.C.E., in its crab-like fashion, moves at exactly the right speed in just the right direction. The malignant circular complication of the situation becomes apparent when one recognizes that these people will go out and teach as they have been taught and in effect will reappear at the edge of the Rabbit hole a few years later.

There are, of course, a very few men and women at O.C.E. who want and ought to teach, and who constitute collectively one positive feature of the institution (one for which O.C.E. itself can take no credit). The desire of these people to teach is sufficiently strong that they are willing to be bored and insulted by the dilute and often distorted material of irrelevant education courses, and by the repetition of methodology courses which at best enforce one's grasp of the obvious and at worst provide large numbers of eager academic incompetents with slick ways of completing the distortions of which they are already eminently capable. Unlike the ignoble twelve hundred or more who escape to the summer session, this lonely remnant chooses to endure the manifold indignities and horrors of the winter course at O.C.E. As the year progresses the group establishes itself as an entity, developing a camaraderie within itself, an esprit de corps and good will, which may well be compared to the kinship among the passengers singing on the decks of the sinking Titanic.

Whatever their qualifications however, students enroll in O.C.E. because they must if they want to become tor-toises. O.C.E. is a training school in teaching methods. Beyond that it tries in a superficial and largely useless way to acquaint prospective teachers with the problems of school management and law, the 'discoveries' of educational psychology, and, for what it is worth, the history and philosophy of education. The student must take methods courses in three high school subjects which he has a chance to teach in the nine weeks of practice teaching (there are to be more next year) which most students agree are the most, if not the only, valuable weeks spent at, or at least in connection with, O.C.E.

Even as a training school however, there is some doubt about the validity of O.C.E.'s position. To begin with, most students at O.C.E. feel, or should feel, very unsure of themselves in teaching th-

"third option"; it is, it would seem, asking for a sufficiently spectacular miracle to demand academic competence in the one or two subjects concentrated in at university. Educational authorities in this province could do worse than to reexamine their tacit assumption that a technically trained, academically incompetent teacher is better than no teacher at all. Moreover, there seems to be no good reason why the content of the methods courses has to be delivered over the course of several months in lecture form. All that is said could be made available in pamphlets upon the content of which students could, if necessary, be examined a week or two after the pamphlets had been distributed. That way, students would have more time for study and practice teaching in their

Often the question arises as to the relative importance of heredity and environment in producing an individual. Any one individual is the product of the hereditary endowment received from his parents and such environmental influences as education, communication and economics. It is impossible by making observations on any one individual to conclude which of the two factors was more important in his development since the final result can be achieved only if both factors are operating. Skin color, for example, is due to both genetic and environmental factors. It would be impossible to tell, by observing only skin color, whether heredity or constant exposure to the sun produced this result.

The influence of environment can be measured only if we can have genetically identical organisms. Asexual organisms, such as amoeba, serve the purpose well since they reproduce by a process called fission which results in two offspring which are exact replicas of the parent. If different groups of amoebae, which originated from a common parent, are subjected to different environments, such as temperature or nutritional differences, then the resulting differences between groups can be ascribed solely to the environment.

It is impossible to obtain sexual organisms which are completely identical. However, it is possible by generations of inbreeding to obtain sexual organisms such as rats, mice, and poultry which are identical in many respects. One is, in effect, reducing the variation of characteristics in a group by planned selection. Thus it is possible to obtain pure lines of rats which are more sensitive to radiation or which can perform certain tests better than other lines.

O. C. E. (contd.)

chosen subject areas, activities which together constitute the most valuable methods of preparation and training the prospective teacher can employ.

Significantly, the mental vitality, the fact of deep intellectual involvement and mutual commitment, the sense of developed and developing wisdom which ideally characterize the academic community and which in part are the very qualities which justify its existence are absent from O.C.E. Though such deficiency is not of course peculiar to O.C.E. among educational institutions, the presence of such affliction in a teacher-training institute, the heart of an educational system, is a most inauspicious manifestation of the malignancy.

One who is sceptical might be tempted to remark that there could hardly exist an environment so totally negative in character. But at least two positively hopeful features of the Ontario College of Education do stand out. We have already men-

Heredity or environment?

The environment in this case, whether it be the dose of radiation or the test performed is constant and therefore the differences observed between the pure lines is due almost completely to genetic causes.

Unfortunately man does not like to be treated like a rat. In a democratic community it is rather difficult to conduct breeding experiments which will advance scientific knowledge. The human geneticist overcomes this difficulty by studying identical and fraternal twins, a method introduced by Sir Francis Galton in the middle of the 19th century.

Identical twins are those

Claude T., an example of heredity which originated from one egg and thus are genetically identical. Differences may arise due to pressures in the mother's womb or differences later on but they are identical in most features such as blood types, eye color, and sex. Fraternal twins, however, originated from two different eggs and thus are no more alike genetically than brother and sister.

An example of a trait studied by this method is the mental disease schizophrenia which occurs in about one per cent of the population. If identical twins are actually genetically identical, and if schizophrenia were due solely to genetic factors, then one would expect either both members or neither member of the pair to be schizophrenic. This agreement between pairs is called concordance. If one member of the pair differs from the other with respect to this trait it is called discordance.

If the trait were due predominantly to environmental factors then the frequency of concordance should be similar in fraternal twins and identical twins. However twin studies of schizophrenia have shown that the frequency of concordance is about 80 per cent in identical twins and only about 13 per cent in fraternal twins which strongly suggests a genetic basis behind schizophrenia.

Even such evidence as this is not conclusive. One must assume that environmental differences between fraternal twins are the same as environmental differences between identical twins, which is not always true. Often it is noted that identical twins tend to associate with each other more than fraternal twins and hence share a more common environment. But at least this is an honest attempt to decide the relative contributions of heredity and environment.

Today in the United States there are less honest attempts to understand the relative importance of heredity and environment. There are those who say that the Negro is inferior due to his inferior genetic endowment. These are called racists. There are those that say that the Negro would be equal to the white if he had equal socio-economic opportunities. These are called environmentalists. Neither view, I think, is based on fact but on emotional bias. Let us hope that in the future a more scientific approach to the heredity-environment problem will be initiated.

tioned the few individuals in attendance who should and will teach in spite of O.C.E. We should also mention, in the hope that more may be heard of and about them, the presence of a few bright and angry teachers of methodology in academic subjects at the college. These teachers are aware of the importance of intelligent and relevant direction in the training of prospective teachers and, given the chance, would be capable of beginning to provide it. They are also very much aware of the frequent failure of O.C.E.'s program to provide such direction. Are they, as it would seem, powerless to translate their consciousness of inadequacy into far reaching efforts at reform?

Intellectual somnambulism, it is true, is not subject to easy or immediately effective treatment. The educational scene in Ontario is now changing quickly and radically as we hysterically prepare for the great experiment designed to prove that education may best be served, that the wisdom and above all the economic security which are functions of education may most easily be captured, if only we build enough structures of glass and brick, which we shall call schools and universities, to house every child that ever necessitated a Baby Bonus cheque or a Robarts Fellowship.

Perhaps even before the experiment fails we will have come to realize for ourselves the sufficiently obvious fact that learning cannot be trifled with. When that realization comes it will no longer be necessary to wonder what to do about O.C.E. and the kind of thinking it represents. Their term will have ended and we shall have the opportunity in the period of comparative sanity which follows of rebuilding an educational system and philosophy.

It is sad however, that now instead of asking, "Can we afford in conscience to wait that long?" we seem inclined, if we ask at all, to ask resignedly, "How long shall we have to wait?"

A serious book on a complex subject

by T. J. SAMUEL

There are few developing countries which have been so extensively, and in certain fields intensively, studied in recent years as India. Undoubtedly, India deserves this attention in an abundant measure not only due to the size of her population but also because of the complexity and magnitude of her economic problems.

Professor John P. Lewis spent 12 months in India during 1959-60 and his book is the result or the field work he undertook then. It is written in a lucid, non-technical style addressed to non-specialists.

The work is noteworthy for its thoughtful and thought-provoking ideas and is a serious, sympathetic and welcome attempt to examine critically the economic development of a country in which the stakes of the West are high

Prof. Lewis finds India standing "at a critical junction in its long-range program of economic development" which will not only determine the political future of India but also will have a heavy bearing on the future of many Afro-Asian countries. He asks the highly relevant question whether America, or the Western world, has the "good judgement to recognise (this) monumental crisis while it remains quiet" and, more important, whether "the crisis of the sixties can be kept really quiet and orderly"?

After trying to answer the question "Why is a discussion of economic development of India in the sixties important to the U.S.A.?", in the first chapter, he explains the goals of economic development in India and the role of the Indian government. The critical scarcities — alleged (the will to work), publicized (the lack of domestic saving) and the real (foreign exchange)—are pinpointed. He agrees with the basic development strategy to achieve self sustaining economic growth for which the government assumes an activist role.

In the third chapter the much-talked-about and little-achieved proposition of the utilisation of surplus idle man power for economic development is discussed followed by a critical examination of the third Five Year Plan which appears to him as a "blurred document" written in a "frequently fuzzy and equivocal" language, nevertheless containing a "very strong program" which has received little hostile reception at home and abroad.

He then deals with the process of planning and plan implementation which are rated "remarkably good" for a poor underdeveloped country though plan implementation is susceptible to improvements since the administrators have been "too cautious" of making mistakes.

The author takes, in the sixth chapter, the agricultural situation which is the Achilles heel in all semi-or fully-planned economies and finds the situation basically and technically hopeful in spite of the mistakes in the conception and implementation of the crucial programme of community development for rural areas.

The role of towns in the industrialisation of India comes up for examination in chapter seven. He does not find why the already overcrowded metropolitan cities should be further subjected to the burden of "metropolitan agglomeration". On the other hand, a town-centred pattern is believed to be amply suited for India.

The following two chapters are concerned with the outlook for private enterprise and the export problems.

The book is not completely free from careless workmanship: his views on the population problem in India, for instance, are relegated to the section dealing with "Omissions and Qualifications." The supreme significance of the problem and its impact on economic development hardly warrant such a treatment. On this subject his views are half-baked and quite out of step with his otherwise prudent approach to Indian economic problems. He thinks the resource requirements for a vigorous population control are not the real problem. On the other hand, he is prepared to wait for a change in the mores of the society and for a "natural standard-of-living-effect", forgetting the fact that a population growth nearing three per cent per year that is most likely to be experienced by India during the current decade would nullify the effect of the comparatively low rate of economic development now achieved.

AN INTERPRETATION

It is a shock to discover that Lord of the Flies has been with us for ten years. The recent film and the results of a New York Times survey of American college readers (Lord of the Flies has displaced Catcher in the Rye in the Rye in the under-graduate heart) make the novel seem newer than it is. It should not surprise us, however, to find Golding more widely read in America than in England. Holden Caulfield's mantle sits lightly on the shoulders of Piggy, Ralph and Simon: innocence opposing a phony world has been succeeded by innocence struggling against the beast within. The preoccupations of American fiction, nurtured by the rich soil of Puritan past are ordinarily foreign to English writing, and Golding's concerns make him something of a maverick among his contemporaries. Neither the corridors of power, nor the common rooms of Oxbridge, nor even the back alleys of Northern industrial towns seem to be a fit setting for man confronting himself, rather than acting his part in the casual comedy of manners.

It is clear that special critical problems arise in the case of the novelist who subscribes to a religious or metaphysical belief against which he projects his characters and events; he must maintain a perilous equilibrium between philosophy and fiction — the background of the theological ideology must blend with the foreground of immediate sensuous human experience and not obliterate or distort it. If ideas dominate the author's vision, the novelist finds himself writing allegory and sacrificing the complexities of the human condition for (as someone once said) a pot of message.

To a certain extent Gold-ing's four novels have a common conceptual core; they are variations on a theme, whether we pinpoint that theme as the human involvement in guilt, the primal fault and its effects or, (perhaps closest of all) self-knowledge. Alterations in technique produce new angles of vision towards this central theme in the later novels. These alterations can be briefly summarized as a transition from theme dominated near-allegory to the human uncertainties of imaginative fiction — from an omniscient, author-manipulated explanation of man's fall and flawed nature to the examination, from within, of man's subjective discovery of those same facts.

The theme of individual self-knowledge appears as a seed in Lord of the Flies (1954), springs into prominence in The Inheritors (1955), and flowers in both Pincher Martin (1957) and Free Fall (1959). The first two novels, where the theme is relatively minor presented in the present or the historical present, relate a series of progressive actions (the line of bricks in Sammy Mountjoy's theory of time) and are written entirely by an omniscient author. The later two novels are reminiscences, in whole or in part, of past actions on the part of personal narrators, the "I" of the novel, and clock time has given way to psychological time. This transferral of attention from outside to inside, this change from omniscient and reliable narrator to subjective unreliable narrator has carried Golding far along the path leading from the contrivances of the "novel of ideas" and philosophic fiction towards the rich complexity of the novel proper.

Rather paradoxically accompanying this growing concentration upon the theme of personal self-knowledge has been Golding's increasing concern to present man in his ordinary social environment. In his first three novels Golding deliberately avoided that world, setting each in an isolated or essentially non-human landscape: a Pacific coral reef, a prehistoric backdrop, and the plateaus of the human mind (or a rock in the Atlantic — or Purgatory), and choosing to populate these landscapes with children, primitive anthropoidal creatures on the brink of humanity, and a dead man. Considering only the enormous technical difficulties of such settings and characters, we cannot escape the conclusion that each of the three is an astounding success. But, as is the case with Golding's surprise endings (present in all four novels) even the sympathetic reader has the uneasy conviction that the element of tour de force is unhappily too prominent. Parts of Pincher Martin and the whole of Free Fall have encouraged his admirers, however, to await future work in which the problems of the ordinary world of the novel are not solved by flight from it.

Despite all the criticisms of contrivance that can be brought against it Lord of the Flies is an extraordinary first novel. It is a realistic adventure story, a revealing presentation of human psychology, an illustration of one of the central myths of Christianity, and, above all, an imaginative fiction which unites all these into a unified impression.

How does Golding maintain a balance between the natural level of story development which is primarily descriptive, and the myth which gives meaning to the occurrences on the island and within the minds of the boys? The answer to such a query lies in an examination of the four-level structure of the novel. Three of these levels exist within nature, the fourth dimension is that of grace and is religious, mythic, and transcendental. (The film of Lord of the Flies provided convincing evidence of the paradoxical poverty of the visual image when compared with the vitality of its verbal counterpart. The mythic level seemed utterly inexpressible within the single statement of the cinematic image).

The natural levels of interpretation might be called literal, allegorical and anthropological. The story may be read first as merely the adventures of a group of boys on an island — another Coral Island (the model for Lord of the Flies) or Swiss Family Robinson: this is the literal level. The boys also represent, however, a microcosmic human society; they are another, rather artificial example of that human society which, forgotten by them, has already plunged over the brink of the same moral chaos into which the boys relapse. It is on this allegorical level that the reader is most aware of contrivance, from the advent of the dead airman who, as Golding himself has said, represents history (by which I take him to mean that for this infant society the airman, a death's head in modern uniform is a legacy of the successes of the Lord of the Flies in ancient and adult civilizations) to the unfortunately blatant irony of the ending (rescue by men armed with sub-machine guns — a detail omitted in the film) which pounds home a nail already driven.

The youthful society of the boys is also a parable of the first, primitive societies of prehistoric man, and its progress illustrates a biological maxim now fairly well discredited: that the development of the individual recapitulates in capsule time the development of the species (ontogeny recapitulates phylogeny). This anthropological level is developed with some care: the boys discover the importance of shelters and fire, of weapons and hunting, the disguise of paint, ritual, symbols, incantation, sacrifice to gods and so on. We have, then, on the purely natural level of interpretation three planes of significance: the boys act, first, as boys; second, as types or miniature versions of their fathers and all adults; and third, as the youth of the race of man. On a fourth and final plane, the mythic, the boys act as human creatures fallen from perfection, subject to mortality and temptation, cradling within themselves the beast of evil — as figures of Adam unparadised, but more, perhaps, of Cain and Abel.

Although the anthropological level of meaning in the novel is entirely natural, it deserves to be linked with the mythic. What the anthropological and the mythic have in common is that they are both, each in its own way, explanations of what takes place. While the literal story supplied us with the bare events, and the allegorical extended the meaning of the events to include all adult human societies, these last two planes of meaning are the results of conscious authorial reflection on the events, and seek to provide a framework in which they will have meaning. One is scientific, one religious. They provide answers to different questions. The anthropological network of reference replies to the scientific question HOW, while the mythic takes the problem a step further and suggests WHY. The pervasiveness of the anthropological level results from the fact that HOW is a continuous question when related to an action in time — WHY elicits a single emphatic answer (provided here by the title and Simon's encounter with that dread Lord).

The two worlds implied in these two explanations, which might loosely be called the worlds of value and fact, reappear woven into the fabric of Free Fall, where the hero calls them the world of cause and effect, of statistical probability, and the moral world of freedom and guilt. In both books an extreme and naive rationalist (Nick and Piggy) acts as spokesman for the exclusively scientific view of the world. "Life," said Piggy expansively, "is scientific, that's what it is.... You have doctors for everything, even the inside of your mind."

Simon's role in the novel is the focus of the mythic—Christian level of interpretation. Simon is the most self-conscious of all the boys in both senses of that term; he can bring himself to take the conch and speak in council only twice. The first time he mutters, "Maybe there is a beast.... What I mean is, maybe it's only us," to which Piggy's shocked common sense replies, "Nuts". If we omit Simon's self-knowledge, that is, his natural recognition of the primal fault ("Maybe it's only us"), which could be said to constitute his first meeting with the beast, his encounters with the beast are three: his conversation with the pig's head, his finding of the airman, and his death. There is an ascending order of violence in the three meetings: at the first Simon is threatened until he loses consciousness, in the second the wind's action causes the airman to breathe corruption at him which literally sickens him, and finally he is ritually murdered. It is in these episodes of the novel that Golding also finds himself: they are a clear forecast of the self-encounters of Christopher Martin and Sammy Mountjoy and there are obvious parallels, such as the attempts by both Simon and Christopher Martin to escape their superhuman interrogators in madness and fainting fits.

The temptation to construct a critical graph of the four levels of meaning as they apply to each encounter is overwhelming and I have succumbed to it. It is, of course, intended to be provocative and not definitive. On the literal level Simon encounters a Pig's head on a stick, a dead airman, and some boys playing. On the allegorical level the Pig's head stands for blood lust, anthropologically for sacrifice to dark gods, and mythically for the Prince of Darkness himself who, in an obscene parody of the crucifixion, "hangs on his stick and grins". The dead airman represents history (that is, he is an actual human victim of blood lust) on the allegorical level, primitive fear on the level of anthropology and, as a murdered human being, evidence of Satanic success on the mythic level. The boys are figures of frenzy and mindless mob violence on the allegorical plane, practitioners of ritual murder anthropologically speaking, and victims of original sin and its consequences on the mythic level. These three encounters of Simon with the beast, then, touch every detail in the novel and are, in their way, as powerful and as resistent as the title of the novel.

Golding's second novel, The Inheritors once again examines the loss of innocence, this time in an account of that point in human evolution where man as we know him begins, that is, man brought to reflexive consciousness of his own inner sickness. As Sammy remarks in Free Fall, "Perhaps consciousness and the guilt which is unhappiness go together." From such general discoveries he moves, in Pincher Martin, to an individual's torturous discovery, under pressure, of his own total self-absorption and guilt. The theme remains virtually the same, but the new technique of alternate first person narrator moves the work away from ideas and the predominance of a conceptual framework. It is only in Free Fall, however, that Golding extends the personal narrative to a whole novel, and directly faces the problem of the relation of conception and imagination in fiction. His limited success was reflected in the puzzled and perverse reception which met this work. Some of the critics' difficulty can be traced to the inversion of fictional clichés about the artist which are found in the novel. Here is an artist, Sammy Mountjoy, the fictional child, but not the spiritual heir, of Stephen Daedalus and Gully Jimson, for whom Art has not provided the surrogate of self for God. Most English critics feel uncomfortable about Golding's work. They recognize the power and genuine talent so abundantly displayed, but they prefer to conclude, as John Wain has that Golding's fiction "belongs not to literature, but to religious literature," a paradoxical way to praise with faint damns, and a revealing definition of literature.

Ti Jean sparkles

by GARY FAIRFOUL

The West Indian Student's Association presented Derek Walcott's TI JEAN last Thursday at Ryerson Theatre.

The story revolves around Ti Jean and his two elder brothers, each of who attempts to defeat the devil and provide food and comfort for their mother for the rest of her days. Only Ti Jean, using instinct, overcomes the enemy.

Sheila Kirkaldy as the mother brought much sensitivity and thought to her part. Peter Brandford, although he faltered from time to time, showed much ability in his three roles as the Old Man, the Planter, and the Devil.

The role of Ti Jean was enthusiastically and movingly portrayed by Noel Sanguinetti. Whenever he appeared, he brought a vitality to the play which was unequalled by his co-workers. Other noteworthy were Marcia Day, Victor Mitchell, and Barry Isaacs.

Miss Shepherd's direction did not draw the characters out of her actors enough. She has a good sense of how to employ her stage and of technical effect, but was not definite in drawing the line between the three brother's characters unless the script clearly showed it.

The choreography was intriguing — the best offering of the night being the "Magnificent Seven" duet, which showed polish and liveliness.

The Pan-Nicks Steel Orchestra was a musical treat. They were well used by Mr. Marshall and somehow managed to play "The Magnificent Seven" theme better than any orchestra I have ever heard.

Director Andrew Allan used the tiny stage to the fullest extent to give us a very effective staging of these vignettes from the life of a professional lover. The scene changes are done during blackouts and work extremely well, not interrupting continuity at any time.

Unfortunately there were only about ten people in the audience, a fact which did not seem to stop the actors from giving their best. Whether Toronto audiences admit it or not, this type of theatre is just as good as the theatre presented at the O'Keefe or the Alex. It gives the audience an opportunity to be completely relaxed and with a drink in one hand and a cigarette in the other, to enjoy an informal yet professional show.

Of course Toronto audiences are much more interested in being able to say that they attended a performance at one of the big theatres.

It isn't the show that counts, the sad fact is that people here go to the theatre to be seen and to collect conversational material for their next cocktail party.

THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL provides entertainment for those members of the audience who are interested in seeing a good play for the sake of the play.

Tales from the Quarter

The trip (which eventually ended in Barcelona) was a series of small tragedies and near tragedies, frustrations, humiliations, and a loss of anything even remotely resembling joy. Rose was, partly at least, in pursuit of her husband; it was a ridiculous search and a sorry index of the journey itself. For Bobby E Lee meant no more to shove the car over the Pyrenes than he could mean anything, and Dixie, who had wanted the trip for himself and Iris (a quick last chance, he figured), knew already he was dead and shrivelled. All in all, we seemed to be caught in an unsavory interlude where the first set of illusions had faded and we had not yet built sufficiently the resources of the second. Dixie began to take morphine.

He began to take morphine and he became surly and incommunicative; not that he was really coherent. But Iris was giving her finest performance, as the mythical bitch, and during the drive down through the South of France, she kept playing off his patience and we were all her foils. If the car blew a tire, she would jump from the car, grab me by the arm friskily and skip into the woods. When it was Dixie's turn at the wheel, she would stretch languidly in the back seat with her head curled under my armpit purring like an alley cat; that was fine with me, but the tension was becoming more than any of us could bear—except Iris, who seemed to thrive on gloom like a vampire. For awhile, Dixie thought that he had the problem beaten: if he could become our great friend, build a camaraderie with myself Rose and Bobby E Lee, then it would be alright and we would have to refuse Iris out of sheer loyalty. So he tried to charm us, and if he hadn't been so tired and lunatic, he might have done it. He always insisted on fixing the flats himself, drove into villages to buy supplies while we swam downriver, even shared his great store of drugs with us — probably the most difficult of his sacrifices. It was pleasant to have him serve us this way, and he was used outrageously, but there was no let up and Iris took brilliant advantage of his every move. For Iris was good at twisting the knife, and Dixie was very good at taking the pain: the impasse was frightening and curious. There were odd touches of friendliness all round, as if each of them were competing for our support. For instance, one night I had a tremendous toothache; it throbbed and swelled and the pain spread down the side of my face. Dixie wandered over in his new pose as comrade and extracted a tiny pill from his sacred leather pouch; it went down dry to lodge in my throat until I finally coughed it through my chest. It happened to be a morphine tablet and I felt so good that I sang the whole night and in the morning I felt like a bonfire roe died (the papers were full of it: Marilyn s'est suicidé), we were in Avignon, unwashed and unfed. Bobby E Lee, whose contacts were uncanny, claimed to know intimately the Counts of Avignon and their mother the Baroness D'Orange; Iris wanted a Count and Dixie wanted a bath, so we drove to their city residence. In our rotten state of minds, we half anticipated regal splendours unmatched and a cool evening's slumber on the silk purple. The family was not at home, they had retired for the summer to their castle some miles to the South West. But Bobby E Lee refused to give up such a point in his favour; he insisted on seeing his "good friends, the family D'Orange," and so we travelled to the castle and arrived some time after midnight. Bobby E Lee left us in the court and entered the place; he was gone for almost an hour, and then returned with two brothers, probably twins. Would we be interested in a late evening's swim, the lake and its environs were at our convenience? Iris swung out of the car, and accepted the polite arm of the Count; Dixie slept alone in a garage, Rose and I remained in the car, and Iris was not seen again until the following afternoon. When we saw her again, she looked calm, almost proud. She was wearing her last clean dress which revealed some cleavage, and she had obviously bathed and powdered herself. Dixie was coated with dust and sweat, and he began to make odd sounds, short ill "Neems," of displeasure. We had our breakfast in the large court fronting the largest wing of the castle, and were invited to groom ourselves for dinner in its bath-rooms. That evening we ate supper in a great hall, and the Baron recounted stories, obviously ancestral; for once, Rose held her tongue, and Dixie kept his eyes trained on Iris who had slipped her arm onto the lap of one of the boy Counts. After dinner, Iris left with her conquest and Bobby E Lee was invited into one of the apartments for an interview with the Dowager. Dixie and Rose were asked to wash the dishes, but I slipped out for a walk and just in time to hear the quick sounds of sex coming from the stables. I wandered through the grounds, noticed that the place was really quite run down and neglected (the first floor could not be used because of seasonal flooding), and came around to the Court again in time to steer Dixie away from the stables. It was then that he told me about Iris' abortion and his own sudden impotence and the awful things she was subjecting him to now.

by LARRY GARBER

We crossed the Spanish frontier that night, and then everyone slept outside to take in the night air; but in the morning we awoke to discover that we had been sleeping on graves. This would not have been so bad, but a gypsy caravan some yards away sent over a little girl to find out what we wanted so close to their own camp. She was dressed in rages, a filthy child, and she made the bizarre sign of a curse in the air, bestowing upon us all kinds of devils and plagues. "... (censored) ..." said Rose.

The gloom seemed to intensify, and soon Dixie, so close to the edge, found himself unable to speak. He'd move his mouth as if he were chewing a great wad of gum, but the sounds that came out were senseless, and all he wanted to do was sleep. In San Feliu, Iris and Rose cooked a great shrimp and vegetable stew; we had parked the car in an open field high above the Mediterranean, and built a great open fire. The Spanish militia saw the smoke and smelt the burnt grass and sent up some soldiers with riot guns and dogs on leashes to stalk us. They stamped out the fire, fined us fifty pesos, and threatened to take Bobby E Lee to jail. But Iris knew Spanish, took a little walk with one of the soldiers, and it was alright; except it wasn't, and Dixie spent the next two days in the car mumbling to himself and gulping down his morphine tablets.

We arrived in Barcelona and drove immediately to the Plaza Real, where people from the Quarter in Paris resumed their lives. We were feeling so miserable that we couldn't speak, except to strangers, and finally a pimp named Danny said that he would take us to a hotel if we promised to frequent the Blue Note Cafe where he took a commission. So he took us to the Pension Toledo, and that night we played him fair and went to the Blue Note where we all got drunk and sick on cheap rum. Dixie left us after a while and found himself a young Spanish whore, but he came back even more lunatic than when he had left and spent the rest of the night staring at the bars on the windows. Rose thought she would start looking for her husband and Iris decided to go along; when they had disappeared down the Ramblas, I left Bobby E Lee to look after Dixie and wandered into the nueva San Francisco. Things were bad and slow and tedious, I didn't want to go back to the hotel, so I walked up an down through the hot stink of the old quarter. A lousy feeling is always resentful of something pleasant. Because when I accidentally discovered a Hungarian girl from Toronto working in a bar in Barcelona, I settled into a rare mean hysteria and got drunk for the second time that night. Her name was Julia, tall and plump, with nowhere to go. "Hey," I said, "Bloor and Avenue Road." "Spadina," she said. "College and Bathurst," I cried, "oh, Christ!"

A disease not in medical books

For some strange reason medical books have left unheralded a strange and dangerous mania — bibliomania. The disease when it strikes, not only deprives a person of valuable time and drains his pockets of all money but, like narcotics, masters the individual.

One never knows when book mania will strike. But when it does all hope for any degree of balance is lost. Chances of recovery are nil. The diseased furtively hunts down the remotest rumour that a run-down store in an offbeat section of the city has a stock of rare books. The excitement increases if it appears that the store owner does not know the value of his books. After travelling enormous distances the wretched soul is apt to find the rumours baseless. However, this does not dull his enthusiasm one whit. The next time, or the one following or the one following that the rumour might turn ought to have some foundation. A rare first edition of Eliot or a Skelton's Laurier and—cloud seven.

But the book lust is never satisfied by success, only heightened. More rumours to be tracked down, more searching of the newspapers for news of auction sales, more standing in the cold, the heat, the driving rain waiting for the book store to open its doors three hours hence for its annual sale.

Unfortunately Toronto does not have the range of second hand stores that centres like New York London, and Paris have. But there are a few, along with some very fine regular retail shops.

Some of the best buys in Toronto can be had at the Crippled Civilian Book Shop on Jarvis St., between King and Queen. A weekly check of the store will occasionally turn up spectacular finds. A fifteen volume set of Dickens for $3.50, the two volume set of Williamson's Sir Wilfred Laurier for $6.00 and so on.

Several blocks away on Queen St. is Jack's second hand book store. The front of the store is filled with many hundreds of old, dog-eared lusty "novels" and old Playboys, Sunbathing etc. Once you have made your way to the back of the store a fairly good collection of second hand books can be had. The books are not rarities but for the person who wants a decent book at about half of its retail price or less the store is worth a visit. There is a Canadiana section but certainly no bargains will be had from this collection. The stock is not fast moving and a visit about every month should make sure no worthy-while book eludes the greedy grasp of the collectors.

The Old Favorites Book Shop on Front St. occasionally spews forth a good buy in a used or rare book. But if one wants something in Canadiana the best place to go is to Dora Hood's on Ross St. Situated opposite reference library the book room is a gold mine in Canadian literature, history and politics — probably the best in the country. However, don't expect to get anything at a low price there. At Doro Hood's you pay the going catalogue price of the books (in fact most prices on Canadiana are based on this store's own catalogue.)

— vsp bryce

by MELVIN PELT

The book collecting mania is not satisfied by visits to second hand shops. The poisonous venom that reaches the mind and the heart also forces one to seek out every type of esoteric magazine and newspaper.

The Book Cellar at Bay and Bloor has the most astonishing array of magazines possible—from the august Mind, the English and Scottish Historical Reviews through to Escapade and Dude to periodicals on Dogs in Canada, on animals, stamps sports, music etc.

For the person who wants to be avant-garde and belong to the "in" group there is a fairly complete selection of Tarzan and other works by Edgar Rice Burroughs. Although this shop has a good collection of science fiction paperbacks, its stock of history and philosophy leave much to be desired.

Although the Book Cellar has many British newspapers the person who wants to follow a wider selection of newspaper opinion is better advised to travel down to King St. where Lightman's News Stand is located. Besides American and other foreign newspapers there is a fair selection of Canadian newspapers unattainable else where.

Having made a tour of the second hand shops and magazine stores the book hound usually makes his way to the retail shops. Britnell's on Yonge St. is undoubtedly the haven for the person burying new books in Toronto. Besides having the most complete selection available the staff is knowledgeable and helpful — an asset which should never be overlooked when setting out to a retail book store. Little need be said about the SCM book shop on Thomas St. except that even without their discounts to students it would be an enjoyable place to browse and buy books.

The Classic Book store in the Colonade is certainly on the list of the book fiend as is Paternoster's on Bloor St. which has an extremely good selection of British books and periodicals.

From here the poor soul probably makes his way down to the Book World on Gerrard where he discovers a very good selection of Marxist books and periodicals. Further east on Gerrard, near Yonge, is Librairie Fancalaise where French works and newspapers are obtainable.

Once his rounds are finished the book fiend is about to start off again. Unless, of course, he ventures into the U of T book shop where depression and disillusion immediately strike him. Some of the disillusionment can be dispelled after a visit to the second campus book store—the Victoria College book shop. After this visit the collector is ready to start his rounds again.

Sculpture on campus

by PAUL RUSSELL

Much has been said this year about the display of works of art in our campus buildings. While Sidney Smith Hall remains a sterile naked wasteland, the foyer of the Edward Johnson Building has been recently dressed with a delightful study in three-dimensional movement: VIVALDI'S FOUR SEASONS VARIATION N. I by Robin MacKenzie. In this work, a thin line of steel dances in delicate rhythms through a space defined by transparent 'walls' of parallel threads. This is no great work of art but it is a light and charming piece of wall decoration.

The work is small and almost lost in the vast space of the foyer, but it is nevertheless a move in the right direction by the powers-that-be in the music faculty. At least the musicians seem to care what their building looks like. The same cannot be said for the administration at Sydney Smith Hall.

Elsewhere on Campus, the photography exhibition closes on Monday after a two week run at Hart House. Generally, I felt the work submitted was competent but very unoriginal. Some, well worth a second glance, are "The Friendly Policemen", "The Marchers", and "The Lineout".

In the world of commercial galleries two important exhibitions opened this week: sculpture by TED BIELER at the Isaacs Gallery and Paintings by STEPHEN ANDREWS at the Roberts Gallery.

Mr. Bieler, an instructor and lecturer in sculpture in the Fine Art department of this university, has produced work of keen imagination and impeccable technique. The show consists of wall plaques and free-standing pieces.

The images created are organic and often sexual. Plant forms writhe and twist in a wonderful display of seemingly natural growth. Human forms are suggested, then confused, in a wonderful surface in concrete called FEMALE WALL. This exhibition is Mr. Bieler's first one-man effort in Toronto. I'm sure it will be successful.

Stephen Andrews, the Canadian expatriate at the Roberts Gallery has lived in London, England since 1946. His paintings are studies of people and mysticism. They reflect in many cases the impressions made on him during his travels, particularly in the east.

for fascinating studies of character. Several works are cartographic, using maps forms for the basis of composition: One painting, called ANATOLIA, is compositionally a map of Asia minor and conjures up all the mythology and folk lore of the Middle East in its subtle colour washes and sandtextured gold. Andrews presents something to Toronto which I feel is completely different and foreign to the Canadian temperament. The expatriate paints very well but is distinctly un-Canadian.

Adventures of an old young man

by ANNE LINDNER

Martin Berkovitz is an old young man. Old in the sense of a man who has experienced more in the past five years than most do in a lifetime. He lives a "garret" life, drawing satiric, eerie, ink graphics and writing Kafkaesque short stories of people who are covered with flowered wall paper.

He has succeeded in surviving the greyness of working for a living. Instead, his life passes in a round of self-willed disciplines and pleasures. At noon his day begins with perhaps a trek to the library, continues with a visit to friends, and ends with a return to his womb — his ivory tower on Markham St. There, he may draw or not draw, depending on his inclination and his urge to create.

His home consists of two large rooms on the third floor of a rickety house. His living quarters contain two tables, one of which supports a hot plate, a bed, and assorted chairs performing a variety of functions. A painting of a girl with tangle red lace panties pasted on — one that is turned to the wall at night — and a few of his own drawings hang framed in the otherwise austere room.

The studio is one continuous drawing. Pen, pencil, ink and charcoal have gone on the wall to form an aphrodisiacal setting for Martin's drafting tables.

What does he draw? People of course; hard, grotesque, perverted, sadistic, chauvinistic, and often monstrous people. His people act out things we do every day, only in the drawings, they are intensely magnified.

Having started drawing at the age of four, and begun exhibiting at 15, Martin is an old-timer in Toronto's art world. He had a successful one-man show at the Moos Gallery when he was nineteen.

Martin Berkovitz is now twenty years old. He lives — or rather exists, as he pleases. His triumph lies in managing to sustain his creative urge and not being propelled into becoming another copywriter or as he put it, "a graphic artist for CBC at $5000 a year."

Subways and masses of people repulse him. His friends are seldom painters or artists; but are writers, and lesbians. He finds lesbians fascinating in their ultra-femininity and uses them as subject matter or as departure points for many of his drawings.

Right now he has a slight problem... he wanted a haircut, and the barber cut off too much hair. So lately he hasn't been able to draw.

But hair will grow and Martin will draw again as he has for the last sixteen years of his life — with a view to revealing his own insides to himself, and with his audience and public as secondary. He too is an egomaniac like others of his kind.

Last Sunday Evening Concert of the year features Hart House Glee Club this Sunday at 9 p.m. in the Great Hall.

SAC presents chansonnier at HH

Students on this campus will have the opportunity of sampling some genuine French Canadian culture without going any farther than the Great Hall, Hart House.

Gilles Vigneault, chansonnier extraordinaire, appears there on March 14. The concert is under the auspices of the Canadian-Canadian Committee of SAC.

A chansonnier, for he benefits of the uni-culturalists or "anglais", is a French Canadian folksinger, who usually writes all his own songs.

Gilles is also an excellent poet, and an author. His fame in French Canada has become almost legendary. He has won the Grand Prix de Disques for his recordings for Columbia and is popular enough to have filled the Comedie Canadienne in Montreal to capacity for a solid week.

At his Montreal performances standing ovations after every song are not uncommon.

Other than a short 3-song appearance before a private audience for the CBC, this will be his first concert in English Canada.

Born in a little fishing village on the "Cote Nord", Gilles writes many of his songs about this area, filling them with local colour and local folk heroes.

He has a pleasant husky voice perfectly suited to his songs. A very active performer, he involves himself greatly in his music with wild gestures and movements.

Every type of song is his speciality—from tender ballads to comical political ditties. But most popular with his fans are the pieces of real French-Canadiana about folk heroes and life in the small fishing villages.

Excellent with difficult works

By LOUISE WELLS

Sigmund Steinberg's recital in Hart House on Wednesday justified his excellent reputation.

Steinberg chose an astonishingly difficult program. His performance displayed remarkable musicianship and a superb technique. The Bach Chaconne from the unaccompanied Sonata No. 2 in D minor is a monumental work. It is seldom performed because of its immense technical demands. Steinberg played this work with virtuosity. He was able to transmit an eerie feeling of power and melancholy.

The Chopin Nocturne Opus 27, No. 2, (transcribed by Wilhelmj) conveyed to the audience the highly romantic temperament of the artist.

Steinberg also gave the first

North American performance of an Unaccompanied Violin Sonata, written by U of T music student, Charles Camilleri. Mr. Camilleri is a highly talented composer, but not yet completely polished. His Sonata No. 1 ranks well among modern compositions of this type.

This work is that of an atonal romantic. The thematic materials, are good as are their development. However, Mr. Camilleri does not appear to have mastered the ability of transition from one thematic subject to another. We look forward to this composer's future works.

A change of mood came with Steinberg's bright rendition of Elgar's La Caprice. This work brought back to me memories of my childhood, and Jascha Heifetz' performances. Steinberg's interpretation and technique indicated once again that he is a concert violinist of high rank.

The last programmed piece was La Folia by Corelli-Leonard. Although the performer's great skill and sensitivity were here evident, the interpretation was reserved.

When Steinberg returned for an encore, his choice was "inspiration", a delightful "Viennese bon bon" as he termed it, written for him by his wife Gwladys Steinberg. The highly romantic composition and performance conveyed the warm understanding and relationship between these artists. Mrs. Steinberg was a very competent accompanist throughout the program.

It was evident that Steinberg liked his audience, and that the audience liked him.

CBC admired, except in Canada

by L. CUMMINGS

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation radio network is the main source of high level broadcasts both nationally and locally (especially with the inception a year ago of CBC's The Learning Stage). The role being played by private stations, especially on FM outlets (e.g. CHUM's night-time quality music programming) is essentially secondary.

Quite in keeping with traditional Canadian conservatism, the CBC arose out of a compromise between the two conflicting philosophies of public service and private commercial interests. Formed in 1936 to replace the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission set up as a result of the Aird Royal Commission of 1928, the CBC has had to steer a course through succeeding years of apathy and vociferous disagreement among its listeners about its purpose. No longer vested with the authority to regulate affiliated non-affiliated private stations (a task taken over by the Board of Broadcast Governors), its main duties are national public service, development of Canadian talent and service to the relatively unpopulated parts of Canada whose only link with the rest of the country and the world are its radio stations.

The relevance of all this? The following excerpt from the recently published (1962) Mass Media in Canada should tell a part of the tale. "In the U.S. virtually all radio is oriented towards the non-selective mass taste—the Canadian pattern is admired by thoughtful citizens everywhere, except perhaps in Canada, where it is taken for granted." May I add—"especially in Canadian universities and educational institutions!" For those with an eye for statistics, the fact that more than 10 per cent of the audience mail reaching CBC radio here in Toronto is from American listeners should be of additional interest.

The editor of this now famous Mass Media, J. A. Irving, of Victoria College sums up an attitude often found in regard to CBC. "It may be fairly claimed that, with the exception of the BBC, no other radio corporation has equalled the CBC's involvement in all the ideas that are in circulation in the contemporary world."

All is not praise in Professor Irving's prose, however. He questions the present organizational structure in CBC—has it the ability to cope with educational programing which he seems to feel is its primary role in future), to do overall planning in this regard? An equally crucial question arises from the political dissension presently to be found in Canada regarding biculturalism. The French-speaking population of Canada is crying for equal time; how CBC can answer is yet to be seen.

The Mazowsze group of Polish singers and dancers appears Sunday and Monday at Maplet Leaf Gardens.

Timeo Danaos sed amo Antigone

A scene from Antigone

By ARTHUR ZELDIN

The film version of Sophocles' Antigone poses two distinct problems. It is successful as Greek tragedy? Is it successful as a film.

The answer to the first question is a hesitant yes. Filming players without the traditional Greek masks allow for greater evocation of emotion and meaning. The modern audience is attuned more to the visual presentation of drama than the aural or poetic; thus the crucial scene in Antigone, in which Creon and Antigone confront each other after the burial of her dead brother is discovered, is given heightened power by the nuances of facial expression.

When messengers tell the king what they have seen, the film uses the narrated flashback to substantiate the reality of off-stage events. Similarly after the separation of Antigone from her lover Haemon, the Chorus intones the flickleness of the god of Love; the camera pans from Antigone in her cell through an absolutely bleak and empty sky to the one figure of Haemon. The picture increases the power of the words.

An excellent adaption of this technique makes one of the Chorus' incantations an echo which Antigone hears in the solitude of the cave.

Some of these cinematic additions however are overdone. Everyone who knows "Antigone" knows that the essential conflict in the play is between tyranny and the individual will. That is still no reason for the spurious scene in which masses of suspects are rounded up, and one flogged, in the search for the "traitor".

Sophocles is not Shakespeare. Shakespeare's characters are complex, his plots intricate; his plays transfer well to the screen. Sophocles' plays hinge on one monumental irony or conflict; his characters are monolithic in their exercise of will often closely aligned to a specific abstract idea. The intimacy and realism of the cinema thus automatically interfere with the sense of austere and titanic activity so powerful implicit in the best classical tragedy. What one wants from Sophocles is grandeur, not pageantry; the film settles for second best.

It does a good job with it, though the set exteriors are excellent; they are executed richly, but not in the glossy de Mille fashion. Interiors are fine, too; the various levels, stairways and doors make for interesting action in the drama. Similarly, costuming is good, without being lavish. If realism were wanted, this film has it: The black and white photography is generally good, occasionally poetic. Subtitles convey full meaning and a considerable sense of poetry as well.

Irene Papas contributes an excellent performance as Antigone. She has an intense and formidable face, possibly just a little too earthy to completely convey Antigone's rarified heroism. Manos Katrakis as Creon is also fine, as is the supporting cast in general. Antigone, adapted for the screen and directed by George Tzavellas, is a film well worth seeing. It is being screened at the Elektra theatre, College and Brunswick.

Creative cinema

Canadians are just discovering film-making as a creative art. A program of experimental films at Isaacs' Gallery revealed the potential in creative Canadian cinema.

The National Film Board contributed "Very Nice, Very Nice", by 25 year old film maker Arthur Lipsett. It is a montage of faces and other platitudes, accompanied by garbled banalities over the soundtrack. The film's greatness lies in its perfect timing as the camera snaps from face-to-face to the rhythm of music.

Some very clever things are being done in animation. One of the best films, Paper Paradise, was made by Carlos Marchiori, an Italian-born TV designer. It is a colorful collage of oriental scenes to promote Japanese travel.

Several local artists have dabbled in film-making. Michael Snow, Joyce Wieland and friends recaptured the spirit of the silent movies in A Salt in the Park. Graham Coughtry's Unk is a conglomeration of animated absurdity.

Standing Room Only at all four showings indicated a great deal of interest in this newest art medium.

Too bad but not to bed

by RICKY SALSBERG

The movie is called To Bed or not to Bed. A witty title, you see. Or, if you don't, there is an entirely useless scene in which an unknown woman quotes Hamlet's speech and translates the first line into a variety of languages. That should clarify things for you.

The title of the movie indicates the main problem of the hero (Alberto Sordi). It is not so much a moral problem as a practical one. This can become very frustrating for the poor man. It can also become very frustrating for the audience.

Perhaps you didn't realize that our ineffectual hero has come from Italy to Sweden for a fur auction. Sweden, that is. Everybody knows about Sweden. Ho-ho. In case you don't know that either, it is also explained early in the proceedings in so many words.

Now Mr. Sordi is a middle-aged Max Shulman hero. He explains his middle-agedness to one of his victims, who is not nearly as victimized as he would like her to be. He tells her, "I'm forty... two."

His Shulmanesque gaucherie, which causes him to grin wildly and prance around faun-fashion every time he anticipates reaching the climax of his desires, is not explained. It's part of his sympathetic character, I guess.

There are things to laugh at, however. The expressions exchanged in the upside-down synagogue café (girls on the bottom, men on top — upstairs, that is) are wonderful. The car race over the frozen lake is a unique experience, and so is the steam-bath, an activity for all sexes, naturally (as naturally as possible, in fact). "It's wonderful," Sordi says, "like Hell."

But you are always aware that behind the (intended) humour, there is a serious suggestion being pressed upon you, that the Swede's freedom from the sin-concept morality of the Italian is an admirable thing. Mr. Sordi shows the girl in his room the scar low on his back, but he carefully tucks his shirt in after.

Sternberg sets single-game mark of 30 for Redmen

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Gerry Sternberg hooped 30 points Wednesday night for University College, but it was not enough to overcome a fine team effort by St. Michael's, which took the Group I basketball encounter, 51-47. Going into the second half, Redmen trailed 28-12 but a great comeback attempt pulled them into contention before they finally fell four points short.

Ray Schaedler swished 15 for the Double Blues and Joe Soltis added a dozen. Sternberg's total coming in a 22-minute game was the highest of the season in a single interfac game.

Medicine A took top spot in Group II with 57-24 pasting of PHE II. Martin Schiller led the winners with 12, followed by Len Schwartz and Steve Silverberg with 10 apiece. Ed Duffield scored 11 for the losers.

Dave Grant hit for 20 and Bill Dauphinee 13 to lead Law A to a 44-39 overtime over St. Mike's B. John Sweeney potted 12 for the Irish.

New College, winless throughout the season, almost pulled a Cassius Clay-type upset over Meds B (7-2). A publicity letter to The Varsity from New College hinted the Newmen had adopted secret training methods and "The Power of Positive Thinking". But, it was not quite enough, as Meds B came from behind a half-time deficit to edge the Green and Gold, 22-21.

HOCKEY

Interfaculty playoffs got under way yesterday as Wycliffe edged Forestry A,

3-2, in a tie-breaker for second place in Group IV. Glenn Swanick potted a pair for the winners and John Symons the other. John Powell and Bob Chown scored for Forestry.

Wycliffe now meets Vic II Monday at 5:30 p.m. for the right to advance to the quarter-final against defending Jennings Cup champion, Vic I.

Another preliminary game will see third-place finishers in Group I, PHE I, meet Jr. SPS, second in Group III at 12:30 p.m. today.

WATER POLO

As the schedule nears completion, all group winners have been decided. PHE won in Group I, St. Mike's A in Group II and Pre-Meds II yr. in Group III. Knox and Forestry tied for top honors in Division II.

Group I action saw Meds I yr. take the runner-up spot with a close 7-6 win over Vic I, while Meds IV yr. took third place with a 14-2 win over Law.

St. Mike's A edged out New College and Dentistry in Group II after a 9-1 win over SPS II. Dents shellacked Vic II 11-3. Trinity A evened its record at 3-3 with an 8-4 conquest of Meds II yr.

It was a case of big brother is watching you as Pre-Meds II yr. trampled (in water???) Pre-Meds I yr. 13-0.

West needs 23 points for scoring title

By PAUL HENDERSON

All-star guard Dave West moved to within 23 points of the league scoring title when he led Varsity Basketball Blues to a 92-63 triumph over McMaster Marauders Wednesday night in Hamilton. West netted 31 points in a solid performance featured by good drives.

While West was hitting for 31, however, Jerry Raphael of Waterloo hooped 33 as Warriors were edged 79-76 by Windsor Lancers in Waterloo.

Raphael completed the schedule with 302 points and an average of 25.2. West has hooper 280 in 11 contests and, consequently, needs at least 23 against Queen's at Hart House Saturday night to become the first Blues in 10 years to take the title. George Stulac accomplished the feat in the 1953-54 season.

Although he is averaging 25.5 points per game West failed on three occasions this year to make a total of 23.

Blues obviously had no inhibitions Wednesday about playing before the three CHCH-TV cameras which were video-taping the contest. The possibility of recognition spurred Blues in the first 20 minutes to what coach John McManus termed "the best half they played all year".

Blues handled their premier performance with an aplomb equal to the display of R. Burton et al at the O'Keefe the same evening. And Blues were without the benefit of dress rehearsals. The game will be televised on Channel 11 at 2:00 p.m. Saturday.

Ed Bordas scored 23 points and collected 20 rebounds for Blues. He hit for 19 of his total in the first half when Blues surged to a 56-29 lead. He shot 75 per cent in the game.

Marauder centre Al Irwin secured an equal number of rebounds and topped Mac with 15 points. Irwin, who along with Jim Saddler was Marauders' hardest worker, was kept in check by Bordas, who needs 37 points in his final game to make the 20-average plateau.

Blues John O'Neill and Arvo Neidre matched Irwin's 15 points while Arvid Stonkus added 10 for the losers.

West's first basket two seconds after the opening toss set the stage for the game's pattern as Blues never trailed. Varsity forged to a 31-16 lead at the end of the first quarter and, capitalizing on the fast break, increased the margin to 24 in the 14th minute when West departed for a rest with 14 points.

In the second half, Blues again scored on a number of drives and established a lead of 34 after five minutes. They ran up their greatest advantage, 37, just before the end of the third quarter. Play then evened out as Stonkus kept pace with the Varsity scorers.

The game occasionally deteriorated into a scramble affair but was well-played for the most part. Blues made 43 of 83 field goals attempted and out-rebounded Marauders, who hit on only 24 of 75 tries from the floor. Marauders appeared listless and indifferent at times.

There was no indifference in the Windsor-Waterloo contest as Lancers had to hang on to prevent the upset of the year. Lancers led 45-34 at the halt but Warriors twice came to within two of erasing Lancer's lead. The depth of the champions, paced by Bernie Friesmuth with 18 and Ed Petryshyn with 17, enabled them to record their 11th consecutive victory. Jim Hann hooped 12 and Dick Aldridge and Bod Pando 11 apiece to Raphael's total of 33.

Under the Basket: — Tom Williamson of Western, defending scoring champion, merely has to drop in 57 points against Lancers in his final game to exceed Raphael's total... Six-foot, three-inch, 220-pound Irwin was the first draft choice of Montreal Alouettes... Ron Kimel scored 6 and Vlad Baranowicz 2 to round out Blues total... Also included in Saturday's final athletic night of the year is a tri-gymnastics meet between Varsity, Queen's and RMC and interfaculty water polo. An interfac basketball game between UC and Meds gets action under way at 6:30 p.m..

Varsity swimmers favored to take seventh title in last eight years

By SHEL KRAKOFKY

Varsity Swim Blues, defending OQAA champions, try to make it seven titles in the last eight years when they host teams from McGill and Western in the Intercollegiate Swimming Championships Saturday.

The meet will start at 2 p.m. in the Women's Athletic Building pool. This is the first time the Intercollegiate championships will take place in the WAB. The move from Hart House pool was made to provide better spectator facilities and because the WAB pool has one more lane.

The OQAA title is only contested by U of T, Western and McGill but this year Queen's is sending a team to swim exhibitions in the two relay events. McMaster and University of Windsor are sending representatives to a swimming meeting preceding the meet and the hope is that next year the championship will be contested by six teams.

Blues are heavily favored to retain the title, boasting a better team than last year, recognized by many as the best man's team in Canada. Blues defeated all Canuk competition they faced this year, including two convincing wins over Western, and posted impressive wins over some of the top American Colleges. Varsity has not seen McGill swim this year, however, and word has it Redmen will give Western a good fight for second place. Last year McGill only scored 34 points to Blues' 77 and Western's 57.

McGill will rely heavily on the prowess of Bill Peers, a strong swimmer in almost every category. Last year Peers won the 200-yard backstroke but he has turned in some excellent free style times and many swim both free style and backstroke.

Four of Western's tankers will say goodbye to Intercollegiate competition after the finals. Pete Fowler, Glen Davis, John Arblaster and Don Irwin graduate this year after contributing greatly to whatever success Mustangs have had during the past few years.

Varsity's swimmers looked excellent in practice this week and shouldn't lose more than four of the 11 events. No intercollegiate records have fallen in the past two years but with the calibre of the swimmers on all teams, some are within reach of being broken.

BABY BUBBLES: Former Western swimmer and now U of T student, Tony Little, will be the announcer for the meet... Glen Davis has donated his Toronto home for a party after the meet, quite a token of sportmanship... Varsity coach Larry Freeman's wife is a first cousin to the puck scoring duo of Steve and Hank Monteth. Nancy Freedman's father is former National Minister of Health and Welfare, J. Waldo Monteth.

Selections: Varsity 81, Western 47, McGill 40.

Blues bomb 'Stangs, 9-1

Western, OAC may join senior league

Varsity hockey Blues completed their season by defeating Western Mustangs, 9-1, yesterday in an exhibition game at Varsity Arena that may have been the first of an indefinite series between the two teams.

It was learned yesterday that both Western and Ontario Agricultural and Veterinary College have applied for admission to the Senior Intercollegiate League next season.

If the two teams are admitted, the league will operate next season as a nine-team unit.

Blues outclassed Western yesterday but the score was not indicative of the play. Gary Aitken turned in his best game of the season in the Varsity nets, stopping all but one of the 29 shots fired at him. Blues had 34 shots on the Mustang net.

Hank Monteith, Sonny Osborne and Don Fuller each scored twice for Blues, who led 3-0 after the first period and 8-0 after the second. Steve Monteith, Bob Awrey and Doug Jones counted the other Varsity goals while Ken McPhail got Mustangs' goal in the final period.

Mike Treadwell wins Smith Trophy

Mike Treadwell of Trinity College is the 1963-64 winner of the Sidney Earle Smith Trophy as the Varsity student "in his graduating year who has contributed most to intramural athletics from the standpoint of leadership, sportsmanship and performance."

Treadwell, a fourth-year Arts student from Ottawa, has a long list of achievements in interfaculty sports. He played eight different sports, officiated, coached and managed.

He was also on the Intramural Sports Committee for two years and was president and vice-president of the Trinity College Athletic Association.

Ties Canadian record

Kidd upsets Clarke

NEW YORK (Staff) — Bruce Kidd upset Australia's Ron Clarke to win the two-mile event at the Knights of Columbus meet here last night. Kidd's time of 8:39.0 is a meet record and equalled his Canadian native and his Madison Square Garden marks.

Clarke, world record-holder at three miles indoors, led for most of the race until Kidd passed him with less than two laps to go. Clarke finished five yards behind the U of T runner in 8:39.2.

...It was the second time in two weeks Kidd has defeated Clarke in Madison Square Garden. It was also Kidd's tenth victory without a defeat in New York.

Bill Crothers easily won the 600 yards in 1:09.7, which tied his best time for the distance and was only four-tenths of a second off George Kerr's world indoor record.

Crothers also came from 30 yards behind to anchor East York Track Club to a meet record 3:20.1 mile-relay win.

Recommends counselling committee

A presidential advisory committee on student counselling was recommended to President Bissell Tuesday by Dr. G. E. Wodehouse, head of the university health service.

Dr. Wodehouse made the recommendation as a result of the Students' Administrative Council staff-student symposium on mental health Feb. 22.

Results of a questionnaire collected for the symposium showed that although more than half the students questioned had felt a need for counselling at some time in their university career, few felt that adequate facilities were provided for such services, particularly with regard to psychological counselling.

"I think we should take a darn good look at ourselves," Dr. Wodehouse said earlier this week, "to see just what facilities do exist and what barriers may stand between students and them."

"The presidential committee could be concerned with either general or psychiatric counselling," he said. "I would hope for student representation on it."

Vice-president (Academic) Moffat Woodside said he considered this an important area for further study.

"Just from my conversations with students I was surprised at the number who didn't seem to know that the health service is anything more than a place to treat athletic injuries."

Robin Ross, university registrar, said he was grateful to the SAC for arranging such a symposium. He added that the results of the questionnaire were such that "we should be asking ourselves very carefully if our arrangements for counselling are adequate."

Edward Johnson Building opens

Sir Ernest MacMillan was the principal speaker at the official opening of the Edward Johnson building on Monday. The conductor has been associated with the Royal Conservatory of Music for most of his life, as principal from 1926 to 1942, and later, dean.

In his address Sir Ernest described the founding and growth of the conservatory, which he described as one of the finest in the world.

Boyd Neel, dean of the conservatory, presented Sir Ernest with a gold key to the building.

The week of concerts celebrating the opening will make full use of the MacMillan Theatre, named after the prominent educationist. One of his works, England, was performed last night in the first half of the evening, a presentation of Mr. MacMillan as composer and conductor.

Colleges should aid foreign news gathering

Universities should be contributing to the gathering of news on the international sphere, Frederick Nossal, former correspondent in Peking for the Globe and Mail said last night.

Speaking at a Hart House literary evening, Mr. Nossal explained that we are very ignorant of the actual conditions existing in foreign countries today.

We never read about the poverty, the famine and the food riots in countries such as India because our newspapers do not consider this news, he said.

Then there is a rebellion and we all wonder why. We don't know anything about the conditions that form the background to these events.

Mr. Nossal suggested that universities send graduate students who have a flair for journalism to spend a year in foreign countries and report on the conditions there when he returns.

He admitted that to achieve this, our entire idea of journalism would have to change—the newspapers would have to report more on the actual conditions as well as the isolated newsworthy events.

Mr. Nossal said that such university reporters would be able to report more honestly on actual conditions because there is a certain amount of censorship that restricts foreign correspondents for news services.

In countries such as Viet Nam and China all the reporter's stories are filed with the office of the foreign ministry.

If the stories are too "honest" the reporter will be ejected from the country, he said.

This leads to a certain amount of self-censorship. The reporter, wishing to stay there longer, tends to censor his own work so as not to offend too strongly.

Nfld. president resigns after newspaper charges

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (Cup) — The president and seven executive members of the Memorial University students' council have resigned following charges laid in the university newspaper The Muse.

President Peter Strong led the resignation after an editorial charging council with misappropriation of student funds. The editorial specified the president and demanded a public meeting of the council and student body.

At the meeting the council gave the president an overwhelming vote of confidence. But following requests from the floor it was decided to revise the council's constitution and to hold an investigation into the charges and to publicize the findings.

In his letter of resignation Strong denied any malfeasance in office and claimed that he had been the victim of "career assassination." In a telephone conversation with the Dalhousie Gazette he charged that a small clique had formed on his council and a few people had tried to depose him.

Strong said he resigned despite the confidence vote because one of the executive and another two councillors were offering opposition at every turn.

He said he was being slighted and avoided in his contacts both at the university and elsewhere.

The seven executive members resigned despite a request from Strong not to. They said they were resigning in protest against Strong's treatment.

Strong admitted that the charges were true in part.

He admitted some meals, amounting to $14 had indeed been charged improperly to the council. Taxi fares had been charged without going through proper channels, and travel expenses for a councillor to go to Ottawa on CUS business were appropriated before being mentioned to council.

Co-op petitions Queen's Park

The Campus Co-operative Residence Incorporated will make an official appeal at Queen's Park Thursday, to be granted college status. Allan Lawrence, Progressive Conservative MPP for St. George's, will present the bill to the private bills committee of the Ontario government, on behalf of the Co-op.

If the charter is granted, Rochdale College will be able to provide social, educational and research facilities, accommodations and meals for male and female full-time students drawn from all faculties and schools of a university, college, or law school in Metropolitan Toronto.

It will not be granted the power to confirm degrees.

Hopes are high that the bill will succeed, since a similar bill granting college status to Westminster College in the University of Western Ontario was passed without much trouble.

To consider Varsity changes

The Students' Administrative Council will consider changes in its constitution affecting the contracts of the editors of The Varsity and Torontonensis at the 11th general meeting tonight.

At the last regular meeting Publications Commissioner Dave Beatty gave notice of a motion which would strike from the contract forms a policy statement drawn up by council in 1930.

The statement lays down for both editors broad policy objectives which they are expected to pursue in producing their publications.

The editor of The Varsity for 1964-65 will be appointed at the same meeting. The two applicants, Jim Laxer, present features editor, and Paul Chumak (II SMC) will make presentations to the meeting and the results of a Varsity staff vote will be announced.

Threatens to sue Varsity

The president-elect of the University of British Columbia students' council has said he will issue a writ threatening to sue The Varsity for an editorial commenting on his election.

The editorial, in the Feb. 19 issue of The Varsity, said in part: "McAfee is a former president of Canadian University Press. CUP is still strying to recover; we mourn Roger McAfee, who termed the editorial very damaging, said he would send a writ last week, but declined to say whether he would sue for libel.

The Varsity has not yet received the writ.

Two deaths at Vic

Doug Wright

Funeral service for Doug Wright, third-year Victoria College general science student, will be held today.

Wright died suddenly in his residence room Saturday of natural causes.

Service will be held at 11 a.m. at Turner and Porter Funeral Home, 2357 Bloor St. West, with burial at Park Lawn Cemetery.

Jack Scott

Funeral service for Jack Scott, Victoria university superintendent of buildings, will be held today.

Mr. Scott died during the weekend of a heart attack.

Service will be held at 1:30 p.m. in the Victoria College Chapel with burial at Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

Massey gives one pint

Blood drips on today as the final Red Cross Clinic of the year heads into its final three days.

Most encouraging results to date were from St. Mikes, 286 pints; Vic, 229; Trinity, 198; and Dents, 112. Most discouraging result goes to Massey College, whose 90 residents gave one pint at their clinic.

Total contributions as of last night were 1,142 pints, an increase of 90 pints as compared to the same time last year, when the campaign reached 1,759 pints.

Beginning today, and continuing, until Friday, the clinic will be located in the Sigmund Samuel Library 9-11 a.m. and 12:30-4 p.m.

Quiz tourney semi-finals

The Interfaculty Quiz Tournament is entering the semi-final playoffs, the last round before the championship final.

All games are played in Rm. 106, University College.

The results of the quarter finals are as follows;

Medicine 185 U.C. 155
Law 235 Victoria 200
Engineering 280 St.M. 170
Trinity 220 New 160

The winning teams will compete against each other to decide contestants in the championship round.

Law will play off against Trinity Thursday, and Engineering and Medicine will meet next Monday.

The championship finals will be held in the West Hall of University College Mar. 13 at 4 p.m.

There will also be a third-place consolation final for the two teams who were losers in the semi-finals.

Intelligence, Smell, politics

Love among the high IQs — the old principle of natural selection operating on college campuses — is producing smarter people.

This conclusion was reached by Professor John Platt of the University of Chicago.

"About half college men marry college women..."

"This is preference, not just propinquity. I sometimes suspect that intelligence, smell and politics are what really determine our choice of a mate..."

"The important thing is that these college marriages produce brighter children."

Prof. Platt writes in the University of Chicago magazine Context.

Says universities need more $$$

Dr. J. G. Hagey, president of Waterloo University, yesterday expressed further concern about the inadequacy of the last two provincial budgets, which he says provide $65,000,000 less to universities than they sought.

Speaking at a joint meeting of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association and the Association of Municipal Electric Utilities at the Royal York Hotel, Dr. Hagey said that in view of the prediction of vastly increased enrolments, the universities may be very short of needed facilities in five years unless they and the government co-operate more.

"The government appears to be demanding that the universities resort to the use of temporary quarters and facilities," he said.

Last month The Varsity quoted Dr. Hagey as saying there would probably be an "across-the-board increase" in university fees to accommodate the rising operating costs which are affecting most universities.

Dr. Hagey did not blame only the government. He said the universities had failed to work together, and accused the larger universities of snobbery.

When he went into university work 10 years ago he said he would probably find that "there was just as great a tendency on the part of the big toads in the puddle to look down their academic noses at the small one as there was on the part of big companies in industry."

Mounties may ogle folksinger

Richard Pope of the SAC Canadian-Canadian committee thinks that Gilles Vigneault's March 14 concert in Hart House will be closely scrutinized by the RCMP.

Mounties watch Vigneault's important appearances in Montreal, Pope said.

A prominent French-Canadian chansonnier (or folksinger), Vigneault is an avowed socialist, separatist, pacifist and nationalist.

"He's one of the few performers popular enough not to be hurt by publicity of his political views," Pope says.

Ryerson and York students have shown some interest but U of T will have the first chance at the tickets.

But Pope reports that response has been slower than he expected.

Only about 200 out of more than 600 tickets have been sold so far.

Vigneault has just finished another sell-out, standing-room-only week at the Comedie Canadienne in Montreal.

His Hart House concert will be his first in English Canada with the exception of a brief CBC appearance.

Decries stress on science

Reverend Eugene C. LeBel, president of the University of Windsor, last night said that the modern preponderance of belief in science is a result of the failures of modern education.

Dr. LeBel speaking to an audience at Beth Tzedec Synagogue, criticized the almost exclusive interest of modern educationists in science. He said the popularizers of scientific fields have gone beyond their depths and made absurd statements.

Their teachings have prejudiced the young, who have lost contact with older traditions and become amoral, he said.

He stressed that the basic difficulty with our whole civilization is that it has lost the capacity to respond to the Judaeo-Christian heritage.

"The 19th and 20th centuries are unable to contact the vital sap of the Judaeo-Christian root."

Students, he said are conditioned to believe that everything true and wholesome in our society stems from the Greek and Roman tradition.

Has 'remedy' for apathy

A group of students from the Toronto area have come up with a "CANADA-100" project as a solution to the problem of what they call the apathetic Canadian.

The project's aim is to help a group of Canadians (between the ages of 18 and 25) gain a knowledge of Canada so that the group would "become a rich source of new approaches to and interpretations of Canadianhood," according to Dale Taylor of Massey College.

The students would be able to "inject substance and commitment" into the current debates concerning Quebec, Taylor said. The project suggests reading, thinking, and travelling to obtain knowledge of Canada.

As a start, a small group of students attending post-secondary institutions in the Toronto area will be selected by application and interview to read extensively during the summer on aspects of Canada and during the 1964-1965 school term they will meet for group discussion, study and business.

CUS forms here

Application forms for the CUS seminar "A New Concept of Federation" are expected at the students' council office by noon today.

The seminar will be held in Quebec City Aug. 31-Sept. 6.

Findings of the seminar will be used to form the basis of the brief to be submitted by CUS to the Royal Commission on Biculturalism and Bilingualism.

a semantic subterfuge

The Campus Co-operative Residence Incorporated is requesting college status for its residential system, to be known as Rochdale College.

This year the Co-op is providing accommodation for more than 200 students, at a far lower rate than any of the university residences.

The Co-op is asking the Ontario legislature to grant it college status so that it will be able to provide more residential space, library, research and seminar facilities. The need for such space is admitted by all, including the university.

The Co-op has done an extensive amount of work on preparing its case, and part of this preparation involved obtaining the university's consent. The university's permission is not required for the granting of college status, because the Co-op will not be part of the university's teaching system, but obviously its concurrence is desirable so that the two groups can work in co-operation.

But the university, more accurately, the administrative vice-president, Frank Stone, has not been conspicuous in the encouragement or co-operation extended to the Co-op. In fact, Mr. Stone appears to have been reluctant to have the Co-op attain college status.

In its negotiations with the university, the Co-op inevitably encountered the presence of Mr. Stone, who wanted to refer the matter to the board of governors. Why Mr. Stone, who is the university's chief financial officer, was interfering in what is obviously a policy decision is a good question.

The Co-op spent considerable time and money documenting its case for presentation to the board meeting last week. The item, although on the agenda, was not considered, probably because of time factors.

While neither Mr. Stone nor the board can prohibit the legislature from the granting of college status, the fact that the university has not passed an opinion on the matter could affect the decision reached by the private members' bills committee, which will consider the request tomorrow.

The basis of Mr. Stone's obstruction appears to be a belief that a body such as the Co-op, which is independent of the university, should not be able to use the word "college" as part of its name.

Mossey College, to name one institution, is an independently incorporated college, and it had no trouble obtaining its college status.

Mr. Stone's position is in great contrast to that taken by the University of Western Ontario on a similar occasion.

Westminster College at Western is an independent residential college, owned and operated by the United Church. When Westminster was established, the Western administration did all it could to co-operate with the college. Presumably this co-operation was due to a recognized need for residence space and a desire to aid a body interested in alleviating the shortage.

Residence facilities is one of the greatest problems at this university. As in all other areas there is a shortage of funds, but the residence problem is more acute because the government does not provide funds for residence construction.

On this campus the problem has been partially reduced by the Co-op, which has plans to expand even more, in addition to plans to provide library and other academic facilities.

But apparently there is a dog-in-the-manger at this university who places more value on word choice than fulfilling residence requirements.

To borrow a phrase, the whole situation appears to be a semantic subterfuge erected to prevent any shred of power from eluding the grasp of the administrative vice-president.

Letters to the Editor

Lit elections farce

I am one of the many students enrolled at University College who feels that the elections for positions on the Lit have been one huge farce. Aside from the "political deals, voter apathy and carnival-style electioneering", many of us are up in arms about the clanishness, yes, the clanishness, Phillip, of the newly acclaimed executive.

With all due respects to their possible potential as executives of this college, and with the exception of Mr. Greenspan, the acclaimed members of the new Lit have previously shown little or no interest in Lit affairs, and have not demonstrated the necessary leadership qualities required for those positions. It seems as though someone from the second floor of Cody House awoke one morning with the bright idea of looking for glory and prestige, and by the time grace was said at dinner that night, she had convinced herself, her ex-room mate, the latter's boyfriend and one of the girls down the hall that getting onto the Lit wasn't such a bad idea, that getting onto the Lit could prove easy (as it has in 3 out of the four cases mentioned here), and that it sure would be nice to get their names in The Varsity every now and then, for obvious reasons. A "self-perpetuating clique"? If this is the model that future Lits are going to fashion themselves after, if this is the new regime, then those of us who are fortunate enough to be in our graduating years had better head for the library, get down to work and thank God that we'll be spared from the New Disorder.

Varsity immature

The editorial policy of The Varsity remains as immature as ever; yet it is not to joust with you that I write.

This university has received a very great honor in having its Chorus accepted to represent Canada at the International University Choral Festival in Lincoln Centre in New York next September. This success certainly was not considered very important by your newspaper.

Come down out of your ivory tower, Mr. Editor. Can't you forget for a while your idealistically impractical ideas and give credit when credit is due? This university has a number of organizations much more worthy of credit than the trivia which you promote.

Rober Meldrum, III U.C.

QUEBEC:

The Quebecois maintain that French is being replaced in Quebec by English as the accepted tongue. They feel doubly slighted by this turn of events because their ancestors got to Canada first: they made up nine-tenths of the population of Canada in 1763 when the English came in and "colonialized" them. French has since gradually been lowered to the status of a family language.

Today, though Canada is officially bilingual, English is the language of business and public affairs. If a French-Canadian wishes to participate in the world of big business or big politics, he must learn English and more or less forget about his mother tongue. French-Canadians consider a country-man who has made a success in business or public affairs a sell-out and even a traitor for this reason. How can he remain truly French-Canadian, the nationalists say, if he does not speak French as his first language? Thus the language barrier acts to divide French-Canadians among themselves as well as to inflame the intercultural dispute.

The problems of church domination and inadequate education are closely related; one cannot be examined separately from the other. Education in Quebec has for two centuries been run by the Catholic Church. The church school commissions have always emphasized the humanities. As a result, educated French-Canadians have been better prepared to enter law, medicine, or the ministry, than politics, business, or science and technology. Two reasons for this emphasis on humanities have been proposed: some explain it as the natural result of Catholic emphasis on saving the soul rather than on saving the world; others, and these include the separatists, claim that the Catholic clergy received their sovereignty over politics and education in Quebec from the British in 1763. In return, the story goes, the clergy agreed to keep French-Canadians intellectually backward and emotionally pacified.

The control of the church over politics in Quebec is unusual even for a Catholic nation. For example, the church runs a morning radio program on the eve of provincial elections. On June

It's hard to be Miss C

By BOB SOROKOLIT

Canada's Queen has been on campus since September but probably only a handful of students have known her.

No bugle fanfares . . . but an occasional horn or waltz as she goes by, no ermine robes . . . but a warm-looking fur coat, no crowns . . . but a stylish hat or a headscarf, and no jewels . . . but golden-blond hair and a pair of eyes that are the inconspicuous trademarks of the currently reigning Canadian beauty.

But away from everyday classes at the university, well-known as Miss Canada of 1964, the busy glamer who opened Toronto's newest shopping plaza one day and then two days later helped Prime Minister Lester Pearson unveil the city's newest airport last week.

Carol Ann Balmer, a 19-year-old doll in first year physical education at the University of Toronto, looked into judges' eyes and walked off with the prize at the Miss Canada Pageant, televised from O'Keefe Centre last November.

And this wasn't the first time! Carol Ann had once been judged before in other contests, and had stolen half-dozen crowns and titles in the past four years, including Miss Metro Sweetheart and Miss Toronto of 1963.

But as they say, the girl not only has beauty but brains and talent. Her phys-ed course will lead her to teaching gym eventually, but along the way she has chosen the so-easy options of calculus, English, and anatomy. She says she is enjoying swimming more this year—because of a smooth aerodynamic form in a bathing suit, why not?

Singing and dancing lessons as a young girl also helped Carol Ann win the talent section of the Miss Canada show. An odds-on favorite all the way in the contest, she clinched the title by responding to the topical, bicultural kick and singing Le Fiacre.

On Montreal television following a French singing appearance, she was also interviewed in our other language. Asked why she didn't study French at university, Miss Canada, Carol Ann Balmer, is studying Physical Education at U of T.

20, 1956, the broadcast went, in part, as follows:

Sovereign authority, by whatever government it be exercised, comes solely from God... it is then an absolute error to believe that authority comes from the multitude, from the numbers, from the people, to pretend that authority does not belong simply to those who exercise it, but rather that they hold only a simple mandate, always revocable by the people. This error, which dates from the Reformation, is based on the principle mistake that man has no other master than his own reason.

Clearly popular participation in political decisions is not being encouraged by such a broadcast. And behind the broadcast lurks control of the political process itself.

Since 1959, however, the hold of the clergy over politics and education has weakened. Before that time the Church was closely implicated in the corrupt practices of the Quebec provincial government under Maurice Duplessis. During the '50's, Duplessis refused millions of dollars in federal aid to education in the name of nationalism. When he died in 1959, liberals like Rene Levesque came out of hiding and worked with the new Lesage government to initiate reforms. Millions of dollars extorted from the Federal government by thinly-veiled threats of separatism are now being plowed directly into education. The church is consequently losing its monopoly in the field.

The sudden increase in support for education has had immediate effects far beyond the classroom. Educated Quebecois are being turned out in far greater numbers. The education they have received, furthermore, is no longer fitting them out for placid acceptance of the status quo: the new education and university atmosphere has attuned them to the need of their province and to the alternatives for growth available to it.

These young educated French-Canadians form the background of the separatist movement. According to a recent survey published in Maclean's Magazine, 13 per cent of all French-Canadians are avowed separatists; among university students the figure rises to 25 per cent—and this figure understates the case. While these secession-minded students quarrel among themselves over what form separatism is to take after its primary goal has been achieved, they are united by their nationalism and are increasingly coming together on details. In fact, more student separatists chapters are affiliating themselves with the views of the Rassemblement pour l'Indépendance Nationale (Assembly for National Independence), a party founded by Marcel Chaput in 1961.

The RIN today holds no elective offices in the federal or provincial governments. But its program is clearly defined: if it were voted into power in Quebec tomorrow, it would secede from Canada on the day after and continue with the nationalization of industries, the liberalization of government, state control over aid to education, and other equally centralizing measures.

Separatism has been compared with Castroism for obvious reasons: the measures it strives for are radical, statist, and anti-clerical; the separatists feel that nationalization of industry must be used to rid Quebec of the "curse of foreign exploitation." But separatists are rarely communists. They are nationalists, pure and simple.

Currently, the foremost hot-bed of separatism lies in and around the University of Montreal. Run by the Catholic clergy, the university is the scene of in-fighting between French-Canadian students and the governmental authorities. Campaigns by students, sparked by caricatures in the school paper, The Latin Quarter, have helped precipitate the imminent resignation of the priest-rector. He will be replaced soon by a secular educator. On the other side of the coin, there are some students, apparently, who are paid to keep tabs on the separatist movement for the federal government. Word has it that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pays twenty students in the University of Montreal alone to seek out and inform on their most secession-minded peers.

Canada

said: "I did not like studying French by just reading novels. Conversational French is more interesting. And besides, I'm not interested in just a B.A."

Knowing French was probably convenient for her when she was the honored guest with foreign ambassadors at Ottawa's Diplomatic Offices Club Ball.

Besides winning a $1,000 scholarship and a trunkful of prizes, she also got a volume of public appearance contracts as Miss Canada.

Her first pleasant duty involved flying to Vancouver for a football final and the crowning of another queen, Miss Grey Cup.

Following exams in May, Carol Ann leaves on a Middle East tour for a month with the CBC concert party to sing and entertain UN troops from seven nations on the Gaza Strip.

She returns to Toronto for rehearsals for her Miss Canada Show with six girls from last year's pageant. The girls are booked for over a week at the Royal York's Imperial Room and then go on a Canadian tour.

The golden bubble bursts, or maybe it will just grow into another bigger and brighter one, when she crowns the new monarch of Canada at the O'Keefe again, on Nov. 18.

So much for the queen... but what about the girl? "It's hard being the typical Canadian girl all the time with people watching you. But so far it hasn't been too difficult with just intervals of appearances between periods at school," Carol said.

"And it doesn't do much for my social life. I don't have that much time. The appearances are a little more than just 'nice breaks' between classes."

She was the top high school model in Toronto but has "never considered modelling as a career. It's too up and down. And after 10 years when your looks are gone, what can you do?" Therefore she is considering teaching in her future.

The fiction of the threat of "the flight of capital" must be exposed for what it is — a bogey conjured by financialists to impress the uninformed with an alleged intellectual superiority required in dealing in foreign exchange.

The threat is, that if a profitable investment climate is not fostered and maintained in a country, the so-called money capital of the country, and the money capital of other countries supposedly invested in the country, will "flow" out of the country to other countries.

Money in itself is not capital more than milk tickets are milk, nor does money flow across international boundaries. Money can be exchanged for capital goods and know-how — the means of production — but it is these means of production, not money, that are the capital, and that flow from one country to another.

The money of a country is a claim on the wealth of the country in and for which it is issued. If one had a billion dollars in Canadian money, he does not have a dime with which to buy goods in another country. It is only by an arrangement between national governments that one may exchange the money of his country for the money of another country, which he may then exchange for the goods and/or services of such other country.

This is all very elementary, but it is necessary to an understanding of foreign investments to know that the only movement of capital, and of profits on foreign investments, is by the movement of goods from one country to another — not the movement or flow of money from one country to another.

It should be clear that the maintenance of stability in foreign exchange should not be a problem.
The only way we can pay is in goods and services. If we cannot pay promptly, we must arrange in good time to pay later. It is as simple as that.

It will be apparent, however, that it is to the advantage of dealers in money exchange to keep the goods exchange arrangements always unsettled in order to be able to discount national currencies because of temporary or un-arranged imbalances in goods exchange. And, of course, the dealers in money exchange add something to "protect" themselves against a possible further variation in the goods exchange imbalance by the time the money exchange is completed.

The system also lends itself to manipulation by purely speculative money exchange dealers who cause a distortion of the true goods exchange situation by buying and selling — exchanging — foreign currencies and securities. Such ma-nipulations are nothing short of a gambling racket at the expense of legitimate traders and the public who must pay the exchange penalties because of an artificially induced imbalance in money exchange.

This "racket" can be eliminated when national money replaces privately created money. The use of national money can easily be limited to legitimate goods and services transactions — including investments. It is goods and services that are invested — not money.

Certain international monetary authorities have recently been discussing an international clearing house through which stability can be given to international exchange.
In a broadcast over CFRB over thirty years ago I advocated the establishment of an international clearing house as a logical extension of national money system, which proposal I shall deal with in my next article.

PEAK YEAR FOR THE GALS: 6 OF 8 TITLES

Varsity women had a peak year, winning six of eight possible intercollegiate trophies. The record books credit the Blue and White with a complete sweep in the fall sports of outdoor archery, tennis, and swimming. January and February were productive months as badminton, indoor archery and hockey titles were won while narrow defeats were suffered in volleyball and basketball, both to Western.

Fortunately, many of the Varsity teams will return next year still intact. Archery's record-breaking duo of Juli Yamasaki and Gail White are hoping for an encore along with promising newcomer Pat Burbridge. The tennis, although losing star netter Veronica Holdup, will still maintain the invaluable services of Brenda Nunns. Three aquatic freshmen, speedsters Fair Lindsay and Carol McBain and synchronized swimmer Diana Crosbie, are expected to high-light next year's powerful swim team.

It has also been predicted that there is no stopping the volleyball and Basketball teams next year. The ball-handlers have had too many dry seasons in the past to settle for second or third place. Badminton will still have its Nancy Vincent but hockey will lose its all-star line of Linda Maki, Jan McAdam, and Maureen McConnell. Sue Firth will ski again but Donna Atkinson and Jean Mackworth will be leaving the fencing team high and dry.

FINAL INTERFACULTY RESULTS

Badminton

PHE had to fight to the wire to win the interfaculty badminton trophy. Bonnie Emsley (III UC) took the singles trophy in her final win over Ann Kubar (I PHE). Mary Hucks (I Vic) won the consolation round. In doubles, the team of Sue Jarrett and Nancy Vincent (II PHE) had little trouble over Carol Staples and Elaine Binkley (II SMC), last year's winners. Wendy Toll and Sue Murray (II PHE) defeated a UC team in the consolation finals.

Hockey

In the two-game, total-point hockey finals, Vic I sidled by PHE I 5-3 to capture the trophy. In the second game on Monday there was no way of containing PHE forward Joan Connell as she tallied all three goals in a 3-3 tie with the Vicites. However, this was not enough to make up for PHE's two-point deficit from last Wednesday's game, in which Linda Maki (III Vic) and Judy Probert (II Vic) each scored goals. Vic scorers in the Monday game were Carolyn Ball, with two, and Rosemary Kennedy, one.

One of world's best

College squad faces Scots

The best of the intercollegiate league's rugby set will hardly complete their final examinations before they'll be back on the pitch for another big contest.

A universities' all-star squad has arranged to play an exhibition game against Scotland, May 11 at Varsity Stadium. The game will be one of five played by the Scottish team during a cross-Canada tour.

Scotland is one of the top rugby sides in the world. They recently won the United Kingdom championship and played to a 0-0 tie with New Zealand's All-Blacks, regarded as the best in the world.

Although the universities' roster is not final, there will probably be 10 Varsity players competing under Varsity coach Dick Gaetor. Paul Wilson will captain the team and will likely be joined by Gethin Hughes, Rich Hayman, John Cameron, Ian Sinclair, Bob Dodds, Bill Stow, Larry Johnson, John McNeil and Rod Sanders.

Players from McGill and Queen's will round out the roster.

Varsity staff to vote

A vote will be held in the Varsity office at 1:15 p.m. today to decide who the Varsity staff wishes as Varsity editor for next year. Applicants are Jim Laxer and Paul Chumak. Each man will make a brief speech and will answer questions from eligible voters who are:

Squashers Go South

Doug Tilley and Jim Rowland, members of Varsity's intercollegiate squash team, will compete in the U.S. national college championships at Dartmouth University Friday and Saturday.

Awrey To Europe

Defenceman Bob Awrey of Varsity Blues has been invited to play hockey next year for the GAK club of Graz, Austria. The team is regarded as a "B" class amateur European hockey operation.

Redmen knocked out of playoffs by lawyers

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Law Lords, winners of Division IV, sneaked out of the obscurity of that group to stun University College Redmen, 7-4, in quarter-final play for the Jennings Cup. UC had finished a close second to Victoria College in Group I.

Law overcame UC leads of 2-0, 3-1, and 4-2 and scored five unanswered goals in the third period to eliminate UC. Steve Arnold and Charles MacNab paced the winners with a pair of goals each, while Arnie Cader, Bob Innes and Mike Wallace potted singletons.

Other quarter-final play saw PHE I come up with a performance worthy of champions while defeating Trinity A, Group II winners, 4-1.

Jack Thain scored a hat trick for PHE and Bill Waters the other. Mark Bowden potted Trinity's lone marker.

The PHE defence was especially prominent as well as goalie Ron Belcher. Bill Stewart sparkled in the nets for Trinity as he kicked out about 50 shots, many of them on almost sure goals.

Preliminary games saw PHE I defeat Jr. SPS, 6-1, and Vic II edge Wycliffe, 3-1, in overtime.

Intercollegiate playoffs got underway yesterday. In quarter-final play, defending champion Vic IV knocked off Vic VI, 4-2. Al Crosbie paced the winners with two goals. Dave Bennett and Jon Baird added the other two. Dave Galloway and Al Deacon hit for the losers.

WATER POLO

Group I showed a marked superiority in interfac polo as playoffs got underway for the Eckhardt Cup. Sr. SPS, fourth-place finishers in Group I, easily downed St. Mike's A, winners of Group II, 7-2.

Meds I yr., which finished second in the top group, built up an 11-3 halftime lead to coast to a 13-6 win over Dents A, third in Group II.

Tom Verth scored all six Dentistry goals, while Graeme Barber and John Maki each potted half a dozen for the doctors.

BASKETBALL

St. Mike's A sewed up the runner-up spot in Group I, edging first-place PHE I, 48-43, while Sr. SPUS defaulted to UC I.

In the St Mike's - PHE contest, Ray Schaedler potted 13 for the winning Irish and Fred Tonin hooped 11. Wayne Wessell of PHE was high man in the game with 14 points, Jim Holowachuk added 10 to the Phys Ed total.

In Group II, Law A doomed PHE II to a winless season by defeating PHE, 29-22. Joe White scored 10 for PHE, Bill Dauphinee was tops for Law with eight points.

UC II had three men in the double figures in a 43-28 win over Dentistry Hans Tammemagi potted 13 and John Radchenko and Gil Schneider added 10 apiece.

Mike Moore potted 19 in a 41-22 Pharmacy A win over Architecture A, while Chuck Homer hooped 18 in a Vic I 42-22 win over Trinity A in Group III action.

West wins Potter again

By PAUL HENDERSON

Varsity guard Dave West has become the second two-time winner of the Dr. W. A. Potter Trophy.

For the second consecutive year, West won the award, which goes annually to the Varsity player "who in the opinion of his teammates is the most worthy member of the team."

The selection of West came as no surprise to Toronto fans. He was not only the top scorer on the Varsity team this season but also won the intercollegiate scoring title.

West netted 314 points in 12 Senior Intercollegiate contests for an average of 26.2 per game. This mark bettered the all-time Varsity record of 20.6 set by West last season.

West's average is also likely the highest ever compiled in an intercollegiate schedule of 10 or more games. Gene Rizak's mark of 25.7, established ed over 10 games for McMaster Marauders in 1960-61, was recognized as the previous all-time high.

DAVE WEST

Bob Berkman, the 6'4" centre who defected from the U.S. to McGill Redmen in 1961-62, averaged 29.8 but participated in a six-game schedule and scored only 179 points.

In his first season with Blues, West, a graduate of Bloor Collegiate, scored 136 points in 10 games. Last year he hooped 247 in 12 outings. In his three seasons combined, he has totalled 697 points in 34 games for a 20.5 average, also an all-time Varsity record.

In addition to his prolific scoring, West is one of the best playmakers in the league and a relentless opponent on defence. The quick, six-foot, 23-year-old is in his final year at Victoria College, but may return to take the Winter course at Ontario College of Education and play another season with Blues.

Since its inception in 1958, only Peter Potter, son of the donor Dr. Potter of Niagara Falls, has won the trophy twice. The former guard won the award in 1958 and 1960.

O'Hara won't get shot at Kidd

By UNCLE HARRY

University of Toronto distance runner Bruce Kidd battles American customs and revenue officials for the final time this indoor season when he competes at the Chicago Daily News Relays Friday night in the windy city.

Kidd hopes to smuggle back the Relays two-mile crown which he will attempt to regain. In 1962, he won the Relays two-mile, but last year could only manage third when Jim Beatty set the boards world record of 8:30.7.

The Varsity runner's main opposition should come from Bob Schul, who placed second for the past two years in the Chicago race. In seven runs in the same field as Kidd, the Miami of Ohio student has taken the silver medal each time, with Kidd winning four and finishing third in the rest.

Three weeks ago in New York, Kidd edged past Schul in the final 25 yards to win the NYCA two-mile by two feet.

Miller Tom O'Hara had attempted to enter Friday's two-mile field, but the meet promoters persuaded him to run the mile, leaving the only other major competitor in the race as gotham's Pete McCordle.

In the infield: Uncle Harry's Handicaps Dept: Both Bill Crothers and O'Hara will establish indoor world records in Friday's meet. . . At Chicago last year, Crothers missed Peter Shell's 2:06 standard by four-tenths but should have no difficulty breaking the record this time. . .

O'Hara will not only be attempting to lower his own 3:56.8 mark, but will be shooting at Snell's outdoor best of 3:54.4—it's Tom's home town. . .

only two more meets remain for Kidd: the Highlander's show in Hamilton and the British Championships Easter weekend.

Dr. Kirk Martin

Marriage should be a duel

By BOB AARON

Marriage should be a duel rather than a duet, a Toronto marriage counsellor said last night.

Dr. Birk Martin told a Hillel audience that an argument is good to clear the air in a marriage, but should not deteriorate into a "quarrel."

"It will be good if couples engage in a decent fight now and then," he said.

Dr. Martin maintained that chances for success in a low-income marriage are greater because there is less money to be spent on an extra-marital affair.

"The chances are most of us will succumb unless we are more careful."

Married couples can be classified into seven groups, according to Dr. Martin. Among these are the double-crossers, the provocateurs, the snobs, and the rapists. There is also the analyst, who takes pride in dissecting the characters of his spouse, his in-laws, and his outlaws. Further categories are the myna birds, who are never satisfied, and the escape artists, who "fall asleep on you, assuring you they are not bored just tired!"

Dr. Martin said love alone cannot sustain a marriage. Character and circumstance are major factors in determining the success of a marriage.

More than half of the female patients in mental hospitals today are there because of ignorance of sex, Dr. Martin said. He went on to criticize modern theologians who treat sex as something other than a gift endowed by nature for the enhancement of the species.

Some listeners were surprised to learn that many couples in Eastern Europe in the last century first met only under the marriage canopy. "More often than not, the men fainted immediately," Dr. Martin continued.

A question period followed the talk. Dr. Martin said Fanny Hill was, in his opinion, a poor innocent domestic who is now officially a bad girl. In a professional opinion of the chances for success in the marriage of Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton, Dr. Martin said a relationship between such people is "highly unpredictable."

Quebec intellectuals leaving church: Ward

By GEORGE BRYANT

Doug Ward (III EMM) said last night the Roman Catholic church in Quebec is "very much discredited, and the intelligentsia are leaving it in droves".

Ward Student Administrative Council president, spoke to the Trinity United Church Young Adults Club on the topic "Protestantism in Quebec." Stressing that the Catholic Church is still very much a part of the French people's life in Quebec, he said, that "two important things are changing this picture."

"First, the rising wave of anti-clericalism which has seen many Catholic priests subscribing to an ecumenically-prone United Church magazine, and 'more new books are coming out of the French press, than anywhere else in Canada.'"

"Second, the strict rules of the Duplessis regime on the press are now relaxed to allow more criticism of the church." In this regard, Ward felt the death of Duplessis, "who had so much power in his hands, is much more important than that Lesage had taken over."

Ward felt that Bill 60, now pending in the Quebec legislature would have an important effect on the Catholic parochial schools.

"French textbooks are the worst in the world—there is a totalitarian religious program thoroughly mixed with education." In addition, "one rosary plus two rosaries equals three rosaries." The texts are morbid — "full of pictures of hearses, graves and funeral proceedings," he said.

The reason for the poor quality of the texts, he said was the corrupt publishing system. "Orders of monks and nuns put out the text and every French child must buy it—there is no open market for textbooks. All royalties go to the order or to a few people."

Ward believed that a united church in Quebec, with Baptist, Presbyterian, and United Church elements — "like the Protestant church of France, — was the answer to French-Protestant needs.

He pointed out that the liturgical processes must accommodate the desire of the French to participate in the services.

In the meantime, "The United Church should continue to be a 'reasonable gadfly'—'a thorn in the flesh' which will challenge the Roman Catholic church in Quebec," he concluded.

Reason necessary to know God

By JIM MacKENZIE
Varsity news editor

The spirit of Thomist philosophy is simple: faith as well as reason is necessary to know and believe in God.

This was the answer St. Thomas Aquinas had to the conflict of philosophy and theology, famed philosopher Etienne Gilson said Friday at St. Michael's College.

Dr. Gilson founded the Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies at St. Michael's College in 1929, and remains its director of studies, although he lives in Paris.

He was giving the first of four lectures on Thomism during his annual visit to the Institute.

Dr. Gilson stressed that Aquinas was basically Aristotelian in his high evaluation of the intellect as, leading to a knowledge of the first cause. As Aristotle left study of the Good for those most learned, Thomas made it embrace an act of faith as well as philosophical reasoning, Dr. Gilson said.

"Since the gap between man and God is so great, man cannot expect to know all about God by reason alone. Thomas Aquinas solved the problem of what to believe, how much to believe and not believe by saying an act of faith is necessary for those who are to achieve beatitude."

Dr. Gilson said the intellect can teach man much, but not everything. "The intellect can only be moved by another part of the soul, the will." It is this act of the will that prompts man to believe what God has revealed of his nature and what cannot be understood by man's reason alone, he said.

If either intellect or will is missing in man's efforts to know God, man will not know God, but rather a part of God. It is only when belief (from an act of faith) accompanies intellectual knowledge that man knows the true God: "the God of Moses, Abraham and Jacob," rather than a first principle.

Dr. Gilson continues his lecture series the next three Fridays at 3 p.m. in Carr Hall.

CUS discounts available

Finally U of T students know exactly where merchandise discounts are available with their CUS cards.

A combined CUS committee from U of T, York and Ryerson has established the Student Discount Service in which 43 merchants are participating offering discounts of 10 to 25 per cent.

The merchants entering the plan allegedly benefit from increased volumes of sales to university students.

Peter Williams (III UC), chairman of committee feels that the discount service does something tangible for the students by easing the financial situation for them.

He added that the plan will be extended to more merchants next year.

To receive the benefits of the service, students merely show their CUS (NFCUS) cards when making their purchase.

Jailed for selling bennies

KINGSTON (Special)—Ian K. Murray, 19, of Toronto Friday was sentenced to 12 months in reformatory for trafficking in benzadrine tablets at Queen's University.

Murray was committed of peddling "bennies" in a Queen's residence Wednesday, and apparently mistook an RCMP plainclothes constable for a student.

He offered the officer 750 tablets at 20 cents each. The officer bought 100 for $25.

A recent report in a Canadian weekly, The Catholic Register, quoted an unidentified student as saying that he was among at least 30 per cent of undergraduates hooked on "bennies" and other stay-awake pills.

Dr. H. M. Campbell, head of medical services at Queen's, last week termed the report ridiculous.

The Egg

HH play too good for pun

By BILL CAMERON

Emile Magis feels out of the world. He is the man at the keyhole, or standing in the background of the photograph; his life is spent in breaking through the looking-glass into the real world of experience—the Egg.

Heinar Pillar, as Emile Magis, takes us on a Cook's tour of his life — explaining, expanding, and declaiming, as the mood takes him. Mr. Pillar does a thoroughly professional job of Felicien Marc-eau's anti-hero—he has a precise stage manner, and a nicely turned talent for high comedy. Once he has got past a tendency to overpace (especially the first five minutes) the audience is quite comfortable with him, and with the play.

The regular, dependable Hart House bunch is back as well, and in force. Leslie Mulholland, John Labow, Janet Amos, Rita Merkelis, Joseph Warman, and Sheila MacDonald are all there, some in two or three characters. The minor people have a tendency to wilt against Pillar's fast-moving Magis, but the more extended characters are nicely filled-in. Mulholland and Labow do very well by Berthoulet, an overbearing civil servant, and Dugommier, a hearts-and-flowers adulterer; Miss Merkelis is gracious and alive as the hypocritical Hortense; Miss MacDonald is nicely uninhibited as Rose, a straightforward bed-bunny. I was particularly impressed with Miss Amos's lecherous spinster, Mille. Duvant, and Mr. Warman's two small parts as Raffard and the Judge.

Mr. Allan has a dependable and intelligent company, and he directs them well, with a clean sense of grouping and movement. Even with most actors doubling parts, the cast is large enough to be unwieldy; but Mr. Allan has turned an exercise in field-marshalship into a smooth and graceful production.

There's one drawback to all this: the comic sense of the play is exploited so completely that the audience tends to lose sight of the theme (I suppose one would have to call it): Magis' detachment from the world, his struggle to break through into the egg. So the trial scene, which should have been delightful to watch (the system finally working for Magis, the dissolution of the looking-glass barrier) is simply repetitious, because nothing visually or comically new is happening except Mr. Warman's obtuse judge.

As far as the comedy goes, The Egg is quite successful and extremely satisfying. Pat Gangnon's open and flexible set is just right, and Ronald Montgomery's lighting is equal-effective (especially the use of the cyclorama as a counterpoint to the action).

Hart House has had a good season from its guest directors, and Mr. Allan has rounded it off nicely.

Engineering depts. called narrow-minded

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. (Special) — Engineering departments of Canadian universities were criticized here Friday for being "narrow-minded" in their approach to higher education, during a panel discussion at the annual meeting of the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario.

Derek Chase, a professional engineer from Peterborough, charged that overcrowding of engineering curricula with formal lectures and excessive homework was preventing engineering students from engaging in university activities which would develop leadership qualities.

"Such qualities are needed if they are to rise above the status of technicians," said Mr. Chase, who is employed as an application engineer in the civilian atomic power department at Canadian General Electric Company Limited.

Mr. Chase advocated introduction into universities of the discussion-session type of training as well as providing more opportunity for public speaking and debate by students.

He also recommended that engineering departments encourage the writing of three or four laboratory reports a year to ensure that students "master this important aspect of engineering communication."

Close professional control of post-graduate training, he said, would fulfil "a crying need for wise leadership at every level of a society which is becoming more and more technically oriented."

U of T second in Rochester debating tourney

The U of T debating team of John Godfrey (III Trin) and Marg MacMillan (II Trin) was second in the parliamentary division of a weekend tourney at Rochester Institute of Technology. Godfrey was judged the third-best affirmative speaker in the parliamentary round.

Karal Marling (II SMC) won the second place negative speakers award. Teams from McGill won both the parliamentary and American-style titles.

There were also teams representing Victoria, Trinity and St. Michael's Colleges in the annual tournament.

The tournament involved both parliamentary and American style debating. In contrast to the parliamentary form American debating includes a cross-examination and excludes heckling. Apart from a judge and a timekeeper, there is no audience.

In the American-style tournament, Canadian teams did well in the 14-school contest.

McGill reached the final as the best affirmative team, while St. Mike's negative team placed third. Rick Guiso (II SMC) won the second place affirmative speaker's award while Howard Goldkind (III UC) took third place speaking for the U of T negative team.

Canadian teams as usual, swept most of the prizes at the tournament with McGill displacing last year's over all winner, St. Michael's.

The divine sinners

Divinity students consider themselves sinners and law students think they're virtuous, a University of Chicago professor finds.

Writing in the university magazine Context, Professor Z. Freedman says he asked a group including divinity, law and medical students if they had during the past week dreamed of "carrying out illegal sexual, aggressive or acquisitive acts."

He asked the innocent, not the guilty ones, to raise their hands. And he tried this over several years.

"Most years either no hands were raised or very few. I then asked whether any of them had not in fact carried out at least one such illegal act in the previous year.

"In every case only a minority of each class had not actually been involved in illegal-ity

"I think that you might also be interested to know that the law students invariably rated themselves as the most virtuous and the divinity students scored themselves as the biggest sinners. |

"I was forced to interpret this seeming discrepancy as reflecting differing thresholds of consciousness, rather than the decadence of our ministry and the saintliness of our future lawmakers."

Edward Johnson building opens

The new Edward Johnson Music Building officially opens today at 3:30 p.m., followed by a reception in the foyer of the MacMillan theatre.

Musical events will be held every night during the week to mark the opening. Attendance is by invitation only.

An opening concert will be conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan and Godfrey Ridout Monday night.

Tuesday evening Greta Kraus will direct a program of chamber music. The Royal Conservatory Opera School will perform "Albert Herring" Wednesday. There will be an orchestral concert on Thursday directed by Boyd Neel.

"Albert Herring" will be repeated on Friday. The CBC Symphony Orchestra conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan and Boyd Neel will play composition by faculty members Saturday. Robert A. Rosevear will conduct the University of Toronto Concert Band on Sunday.

Milne elected SMC president

Elections at St. Michael's College returned an international executive of Canadians and Americans last Friday.

President Ed Milne is the second Canadian in the last five years to be elected to his position. The other three were American. None of the candidates for the presidency was American.

Other members of the council are Danny Knight, men's vice-president; Karal Marling, women's vice-president; Margaret Schrand secretary; Ted Phoenix, treasurer; Kevin Keough and Dianne Callon, SAC reps; Jim Walsh and Gay Prior, third and fourth year reps; Mike Foster and Cathy Lannan, second year reps; Bernie Kelly and Martha Madden, athletic reps by acclamation; Ken Smith, professional students' rep.

Of the five executive members, Phoenix, Miss Marling and Miss Schrand are American.

Sixty-six per cent of the student body voted in the election.

A tug of the briefs

Prime Minister Pearson and Mrs. Pearson paid a private call on poet E. J. Pratt, professor emeritus of Victoria College, Saturday. The 82-year-old poet, who taught both the Pearsons at Vic, has been seriously ill for some time and has been confined to his home.

Bleeding continues today in the drive to collect the university's quota of 2,000 pints. As of last Friday, 482 pints of blood had been given, or nearly one-quarter of the total blood needed.

OTTAWA (Special) — "God save the Queen if she ever visits Quebec," Michel Beaulieu, former assistant editor of the University of Montreal newspaper, said Saturday. Beaulieu said many Quebec residents regard the Queen as a representative of colonialism. A visit by her would be provocative and, if she were menaced, the situation could "degenerate into civil war."

Professor Fernand Ouellet of Laval University will speak here this Wednesday on the "Origins of French-Canadian Nationalism." The talk, to be held in Cody Hall, School of Nursing, at 8:15 p.m., is the Gray Lecture for 1964.

SASKATOON (Special) — An increase of $50 in student fees beginning next July has been announced Friday by the University of Saskatchewan. This is in line with fee increases for the Universities of British Columbia and Alberta which will also go into effect next fall.

FILTER
Players

The best-tasting filter cigarette

A question which is being raised by many persons these days is: Why should the Students' Administrative Council be granted more autonomy; and for that matter, why is student government of any importance?

In this area there are other questions which can be asked. Why should students expect to have representation on the board of governors and the Senate? Why should students either have complete control over certain of their activities and have a voice on bodies which make decisions affecting other activities?

If the question is moved to the national level it assumes a more obvious significance. It is expected that the decision-makers at this level will be responsible for their actions, and that the general public will participate in the decision-making process with public opinion pressures and elections.

This process is part of the democratic system in which we supposedly believe.

But this belief does not appear to extend to the student level. Most students, if asked, would probably not agree that students should have a voice in the university decision-making process. They would say that policy decisions should be made by persons with the knowledge and ability to do so — trained administrators and academics. If pressed, many would probably say that more policy decisions on the federal level should be made by the experts.

The general student attitude reflects a widespread distrust in democracy. The reason for this distrust lies partially in the two-fold nature of democracy — while it grants the right of individual participation, it also carries the responsibility of participation.

Most students do not want to bear such responsibility. For them it is easier to give the job to someone else. Thus the prevalent faith in government by the experts.

We still believe democracy is the best institutional framework for social organization — both on the national and student level.

And we hold that it is a positive good with inherent values, and not just a necessary evil. Therefore we choose the right and responsibility of participating in making policy decisions, and will leave the experts with advisory and administrative duties.

the Fan ban--no more happy whores

In declaring Fanny Hill obscene, Judge Everett Weaver witlessly fell prey to the absurd North American theory that immorality must lead to misery.

"The gimmick of a happy ending would seem to crown his heroine with a halo of success, and serves to recommend the life to his readers," the judge said in his decision.

If John Cleland's famous 18th-century work had ended as would a romance magazine story, with the prostitute heroine either repenting wildly in all directions or dying of syphilis, Judge Weaver might have been easier in his judgment.

But the Canadian public must be protected against happy whores.

Meanwhile, with the comparatively harmless and frothy Fanny Hill safely off the stands (after 27,683 copies were sold, we are told) another absurdity of local censorship still exists.

If you have $7.50 you can buy Henry Miller's Tropic of Cancer. But if you can only afford paperbacks, you're out of luck.

Metro morality officers last week warned bookstores they could vend the expensive edition but not the cheap one.

The Canadian poor must be protected too.

A public building was being dedicated. Inside the building the expected pomp and pageantry were on hand, the speeches and testimonials rambling on. Outside the building, the pageantry was even more pronounced. There, youth was the order of the day and soon began to outshine the fashionable glitter within.

Evidently a very different dedication was taking place on the outside. Same flashy show, but very different actors. The trappings were different and even the language spoken—latinate and sprinkled full of slang—clashed discordantly with the measured Anglo-Saxon tones echoing within. Furthermore, the voice outside spoke the language of defiance: their "dedication" was clearly designed to obstruct the official ceremonies.

It was a full-scale demonstration, in fact. Outside, in the public square, hundreds of young men and women were shouting their disapproval of the building and its occupants. But not for long.

The police made short order of it. Five hundred policemen, 50 of them on horseback, invaded the square and dispersed the stubborn, but fortunately agile, demonstrators. The official ceremonies concluded without incident.

It all happened just to the north, across the border in Quebec. The time: November, 1962. The particular demonstration was not unique to the town, Montreal, nor to the region—they have taken place since. The demonstration is typical, however, and what's more, symptomatic. It is especially symptomatic, in fact, when regarded through the eyes of two men who witnessed the demonstration. One is English-Canadian, the other, French—a Quebecois. Each has a different, equally biased, view of the event.

"Every beard in Montreal was there. Beards, leather jackets, motorcycle boots—the whole lot. The English-Canadian clearly has no sympathy for the others who filled the square that November day. He maintains that the rabble was representative of the city and of the province in general.

The Quebecois disagrees. He and his friends were in the square, he says, to protest against what they thought to be an unjust social situation. The new building, he maintains, was not to be made public at all. Instead it was to be reserved, in effect, for the sole use of the rich English-Canadian class in Montreal. As a cultural centre, the new building (actually a complex of buildings), ought to serve the whole community. But tickets are rarely sold to the general public, he claims, and when they are, they are prohibitively priced.

The invasion of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to disperse the crowd is, for the Quebecois, symbolic. "We are in a position," he says, "where the two blocks, English and French,

Campus nurses are artsy

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

If you've been in a hospital lately, you've probably noticed the difference.

If you've watched the doctor shows on television you've noticed the difference.

Or even if you've visited U of T's faculty of nursing building.

Nurses are definitely looking better these days. During a recent sojourn into the faculty of nursing building on St. George Street I observed some of the 300 young ladies that are now studying feverishly in hopes of joining the noble profession.

I asked some of them why they came to study on this campus rather than at a hospital. (Evidently this is a point of hot debate between hospital and campus nurses.)

The answer was so unanimous I almost thought it rehearsed: "We came here to get a university education. Our courses provide training in the arts as well as in the practical aspects of nursing."

Hospital nurses, though, argue that they're better prepared for the profession. The emphasis in their studies is on the practical, while college nurses take only a few weeks of practical work.

Our nurses come back strong. "We might not be as well prepared when we graduate," they argue, "but give us a few weeks in a hospital and we're just as good as anybody."

I confronted the U of T nurses with another question. "Some people say that nurses shouldn't be on this campus because their intellectual faculties are not high enough. What do you say to this?"

"Well if that's what they say, they sure have their nerve. I'll have you know that this is a very hard course, especially in the first year." (This reply came from a first year student nurse.)

"I'll bet they don't even say that, I'll bet you just said that to get me mad," she said with red ire evident on her face.

After that I stopped asking questions.

However, despite all my kidding, I realize that U of T nurses work very hard (harder than hospital nurses anyway). Their curriculum just can be expected includes typically nursing-type subjects—anatomy and childbirth.

Do you realize that to learn the operation of the hypodermic needle, they practise on each other? This is a shocking piece of news about coupled with the realization that muscular injections are usually given in the hips.

Another case of sheer brutality I was informed of: when a nurse is just beginning to learn to use the hypodermic, she practises on an orange. (It makes me shudder.)

As if this isn't enough, though, that same curriculum also includes typically arts-type subjects—English, zoology and philosophy, for example.

As for the nurses themselves, I found them quite cheerful, full of the joie-de-vivre that so many girls on this campus seem to lack.

It seems that the advantages of a good nurse have been discovered already mostly by the engineers with their sly precision and the commerce students with business-like efficiency. Nurses are frequently admitted free (and indeed, especially invited) to dances held by these two groups.

A manifestation of this occurred when gallery Varsity photographer Tom Gallo risked life and limb to obtain a few photos of nurses to accompany this article. Not one wanted her picture published. When Gallo walked into the nursing student lounge, they walked out.

Even the compulsive bridge players decided to vacate the premises.

Nurses have a curious little custom. Freshies coming into the faculty are assigned as little sisters to big sisters who take them under the wing and introduce them to the school.

Big sisters are always sophomores and they become grandmothers the following year. (No one could give a reason for the gap.)

I almost wish I were sick and confined in hospital bed so I could be nursed by one of them. But now I learn that most graduates of the U of T school of nursing don't go to work in hospitals after graduation. Thirty four of last year's graduating class of 38 didn't.

AN CUBA

(In November, 1963, Canadian University Press invited a team of writer-researchers to French Canada to do a series of articles on Quebec for The Moderator, an American student magazine of opinion. The following article was prepared by three American students from interviews with students, professors, separatists, and others in Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec and Sherbrooke. This is Part 1 of how they view our current problems.)

cannot go back and cannot be reconciled. Someone is going to be the victor and someone the vanquished. The situation has forced me to take a stand, because when the horses charge the crowd, you are either on top of the horses or underneath."

A CANADIAN CUBA. The thought is surely an unpleasant one. But what the young Quebecois is saying is that his province is in revolt. The cultural centre which he feels does not serve his community is only one of his many felt grievances, some of which are economic, some political, some cultural, and some a combination of all three. Mostly because of his grievances he feels like a Quebecois first, and a Canadian second. He thinks that his "nation", Quebec, must get what it wants soon, or otherwise it must mobilize to a man, socialize like mad, and be come, in effect, a Canadian Cuba.

No nation expects to die. The six million French-Canadians, 85 per cent of whom live in Quebec, consider themselves in some sense a nation. As such they have two alternatives before them; on the one hand, as the young Quebecois suggests, they could decide that the only way to solve their problems is to secede from Canada. On the other hand they could choose to give up to a certain extent their language and culture in return for an increased role in the Canadian government.

No nation expects to lose a limb, either. The twelve million English-speaking Canadians who live almost exclusively in the nine other provinces are coming to understand the gravity of the situation and, through their government, are trying to cope with it. Like the young Anglo-Saxon Canadian at the Montreal demonstration, these Canadians don't think rabble-rousing or the extreme, secession, will get the French-Canadians very far. They prefer to have both sides in the dispute work toward biculturalism. To that end the Canadian government has established a Royal Commission on Biculturalism to explore the problem and recommend ways in which French and English Canadians can live as equals. The problems which the commission must face are staggering. Perhaps the best way to see these problems is to examine French-Canadian grievances and the demands made by those who choose to secede, those who comprise the separatist movement.

The key problems that French-Canadians face are: lack of a French-Canadian managerial class to match the rapid industrial growth in Quebec; a minority language and minority culture which hinders their participation in the process of industrialization; the domination of politics and education by the Catholic Church; and an outmoded education system which does not provide the essential skills related to economic growth. The first of these problems depends largely on the others, which therefore must be solved first.

Neutron generator at U of T

By FRASER DUNFORD

The University of Toronto has a powerful new tool in the field of chemical analysis. The new machine, a high energy neutron generator, is the most powerful of the half dozen neutron generators in Canada.

The story started two years ago, when Professor R. E. Jervis of the department of chemical engineering first applied to the National Research Council for the necessary money to buy the generator. He was turned down because the NRC didn't have any money.

However, last year the faculty of applied science and engineering received a Ford Foundation grant, and from them Prof. Jervis received half the money needed. NRC came through with the other half of the $30,000 the machine and its installation cost.

This was enough to buy the materials for the room to house the machine, but not enough to build it. So Prof. Jervis and about ten postgraduate students spent three weeks carrying and piling the 70 tons of concrete blocks that went into the five foot thick walls that surround the tiny 10 by 12 foot room. Such extremely thick walls are needed because high energy neutrons are an extremely dangerous form of radiation. The generator is basically a Cockcroft-Walton deuterium generator, (Deuterium and tritium are the two isotopes of hydrogen found in heavy water. They are respectively two and three times the weight of ordinary hydrogen.)

The deuterons, in gas form, are accelerated through 150,000 volts. This gives them an energy of 150,000 electron volts. (One electron volt equals the energy of one electron which has been accelerated through a potential difference of one volt.)

These deuterons travel in a vacuum chamber which has been evacuated by a special pump that ionizes the gas molecules and imbeds them in catcher plates. This pump will evacuate 200 litres per second.

The deuterons, at 150,000 electron volts collide with a tritium target, which has to be water cooled to prevent it from boiling away. This collision produces neutrons by fusion ( $D+T$  yields  $n+He$ ). This is one of the basic reactions that occurs in a hydrogen bomb. The neutrons come off with an energy of 14 Mev (million electron volts). Three hundred thousand million neutrons per second are produced. These are used to bombard materials to make them radioactive, easily done since neutrons are heavy and have no electric charge.

The machine is a valuable research tool since, by making a substance radioactive, extremely small amounts of it can be detected. Measurements of  $5 \times 10^{-10}$  grams can be easily obtained.

Until now, substances had to be made radioactive in a nuclear reactor, which meant that many substances had to be taken to McMaster's reactor, as U of T's reactor is sub-critical. Since radio-active substances lose their radio-activity with time (this is called decay) experiments could be done here only with substances that retained their radio-activity for several hours. However, some substances decay in a matter of seconds. With the neutron generator, a sample can be made radio-active and then removed to a counter in less than a second. This will vastly extend the range of radio-active research done here.

At present Prof. Jervis and his students are cooperating with the crime labs in investigating the composition of human hair. Hair varies from one person to another and it is hoped that soon a person will be identified by his hair as he is now by his fingerprints.

Other research will be done with nuclear reactions; the reaction of fluorides with the body; and the connection between arsenic in cigarettes and lung cancer.

In addition to postgraduate research, the generator will be used by fourth year chemical engineering and engineering science students.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION ELECTIONS

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC DIRECTORATE

The electoral meeting of the University of Toronto Women's Athletic Association to elect six student representatives of the Women's Athletic Directorate for 1964-65 will be held in the Lecture Room, Benson Building on Monday, March 16 at 5:00 pm. sharp.

Nominations will be received by the Secretary of the Association until Tuesday March 10 at 4:00 pm. Nominations must be signed by two members of the University of Toronto W. A. A. and must be made on the forms to be obtained from the secretary in the Athletic Association Office, Benson Building.

Representatives to the Electoral Body must be appointed and sent to the meeting as follows:

- 1) Four representatives from the Women's Athletic Association of
  - University College
  - Victoria College
  - St. Michael's College
  - St. Hilda's College
  - The Faculty of Medicine
  - The School of Physical and Health Education
  - The School of Rehabilitation Medicine
- 2) Two representatives from the Women's Athletic Association of The School of Nursing
- 3) One representative from the Women's Athletic Association of
  - The Faculty of Pharmacy
  - New College
  - The Faculty of Dentistry
  - The Faculty of Food Science
- 4) Six representatives from the Basketball Club
- 5) Four representatives from the Hockey Club
  - Swimming Club
  - Volleyball Club
- 6) Two representatives from the Tennis Club
  - Badminton Club
  - Softball Club
  - Field Hockey Club
- 7) One representative from the Archery Club
  - Skiing Club
  - Fencing Club
  - Curling Club
  - Golf Club
  - Bowling Club
- 8) The Undergraduate members of the 1962-63 Directorate

Names of voting representatives must be given to the Secretary not later than Thursday, March 12, 4:00 pm. No proxies will be permitted except upon written notice to the Secretary prior to the election. Electoral Body representatives may only carry one vote each.

*Note: Deadline for submitting names is MARCH 12 NOT March 2 as stated in Friday's Varsity.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC CLUB

The annual election for the women's Basketball, Curling, Golf, Ice Hockey, Swimming, Tennis, Badminton, Softball, Volleyball, Skiing, Archery, Bowling and Fencing Clubs will be held on Tuesday, March 11. Voting will be held from 9:00 am. to 5:00 pm. in Room 102, Benson Building.

The election for the presidency ONLY of each club will be held and voting will be preferential. Nominations for the office of president for each club must be signed by two voting members of the club in question and filed with the Secretary of the Athletic Association, Benson Building, by Friday March 6, 4:00 pm.

Voting members for each club are restricted to those who have been registered as playing members of an intramural or intercollegiate sport during the past academic year, or who are certified by a team manager to have attended at least 50 per cent of the practices of that team, members of the club executive and managers of all teams playing under the club.

STUDENTS

To put into operation the national money system I have developed, there need be no apprehension of loss by anyone. There need be no stoppage of business, nor any lay-offs, although there will be gradual changes in types of employment due to increasing activity in private production enterprises. There will be more job opportunities.

With the issuance of an adequate volume of money into activities which provide the basic needs of all citizens, and with the additional purchasing power in the hands of lower income workers, due to the lower cost of financing homes and public services, a real impetus will be given to secondary industries.

With the elimination of opportunities for private investment in public capital projects and in housing at high rates of interest, there will be keen competition for investments in private production and service enterprises with resulting lower interest rates, and consequent lower prices for goods and services.

Let it be said at once that paying off privately created bank money, government bonds and debentures, and private mortgages on homes, will not result in an increase in paper purchasing power, mostly guaranteed by government, albeit there will be more money units in existence. But it is not an excess of required money units in existence that creates inflationary pressures. Witness the thousands of million of dollars lying idle in our bank. It is the amount of money in circulation, in relation to the amounts of goods and services being exchanged, that has a determining influence on the price level.

The important matter that must be understood is that the average government bond-holder is paying his own interest and more in taxes in maintaining our high interest debt institutions, in so far as they deal in unnecessary and unwarranted private investments in public enterprises, and in mortgages on over-occupied utility housing. The average home owner or tenant would require to own ten to fifteen thousands of dollars worth of bonds just to break even with the taxes he must pay because of such investments.

We must understand that all income including interest earned and unearned must come out of production and service work - out of private enterprise, in a private enterprise economy worthy of the name. Our all consuming high interest debt has been the direct cause of our halting economic growth - of poverty in the midst of plenty.

The under-developed countries ask us for help and guidance. Our total material gifts have amounted annually to less than the price of a bottle of pop or a glass of milk for each of the human beings we claim to have helped. It would be immeasurably better to explain to them the nature and purpose of money. Anything we can do in gifts of goods is peanuts compared to what they could do for themselves if they understood the science of money.

The communists have no such load of interest on their money. Only our head start in technological advancement is making it possible for us to compete favorably with the communists. But when they come abreast of us in "know how" they will have the advantage of low cost money.

Either we reform our high cost public debt system or our private enterprise economy will give way to communism, socialism or state capitalism - call it what you like. Its time we realized what is happening.

Gals take puck crown, lose b-ball

By SNAGGLEPUSS

Varsity gals said goodbye to the "Bronze Baby" basketball trophy and hello to their third consecutive hockey championship as the intercollegiate season came to a close on the weekend.

Varsity defeated McGill, 2-0, and Queen's, 5-1, to win the hockey crown in Montreal and placed second to Western for basketball laurels at Kingston.

Jan McAdam scored two goals for Varsity on the weekend to bring her total for the tournament to six, highest on the Toronto team. Joan Connell scored two goals and Patti Gair, Linda Maki and Wendy Toll one each to round out Varsity's scoring in the two final games.

Maureen McConnell also played an important role for Varsity, containing Queens' all-star forward Cookie Cartwright. Miss McConnell and Miss Connell were nominated for the intercollegiate all-star team.

Western defeated Varsity, Queen's and McGill to take the basketball title for the third year in a row. Chris Boyd of Western was top scorer in the tournament with 57 points in three games.

Toronto defeated McGill, 38-26, and played to a 22-22 tie with Queen's. Western won over Toronto, 47-31. Sharon Dandy was Varsity's top scorer with 39 points in three games.

Lefort tops snipers

Larry Windover and John Van Brunt scored for Queen's.

Carabins finished the season in second place with 17 points, three less than Queen's Cup champions Varsity Blues.

Laval Rouge et Or finished in a fourth-place tie with McGill Redmen by playing to a 7-7 tie with Queen's Saturday in Quebec City. Twelve goals were scored in this wild game.

Brent McNab scored his first goal of the season at 19:25 of the third period with goaltender Elwin Derbyshire on the bench to give Gaele the tie. Other Queen's scorers were John Van Brunt and John Hay, with two each, George Nishikawa and Bill Colvin.

Pierre Lachance scored three goals to lead Laval, the others coming from Yvon Paquet, Paul Doucet, Michel Roy and Claude Ste. Marie.

Swimmers add another crown, set Canadian record

BY SHEL KRAKOFKY

Varsity Swim Blues have found that winning Intercollegiate championships is as easy as stringing beads of pearls.

For the seventh time in the last eight years, Varsity won the Dougall Cup, scoring 79 points to Western's 53 and McGill's 36 at the Benson Building Saturday. Blues won six of the 11 events and set an OQAA and Canadian record in the 400-yard free style relay.

The free style relay team of Graeme Barber, Robin Campbell, Pete Richardson and Tom Verth swam the 400 yards in 3:26.1, seven-tenths of a second better than the old Canadian record and 6.7 seconds better than the OQAA record. U of T previously held both records.

Tom Verth and McGill's Bill Peers were individual double winners, Verth winning the 200 and 500-yard free style events and Peers the 200-yard backstroke and individual medley.

Western's Pete Fowler bade OQAA competition farewell with a sparkling 2:26.5 in the 200-yard breaststroke to edge Varsity rookie Mike Chapelle by half a body length. Fowler's time was only 1.1 seconds off the OQAA record.

Said Chapelle in defeat, "I hope I can swim that well when I retire."

The calibre of swimming in the Intercollegiate league is improving every year as can be seen by comparing the winning times of this and last year. In all 10 events, this year's winning times were better than the times of last year. A total of 49.5 seconds was chopped off last year's winning times or 4.95 seconds per event.

Pete Richardson, Blues' co-captain with Tom Verth, held two exciting duels with Western's Alan Guthrie in the 50 and 100-yard free style swims. Guthrie defeated Richardson in the 50 by one-tenth of a second in the time of 23.2 but Richardson won the 100 in 51.0, two-tenths better than Guthrie.

Roy Gravel, a rookie from McGill, won the diving with a superb display of acrobatics. He scored 201.05 points and is a definite international prospect. Toronto's Bob Smagala finished second for the third consecutive year and Kurt Zander, who dove for Varsity for the first time last week, finished fourth.

BABY BUBBLES. Only loss to Blues' next year team is freestyler Alex Ashenhurst. . . Two of the timers in the meet were related to Varsity personnel. Ginny Ridpath is coach John Ridpath's wife and Mary Chapelle is Mike's older brother. . . . All the members of the record-breaking free style relay team were on the team which originally set the Canadian record last year except for Robin Campbell. Mary Chapelle was the other member.

All-star guard swishes 34 as Blues defeat Tricolor

By PAUL HENDERSON

Varsity guard Dave West is the 1963-64 Intercollegiate basketball scoring champion.

West netted 34 points to lead Blues to a 105-72 victory over Queen's Golden Gaels at Hart House Saturday.

West needed 23 points in the game, the last of the season, to overtake Jerry Raphael of Waterloo warriors. He accomplished this feat in the first half when Blues established a 50-23 lead.

West received an ovation from the small crowd when he hit for the 23rd point with 4:20 left in the half. He hooped 14 of 29 field goals attempted (48 per cent) and added six for six from the foul line.

West finished the season with 314 points and Raphael 302 for averages of 26.16 and 25.16 respectively. West's 314 points represent the highest total ever compiled by a Varsity player, in league play. He exceeded his own record of 20.6 set last year when he became the first Blue in history to average over 20 per game.

Centre Ed Bordas hooped 24 for Blues and was the big man under the basket. As well as placing second to West in the game, Bordas finished second in team scoring and 4th in the league. He averaged 18.7 points in 10 Intercollegiate contests.

Forward Larry Ferguson paced Gaels' attack with 20 points. He also excelled under the basket by employing good moves to break loose from his check and score.

Bob Howes and Doug Evans added 12 apiece for Queen's. Evans worked particularly hard on offence and defence before fouling out with three minutes remaining.

Doug McKenzie of Blues continued his fine play of the last few games to net 11 points, most of them in the second half when he was a steadying influence during a press attempted by Queen's. Nolan Kane came off the bench in the second half to match McKenzie's total.

The game was not a spectacular affair as the tallies mounted up unobtrusively. Blues netted the first basket and led throughout the 40 minutes. They posted leads of 24-17, 50-33 and 73-53 at the end of the first, second and third quarters respectively.

The loss gives Queen's a record of three wins and nine defeats and puts them in 6th spot. Blues finished the season with a 7-5 record and tied for third place with Western Mustangs.

Mustangs dropped their final contest of the year to Windsor Lancers, 86-73, in London Saturday. Windsor completed their second consecutive undefeated year in winning the game.

Bob Horvath scored 25 points to pace Lancers and consolidate his position as leading scorer on the team. Joe Green added 17 and Bill Brown 14 for the winners.

Barry Mitchelson's 21 was top for Western, aided by 18 from Ken Barclay and 17 from Tom Williamson, defending scoring champion.

LOOK MA, 34% FEWER CAVITIES!

Actually, Varsity guard Dave West is indicating the 34 points he scored against Queen's to win the intercollegiate basketball scoring crown.

Williamson netted 262 points for a 21.84 average, good enough for third place in the standings.

Under the Basket: — Blues were the second highest scoring squad in the league. They totalled 988 points while Lancers ran up 1160... Varsity coach John McManus rested West in the late third and early fourth quarters to allow some of the substitutes to play... Jim Sheldon responded with his first basket of the season... Blues' score of 105 is the highest registered by them this year... Many thanks to Stan Rose who again kept statistics for Blues and assisted this reporter considerably.

Blues: — West (34), Bordas (24), Kano (11), McKenzie (11), Baranowicz (10), O'Neill (7), Kimel (6), Sheldon (2), Andrew, Noldre.
Gaels: — Ferguson (20), Evans (12), Howes (12), Raisbeck (10), Engel (6), Presley (6), Waring (4), Fraser (2), Roy, Torbet.

Lefort gets six points to pass Hank

By RICK KOLLINS

Varsity Sports Editor

Centre Gilles Lefort of Montreal Carabins won the Senior Intercollegiate Hockey League scoring title by figuring in all six goals as Carabins defeated Queen's Golden Gaels, 6-3, Friday night in Montreal.

Lefort had two goals and four assists to bring his total for the season to 31 points, one more than rookie Hank Monteith of Varsity Blues. Monteith had taken the scoring lead with a four-point performance in his final game of the season against Laval the week before.

The Montreal team and fans were well aware that Lefort had a chance for the scoring crown. Carabin coach Dr. Yvan Dion played Lefort for almost three-quarters of the game and Carabins constantly tried to set him up for shots on goal.

In the first period, when Montreal took a 3-2 lead, Lefort was originally only credited with an assist on the first goal. But after the period ended, the Montreal players told the referee that Lefort had started the play for Carabins' second goal and had actually scored the third, which had been credited to defenceman Denis Tressider.

The referee had the official summary changed to give Lefort the extra goal and assist.

In a telephone interview from Montreal, Leo Boucher, official scorer at U of M, told The Varsity that Lefort deflected Tressider's shot from the blues line and the puck then hit a Queens' defender before going into the net.

Boucher confirmed that all Lefort's six points were "legitimate."

Lefort then scored his second goal in the second period and assisted on two goals by Jean Delorme in the final period. His title-winning assist came at 16:03.

Delorme scored three goals and Jean Cusson the other for Carabins. Cusson also had three assists to finish the season fifth in league scoring with 25 points. Bill Colvin.

Whitelaw, Sale star as gymnasts win final meet

Varsity gymnasts won four events and tied for first in another to defeat Queen's and Royal Military College in a close triple meet at Hart House Saturday night.

Toronto compiled 121.5 points to 120.7 for Queen's and 119.8 for RMC.

Bill Whitelaw was Varsity's top performer, winning the parallel bars and high bar. Digby Sale of Varsity ran up the highest individual score of the meet, 9.3, in taking the still rings. Sale also came second to Whitelaw in the high bar and parallel bars.

Art Kuisman of Queen's deprived Toronto of a first in all six events, winning the pommel horse. Kuisman also tied for first in the long horse vault with Bob Smagala of Varsity and Bill Wright of RMC.

Toronto's other winner was Scott Griffiths in the free-hand calisthenics.

Bill Buchanan of RMC injured his neck when he lost his grip on the high bar and fell heavily. The injury was at first feared to be serious but Buchanan was later back on his feet.

Varsity's Tom Verth leaves Bob Mullins of McGill (left) and Glen Davis of Western behind as he takes off on the final leg of the Canadian record-breaking 400-yard free style relay while teammate Pete Richardson touches the edge of the pool. Blues won their seventh title in eight years Saturday. (See story, page 7).

Laxer new Varsity editor: Jargon renewed

By DON SMITH
Varsity SAC Reporter

James Laxer, a fourth-year modern history student at Victoria College, was chosen editor-in-chief of The Varsity for the year 1964-65 by the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night.

Laxer, who told the council he will register in either SGS or Law next year, has been a member of the Varsity staff for four years and now is features editor.

Publications Commissioner Dave Beatty said his commission had interviewed two candidates, checked their experience and their ideas for the paper, and on that basis recommended Laxer's appointment. He said the other student who applied, Paul Chumak (II SMC) had had no newspaper experience, and was in his opinion "an inferior candidate for the position."

Council accepted the commission report and voted unanimously to appoint Laxer.

The SAC also voted to re-establish Jargon, the much-criticised campus literary magazine which had been discontinued this year. Last year's council voted to drop Jargon after the printer refused to print one edition because he considered it obscene and then it and the next one were delivered too late in the year for proper distribution.

Two limitations were placed on publication next year, however. The magazine must be published no later than March 1, 1965, and total cost to council must not exceed $900.

In amending the original motion to impose the $900 ceiling on costs, Finance Commissioner Larry Ward said: "Our budget is at the wall now. If we add anything more like this, we'll have to cut what's already in there."

Other council members including Varsity editor Ken Drushka opposed the move to set a cost limit so far ahead. "I don't think we can set a cost figure until a budget is presented," Drushka said.

"We may find that for $900 all we can do is print Jargon on toilet paper and unroll it across campus," quipped Beatty.

Council next voted to charge a $10 fee to those receiving parking permits for the SAC parking lot beside Hart House.

Council president Doug Ward explained that the fee would just cover the salary of an attendant on the lot and the administrative cost of issuing the permits.

"At present we are bearing the cost for 40 students for a privilege we can't afford to give to 13,000 others," Ward said.

Sean Cawley (SGS) wanted to know why the fee shouldn't be raised to what he called "a reasonable figure — perhaps $40" so that council could make a profit on the

Co-op gains college status: gets taxed Says $10 mill. due students

By PAUL CARSON

The Campus Co-op won its bid for college status yesterday but the Private Bills Committee of the Ontario Legislature turned down its request for tax exemption by a vote of 14 to 13. Two MPPs who had supported the bill left just before the deciding vote.

Allan Lawrence (PC, St. George) introduced the bill but was unsuccessful in his attempts to obtain even a permissive tax exemption—an exemption granted by the City of Toronto.

At present the Co-op pays about $7,000 annually in municipal taxes; it gets no special considerations. Other University residences, including Massey College, are not taxed.

In supporting the bill, Robert Macaulay, former minister of economic development who had volunteered his legal services to the Co-op, explained to the committee the various benefits available to the Co-op if the bill were passed: books and funds for a library, inheritances, and educational grants not given to residences.

Ken Bryden (NDP, Woodbine) stressed the "collegiate atmosphere" of the Co-op, and NDP Chief Donald MacDonald praised the Co-op's fusion of "academic and co-operative" principles.

Opposing the bill were Vern Singer (Liberal) who wondered why the Co-op wasn't acting through the Corporation Act, and Wilfrid Spooner, Minister of Municipal Affairs, who was opposed to the entire bill. The City of Toronto opposed granting legislative tax exemption.

tempted to take their own lives, while "perhaps 400 and probably more," with mental disorders ranging from mild to serious, sought psychiatric help.

Four of them, diagnosed as psychotics, were committed to Ontario hospitals.

"The problem," said Dr. Wodehouse, "is much greater than we ever see."

Last year, for example, the health service referred 437 cases to outside consultants. More than half of these were psychiatric problems.

"None of these are frivolous cases," said Dr. Wodehouse. "They were here because they should have been."

Next year it is hoped that the health service will become an accredited institution for part of the postgraduate course in psychiatry. This would, Dr. Wodehouse says, help relieve his shortage of trained personnel.

OTTAWA (CUP)—The Canadian government owes Canadian students $10,000,000, Dave Jenkins, Canadian Union of Students, president said yesterday, after returning from a tour of the western provinces.

Jenkins feels that the 10,000 promised $1,000 scholarships plan put forward by CUS and since adopted by the Liberal government is unconstitutional under the British North America Act. Education is a provincial matter, not federal.

But he calls for consideration of the federal scholarship and loan promise at the next dominion-provincial conference in Quebec March 31.

Perhaps an agreement can be worked out that will be acceptable to all provinces, especially Quebec, he added.

If no agreement is possible, then CUS has several alternatives which the government could put into effect to benefit students. All deal with taxation—a federal responsibility.

- The federal government turning over certain tax fields to provincial governments to give them more money with which to carry out their responsibilities towards education.

- Allowing parents to deduct the tuition fees of dependent university students.

- Allowing industry to claim scholarships as tax deductions.

- Exception of the first $3,000 of earned income by students.

Jenkins said that the constitutional questions concerning the loan and scholarship plans were the major topics of discussion and that his meetings were very encouraging.

Separatist escapes

MONTREAL (Special) — Separatist leader Guy Pouliot escaped Wednesday from hundreds of demonstrating students at Sir George Williams University in Montreal through a back entrance under bodyguard.

Mr. Pouliot, leader of the separatist party, Le Rassemblement pour l'Indépendance Nationale, had addressed a crowd of about 600 students on separatist principles.

As he was answering questions following the speech it was learned that students were gathering outside the auditorium. Several students escorted him out the back door to a taxi.

Pouliot had warned students that "the Queen could well be the victim of aggression if she comes here."

The English-speaking students interrupted his speech with catcalls and shouts of: "Speak English."

Dave Jenkins, president of the Canadian Union of Students yesterday called the students' act "untimely extremism."

"Also," he added, "I must criticize the University of British Columbia Ubysey for its editorial referring to French-Canadians as frogs. Such things can do nothing but harm".

Quebec nationalism was fostered by middle - class French-Canadians seeking a charge Colonel J. J. Fleming of the Alberta Censorship Board under the Alberta Amusements Act, which states that a person cannot exhibit a film until it has been approved for exhibition by the censorship board.

Later in an interview Beissel said he may take the matter further.

Beissel explained that since censorship is based on films having the power to corrupt, Col. Fleming must have either intended to corrupt the government or he really does not believe that films do indeed corrupt. In either case, he said, the principle of censorship is negated.

Beissel feels that this is an outright violation of the Amusement Act despite the fact that he was told it was traditional to show MLAs uncensored films.

McCarthy, secretary to the advisory committee on university affairs, said that only Queen's University now has a restriction on its expropriations.

Ontario universities are hoarding government grants rather than spending them for educational purposes, Joseph Gould (Lib. Bracondale) charged in the Ontario legislature Wednesday. Mr. Gould said some universities save government capital grants until they have enough money to embark on building projects.

POONA, India (NSPICUP) — Twenty-eight students of the B. J. Medical college were caught cheating at their preliminary examination here. They were writing for the final M. B. and

B. S., degrees last month. It has held that, in view of the unusual circumstances and the apology tendered by the students, the preliminary examination will be held again in all subjects.

"Graduates in physical science courses often turn out to be overgrown school-boys playing with complex machine-toys," said Professor Arthur Porter at an electrical utilities convention in Toronto Thursday. Many administrative positions in government and industry are filled with such men, he said, who grow fantastically involved in their researches. He called this group a cult of scientific high priests "who exert influence because senior administrators in government and industry are—scientifically and mathematically illiterate."

Twenty Canadian university students will live and work in Indian and Eskimo communities this summer under the Student Volunteer Service Scheme, it was announced earlier this week. Under the scheme, administered by the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada, 10 students sponsored by the Indian affairs branch, department of citizenship and immigration, will be posted at reserves in Ontario where they will devote their time to community recreation and adult education centres.

Lewis blasts press on Africa--Again

By MARY McIVER

Is the Canadian press guilty of yellow journalism as far as Africa is concerned?

Stephen Lewis, young NDP member of the provincial legislature, Wednesday accused several Canadian newspapers of acute misrepresentation of African affairs in a lecture entitled "One-Party State in Africa".

Mr. Lewis strongly criticized the Western stand on African nationalism which he felt was epitomized by the "witch doctor editorials" in newspapers such as The Telegram (which one reads "if one has nothing better to do").

The so-called sophistication of The Globe and Mail is merely a cover-up for misdirected and frequently misquoted information obtained by "fact-finding tours," he said.

Western critics "impose 20th-century standards and value judgements on a society in which these standards are irrelevant."

There is a "profound psychological misunderstanding" about Africa. It is still viewed as a highly sexual, rhythmic, barbaric pattern of society because it has not conformed to Western standards.

One-party states are immediately categorized as pro-

Communist, embarked on "the hellish road to the left-beyond human redemption." This is "intellectual claptrap," said Mr. Lewis.

In fact, a highly democratic tribal structure is deeply ingrained in most of African society. Transferred to a political structure, this "internal democracy" becomes authoritarian in nature, but is uniquely African.

African is not pro-Communist, but pro-African. A one-party state is what the African people want.

Mr. Lewis, who taught in secondary schools in several African countries for two years, said he once attended a political meeting in one of the newly independent states. The leader asked the people to make their choice between the two existing political parties. "No!" shouted

150,000 Africans. "You make the choice!"

Why are Africans so insistent on authoritarian control? Mr. Lewis said that this is a legacy of colonialism. The entire colonial structure was essentially authoritarian in nature.

He painted a horrifying picture of the socio-economic conditions which existed in most African states at the point of independence.

There was no educational structure worth mentioning, agriculture was "pre-feudal," and manufacturing was nonexistent "except for Coca-Cola, Orange Crush, matches and beer." Malnutrition and disease were prevalent.

And Christianity, "the spiritual arm of imperialism," didn't help to foster a democratic outlook. It was "more concerned with souls than with human beings."

elman said since New has more than 500 students this year, and will have a minimum of 750 next year, it is entitled to the additional representation.

Other members disagreed with Adelmans claim, and questioned the exact number of students at the college. Executive assistant Rose Marie Harrop said that only 368 New College students were paying their SAC fees through

John Roberts (Wyc) said it was too big an issue to settle at one meeting, and suggested that New go ahead and elect a second representative and council could consider in the fall whether or not to seat him, after the report of the committee on dual representation had been delivered.

At the request of Weekends Chairman Diana Benett, council ratified the appointment of chairman for the three exchange weekends next year. Tony Advokaat (III UC) was named chairman of the Carabin exchange; Michael Levine (III UC), the Harvard exchange; and Barbara Purkis (II Trin), the Taheel exchange.

The deletion of a policy statement from the contracts of the Varsity and Torontons editors was approved in principle, and will be debated in particular at the final meeting March 18.

In the money department council voted a grant of $1,000 to the First University of Toronto Annual Conference, to be held in the fall, and $1,500 to Canadian University Service Overseas.

The following editorial appeared in the Feb. 20 issue of The Ubysey, the University of British Columbia student newspaper, which recently was awarded the Bracken Trophy for editorial writing.

Well, they've asked for our comments on the impending break-up of the great Canadian marble game.

Since we don't have time to write a brief to our self-appointed saviors of Confederation (the AMS and CUS) we thought we'd record our opinions here.

Frankly, we're getting a little sick of our whining and foot-stamping French-Canadian playmates.

It seems that if we don't play by their rules they're going to pick up their steeles and cobs and go home.

Big deal!

We don't suggest we can have a good game by ourselves, but we don't think they can either.

And, it seems to us, perhaps a little more understanding would result if for once English Canada, faced with the wild threats of fuzzy-thinking French radicals, responded once with a similar, resounding: Big Deal!

Our first suggestion to the biculturalism commission would be short and simple: I pack it up.

When you do, tell Prime Minister Pearson that his first step in handling the French situation should be to stop twitching like that every time he hears a French-Canadian accent. The same applies to CUS. It's about time somebody told the French to forget their demands for equal representation to the English.

They know as well as we do, their demand is unrealistic. But they'll take as much as they can get as long as no one stops them.

We'll start the process. We'll say again — it's about time someone put the frogs in their place.

The lily-pond?

When one encounters such an attitude as expressed in this editorial, his first reaction is to adopt the writer's same bigotted attitude and launch a physical attack.

But then sanity prevails, and a flood of obvious and strong-worded answers come to mind. Eventually one starts to wonder about the type of mind which would produce such views. An then thoughts turn to the possible conditions which could produce such a mind.

The Ubysey is the second largest university newspaper in Canada. It would be nice if we could think the Ubysey editorial is an isolated opinion, but we suspect, unfortunately, that it reflects a widespread western Canadian attitude to the problems of Confederation.

To most students in eastern Canada, who have more knowledge of the situation, this view from the west will be appalling.

The one thing of value in the Ubysey editorial is that it points out the phenomenal amount of ignorance that exists in some parts of the country, and serves to illustrate the serious nature of the problem.

what's in a name

The private members' bills committee of the Ontario legislature yesterday granted the Campus Co-op Residence Inc. college status — but with a provision that it not be exempt from municipal taxes.

Massey College, which, like the Co-op is an independently incorporated body, has both college status and exemption from municipal taxes.

The Co-op provides residence space for more than 200 students and, with the aid of tax exemptions, had planned to expand its facilities.

Massey College, provides space for about 75 men, and has no plans to expand its facilities.

It just shows what you can do with a name like Massey and the sanction of the board of governors.

What is warless world research?

Julian Griggs was formerly the Executive Associate with the Canadian Peace Research Institute.

By JULIAN GRIGGS

Warless world research is the application of rigorous intellectual effort to problems whose solution is necessary for the achievement of a peaceful world.

For example: The U.S. has spent scores of billions of dollars on weaponry, assuming all the time that it is providing a credible deterrent. But precious little research has been done on the actual feelings of USSR decision makers toward this American defense.

The only study made was too small to provide reliable answers. However, this work by Dr. Urie Bronfenbrenner of Cornell University indicates that a large number of Soviet citizens, including citizens who are most unhappy with the Soviet government, expect the U.S. to strike first—and without previous Russian provocation!

Professor Rolling of the University of Groningen, Netherlands, defines peace research as:

First, every scientific study focussed on the discovery of what is needed to arrive at a world without war.

And second, research on the question, "What will cause peoples and governments to implement these discoveries?"

These was a large student rally held in front of the White House in the U.S. about two years ago when over 1,000 students from a score of colleges asked the late President Kennedy for more assurances of security against war. Well, one of the principal engineers of that meeting was Todd Gitlin, a student at Harvard. Todd is now doing research on values and problems which result from the peacetime draft of young men into the armed forces of the U.S.

Another keen young man who has contributed a study in this area is Andrea Modigliani whose Facts, Beliefs and Baloney About The Cold War Public showed that 67 per cent of his sample population of adults (chosen in a Massachusetts industrial town) had never heard of the term "deterrence"; and 75 per cent could see no disadvantages at all to U. S. support of non-communist dictators.

John Alcock, a graduate student at Carleton, is providing a sociological study of the Canadian Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

About 50 years ago and Englishman named Lewis F. Richardson began a mathematical study of war. He had no financing for this so he used most of his spare time for 30 years. His application of "social physics" to the study of deadly international quarrels is recognized as a milestone. It has inspired other scholars to undertake war prevention studies.

A study on U.N. police is in progress by Dr. John Paul of CPRI. Some months ago Dr. Paul was conversing with a former U.N. field commander about peacekeeping activities. This officer remarked, "We made exactly the same mistakes in the Congo that U.N. forces made earlier in their Gaza operations." Dr. Paul's study is designed to allow for improved operations through useful learnings in regard to training, supply, communications and other aspects of UN peace-keeping force actions.

Dr. Arthur Larson, an eminent lawyer who used to write speeches for President Eisenhower is now deeply involved in warless world studies at Duke University where he heads a 22 man research team of international lawyers.

In 1960 Larson came up with 130 separate and valuable problems for research in this field. For instance, he noted that there was no text book or case book which was even remotely adequate for teaching a course on world law. He and his team have produced these books and are engaged in a fascinating array of studies ranging from answers to questions posed by the UN Secretariat to problems of law in outer space.

The UN feels great needs for research—needs it is unable to provide from its meagre budget.

National governments also have great needs for research. The U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is going a bit in this area. Top planners would like to do more but the agency is starving for funds.

Actually, there would be no need for such research whatsoever if—

*Major powers through disarmament agreements and other activities had moved the world rapidly toward more security in a nuclear era. Or,

If the U.N. had been rapidly strengthened and as a result had taken actions which greatly reduce chance of war by accident, design, or escalation.

One of the studies of scientists at Stanford deals with events leading to World War I. They have studied documents of the five major powers and found that during the six weeks prior to the outbreak of war, decision makers of all nations regarded themselves predominately as agents of friendship, and as recipients of hostility!

We live in a world where, chiefly through new scientific discoveries, man is rapidly finding more ways to destroy himself. A visitor from outer space would think that the bomb unleashed at Hiroshima was horrible enough. But because of the arms race man has now learned to make bombs 5,000 times more destructive. And this is just one area of defense research. Many non-nuclear civilization-destroying devices are now being "perfected."

So little is being done to enhance our security against war that I would even contend that, despite a test-ban treaty and other valuable diplomatic efforts the net result is less security with each passing year.

Time and again during the past 50 years man has solved "impossible" problems. How has he done this?

Why is it that we now have an effective polio vaccine . . . Why are smallpox and diphtheria no longer a threat?

Fifty years ago man's best air flights were for a mile or two in exposed craft made of spruce and cloth. Think of the changes which have enabled man to conquer the sky with continent-spanning air monsters.

Many qualities have contributed to these and 10,000 other conquests, but the breakthrough factor was usually, though not always, research.

Scientific studies are, for the most part, costly and time consuming. Regardless of the field, much research is proven by hindsight to have been misdirected. Despite these severe limitations, research has proven itself to be far and away the best tool we know of for finding answers to most questions.

(Countless thousands thronged to celebrate as next year's editor, the unforgotten James B. Loxer announced an international conge on son honneur. Among the multitudes were Paul Carson, Volkmar Richter, "Silent Bob" Sorokolot and Donald Smith, who churned out an unprecedented quantity of SAC copy. Sexy were Sue Stumpf, Donna Mason, Mary Mciver and Sandra Nijaf, all noggng wkr at once. Adding to the difficulties of getting anywhere were Wilf Day, Lorry Green span, and Andre Rolavs. Sports was almost deserted, as the Teddy Bear, with the assistance of Paul Henderson, Shel Krakofsky and Al (Incomparable) Scheenborn typed . . . and typed . . . and typed. Only one more . . . whew!

Canadian teaches Plato in India

By ANN JONES

I am sitting in the basement office of Canadian University Service Overseas reading a letter from a volunteer working in a leper colony in India. He writes, "...There is a great sociological problem with leprosy, as most of the people have been driven out of their homes by their own families... Getting them back to their homes is almost impossible, but we must do all we can..."

It's over a year now since I left India. There were ten of us there in '61-'62 forming part of the first group of Canadian Overseas Volunteers; (now CUSO) three others were in Ceylon, and two in Sarawak. I went to Kasturba Rural Institute, in the plains of Punjab, to teach English to students of farm and village backgrounds who had a rough equivalent of high school education and, supposedly, a good grounding in the English language.

In the mornings they had classes — for the boys, in sociology, political science, rural development; for the girls, in home economics, hygiene, nutrition. Both studied Hindi or Punjabi and English.

In the afternoons the students worked at one of the several small-scale or village industries in operation at the institute, such as pottery, paper manufacturing, the weaving and dying of "khadi," or handspun cotton, soap-making or dress-making. The boys could also practice agriculture or dairy farming.

Once a week the students, divided into groups, spent a day in neighbouring villages, encouraging the improvement of living conditions, and helping to start community projects. After four years the boys received a diploma in Rural Services, and the girls in Home Science, making them qualified to teach and work in villages and rural areas.

It's over a year, but a letter from another volunteer in the field is enough to project me back into that world.

I am wakened soon after dawn by footfalls past my room, followed by splashing at the pump outside my window. I join the lineup for water and respond groggily to a round of, "Sister, Good morning." After breakfast — hot milk and perantha (a type of bread) — I have a class of boys, a serious, hard-working group who will soon try their final exams. We are laboring to together over the intricate arguments of Socrates in the Euthyphron; it seems unfair that these boys should be subjected to the rigours of a Platonic dialogue, but they are determined to it. Every day provides its distractions to challenge their concentration and my composure.

Today it's a pigeon; he shuffles restlessly about on an overhead rafter, and drops an offering onto the notebook of a boy beneath him. All eyes are on me to see my reaction, which manages to emerge as a restrained grin. I leave the class feeling it's probably as well that I have never taught before coming here.

Then follows a class on Ibsen's Dolls' House with Second year girls. They are enjoying this play, for they can identify with the heroine. Nora must choose between the right to seek her freedom as a person, and submitting to the will of a tyrannous husband. There girls can anticipate such a conflict, if not for themselves, then perhaps for their daughters.

A disheartening grammar class ensues with the youngest class of girls who still can't grasp the most elementary principles. Half of them still have yet to utter a single word in English. Progress nil. I come out of that one wondering, what is the point in having these girls learn English anyway? The question following this, of course, is, of what use am I? This is unsettling, and I'm glad on the distraction of a spare period with Tripat, who teaches psychology.

This hour is supposed to be devoted to a Hindi lesson, but as usual we get sidetracked. Our topics cover a wide range from education to gossip to politics and graft.

Mid-afternoon, and the ferocity has gone out of the day's heat. An electric fan whirs erratically overhead, threatening to lift the essays I've been marking off my desk.

My way back to the Hostel leads past a group of girls engaged in the hot, smelly job of soap-making. They stand, dripping with the heat, over vats of hardening soap which they must stir till solid over a hot fire. They look up from this witches' brew to hail me with spirited greetings in Punjabi. This necessitates my responding in kind, which always delights them hugely. The sewing and leathercraft room. Wide grins all round.

Local Rajpura traffic

TOO MUCH CARE

As I fill pails at the pump for my laundry and bath, it occurs to me that these girls are hard at work here from dawn till midnight, and yet their years at school are like leisure time compared to the worries and responsibilities claiming them and their families at home. And the future holds more of the same, years of too much care, too little freedom.

But this is what it is to be Punjabi. Standing myself beside them in my mind's eye, I see myself for the stilted Anglo-Saxon that I am.

We are all assembled at Prayer sitting crosslegged on the ground everyone with his spinning wheel beside him.

The rhythm of the chants in Hindi and Punjabi rises above the hypnotic hum of the spinning wheels, and the rough edges of the day are worn away.

I grasp the spindle and twirl it, and watch the miracle of a thread emerging from a wad of cotton. And then it breaks.

As I walk back to the Hostel I hear the two evening sounds I shall always associate with one of my favourite times of day — the soft "who-whooping" of a dove to its mate, and from a village to the south the steady "tock-tock-tock" of an electric pump. A team bullocks pulling a massive two-wheeled cart goes past in the direction of the farm buildings; the two boys leading them wish me good evening.

After supper — curried vegetables and roti (bread) I withdraw to my room for an hour or so by myself before the girls come for extra help with English, and find myself pondering the unsettling questions of the morning. A snide inner voice says, Well, Jones, why are you here?

What is the good of COV and other programmes like it, if any good at all? This time an answer, an "apologia" forms itself in my head. COV is useful, if for no other reason than that it effects communication between people who would never otherwise know each other. The resulting interchange of ideas, and knowledge, of liking and understanding is of a value that cannot be estimated. That's why I'm here.

A knock at the door, and two girls come in shy because they're in my room, and because they've brought me some sweets. We work for a while on a sonnet of Wordsworth's and then we talk,

They ask me about Canada, and look with fascination, for the twentieth time, at my photographs. And, as though it had become a ritual, one of them looks up and says, "Sister, after some time you will go away from here, and then you will forget us."

Poetry of the hip piss

By QUINCY WRIGHT

SHOOT LOW SHERIFF THEY'RE RIDING SHETLAND PONIES by Roy MacSkimming and William Hawkins; privately printed. Paper $1.00.

This volume marks the first appearance in book form for each of these young poets, and also the first indisputable evidence of the apocalyptic potential of poetry in Canada. Both poets are from Ottawa, and the selection of their work presented here is the first major statement of the South Ottawa Metaphysical-Social Realist school, a movement which makes that city more vital to the future of poetry in this country than Montreal, Toronto, or Vancouver. Unlike their contemporaries, these poets are never dull; master pyrotechnicians, they blast holes in the staid walls of insipidity built by our best-known young poets, a collection of lethargic, cliché academics and awkward, ranting Layton-worshippers. SHOOT LOW SHERIFF THEY'RE RIDING SHETLAND PONIES, written by a crippled athlete and a transient criminal, is the first definitive hip piss on the Establishment of Canadian letters in the last decade.

Roy MacSkimming, 20, wrote many of his poems in hospital while recovering from a near-fatal injury incurred while throwing the discus, which forced him to give up a promising career as a professional football player and a chance to compete in the Olympic decathlon competition. He now indulges his Byronic morbidity by taking an anthropology course at UC.

William Hawkins, 23, wrote most of his poems while serving time in a variety of Canadian prisons. Former friend and confidante of Ottawa gang leader Bonzo Laroque, he has travelled extensively throughout North America. Recently moved to Toronto, he spends most of his time in the city's less reputable bars, cadging drinks and insulting aesthetes. Hawkins is married and has two children.

The poems printed here describe two journeys, separate but parallel: from innocence through experience to a kind of tentative reconciliation with the world in which the poets live. Pursued across the vast western plains of a young man's growing by the unrelenting posess of our rotting civilization, they must use the only means of escape at hand — the erstaz shetland ponies of their art, their only way of dodging the inevitable bullets, of scoring a limited triumph against the overwhelming forces opposing them. Their poems are unsurpassed by any Canadian poet under thirty.

MacSkimming's poems begin in wonder, wonder of eyes discovering new worlds and wonder of a mind discovering the possibilities of words:

Pray the entering moon, erupting clouds pray the searching tongues of doves their stroking wings pray with our hands with our eyes
our bodies speak like lanterns in the midnight wind

These early poems communicate amazement at the beauty he has found and apprehension at the frailty of this beauty. He is constantly aware of "the darkening sky" which he knows will one day destroy the innocence he seeks to preserve in his writing. As he develops, the style becomes more austere, less concerned with language for its own sake. With this comes a perception of the absurdity of the human condition and the impotence of man.

The later poems are concerned with loss, failure, fear, anguish and hatred. This is the last section of "The Journey."

The beaches must be closed because of plague
You walk along them and your feet change the colour of the sand Boxcars piled with corpses pass by you out of the hills

The last poem, "Birth," combines the poet's two major preoccupations, precarious innocence and unalterable absurdity, in an affirmation of a life in which at least some fragmentary personal victory can be won:

Show me which mirror to look in we shall yet achieve beginning shall prize our hatred—in your murder of me complete our laughable destiny

There is nothing idyllic in Hawkins' early poems: a phoenix dies, a rabbit is killed by a car, pigeons shit on Beethoven's statue. The poet knows the only way to survive is to laugh and run. He is "a child of autumn," standing apart from the world around him, yet ambitious to control it. But he recognizes the necessity for disguise and even the Shetland pony must be camouflaged as he tries to influence events in any way he can:

If I had me a Porsche
a black sleek animal Porsche I'd find me a brick wall with two miles of road in front of it and BANG me and the Porsche would swing out

So he leaps farther into the hip Eden of his own skull, manufacturing fantastic angels. Why not? Now he can swing in a world throbbing with dazzling tragedies of true holiness, the mad accidental beauty of the desperate brain. His journey becomes that of King Kong, "aspirant monarch of England, pussyfooting rogue in Rotterdam, and kaballa leader in sandy Saudi Arabia."

The goal of King Kong's journey is America-Tallahassee, Florida. Here he has incredible visions of a land whose people practise "the ultimate kindness of abolished zoos," but the grand dream of Tallahassee is doomed to failure—it can never become another New Orleans. In the later love poems, Hawkins returns to the "real" world. He realizes that the evil which pervades both his myths and his life is incurable and that even love is no anodyne, but he has now found a way of ordering at least part of his life to his own vision:

Somehow this is different and my catalogue of words can't handle it Pose movement and preparation these are the same and yet I am aware of you and in you my pleasure is in your pleasure
I feel like a god
I am a god and your ecstatic face
my first creation

A reading will be given on campus in the near future by the poets.

Who's who of horror spoof themselves

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

The who's who of the horror movie world team up in The Comedy of Terrors to satirize precisely the type of films they themselves have been making for the last 34 years.

Vincent Price, the reigning monarch or cinematic horror, plays undertaker Trumbull—a man with a most interesting technique of stimulating economic activity. He and Peter Lorre create their own "customers" by smothering them with a pillow.

Trumbull is a drunkard and he has ruined the business he inherited from his father-in-law (Boris Karloff). He doesn't embalm bodies when he buries them (hasn't done so in 6 years) and has used the same coffin for only 13 years.

When landlord Black (Basil Rathbone) demands payment for a year's back-rent, our hero undertakes to kill two birds "with one pillow."

But on arrival at the funeral parlour, Black isn't really dead—he's suffering from a cataleptic fit (one of the most hackneyed horror movie conventions).

The body refuses to die and finally returns from the crypt for revenge. (Shades of the House of Usher).

The film also effectively satirizes funeral directors.

"I am afraid Madam, that he has made his final crossing to that stygian shore," says Price looking upon the cadaver.

"What?" asks the widow. He's dead," Price answers.

As a satire the film is excellent marred only occasionally by too-broad slapstick. Price overacts in his usual manner but here it appropriately comes across as a satire of himself.

Ah sweet mystery of death

Karloff handles his part adequately — what there is of it. And the females aren't worth mentioning because they only contributed bosomeys anyway.

Capitalizing on the popularity of a former satire of the horror films The Raven, Comedy of Terrors improves on its hilarious predecessor. The satire is more direct and pointed and more light-hearted.

For me the best part of the movie is the performance of Basil Rathbone. He comes up with one of the best lines of the entire 90 minutes—a line that is beautifully understated. As Lorre and Price are trying to stuff him into the coffin, Basil calmly says, "Sirs, I consider your actions as inimical to good fellowship."

God bless America

How long would democracy last in the U.S. if the President were to sign a complete nuclear disarmament treaty with the Soviets? Possibly only seven days. Before this time, there would be an attempt at a coup d'état by the powerful and popular Pentagon brass; in a pseudo-"alert," they would detain the President, deploy many troops to the metropolitan areas of the nation, and take over all the communications media in the name of "Civil Defence". Their control of the country would be virtually absolute.

This is the premise of Seven Days in May and in this day of the military-industrial establishment, and right-wing fervor, it is too bloody likely a premise to be unconvincing. The violence and chaos threatening the nation are established instantly in the impressive opening scene: pro- and anti-treaty picket lines parade alongside each other in front of the White House in utter silence. There is a jeer — and suddenly we are in the midst of the fiercest and most realistic riot ever seen on screen, skillfully directed and executed.

Move inside the White House, and meet the President (Fredric March), and his friend, the tough Senator from Georgia (Edmund O'Brien). The President is committed intellectually and morally to the procurement of a full peace, and the Senator is committed to the President. In the days of crisis to come, the President will remain the bastion of strength and rationality, and one senses this from the beginning.

Move next to a Senate investigation of the Army's views on the unratified treaty, and meet James Mattoon Scott (Burt Lancaster), Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and darling of rightist pressure groups.

Finally, move to the Pentagon, where a casual word here, and an enigmatic code there begin to indicate to loyal Kirk Douglas that something is rotten in the States.

What shapes up is an exciting and suspenseful race to prevent a catastrophe whose nature is only gradually revealed. With a minimum of melodrama (no corny ominous music, for instance) and a maximum of gripping understatement the Presidential force begins its desperate fight against time and the lurking enemy. There are few lapses in the frantic pace of the film; one is inherent in the tenuous link between Ava Gardner's role as Scott's mistress and the main plot. Others occur when March polemicizes about the virtues of Constitutional government. But none of these weaknesses are extreme; they are off-set by the film's frankness in indicating McCarthy and Walker-type fanatics.

The sets, from the White House interiors and pool, to the Pentagon security station contribute to the verisimilitude of this film; thus, the detailed unfolding of events, rather than the climax of the plot, make the picture, directed by John Frankenheimer (of Playhouse 90 fame), successful.

Frederic March and Edmund O'Brien give fine performances; Lancaster, Douglas, and Gardner exercise competence and restraint. There is hope for Hollywood if it can begin to make films like this one, at once serious and exciting.

By RICKY SALSBERG

What do you know?
There's a funny movie in town.

Now Sunday in New York is in colour. Also it's shot against honest-to-goodness full-of-life New York backgrounds. Then it has some fun music to accompany the antics of Jane Fonda, Cliff Robertson, Rod Taylor, and even Jim Backus. Besides, it's funny.

In parts, anyway — enough parts to make it worthwhile.
The problem is simple. It's just that it's hard for a sister to explain satisfactorily to her brother why she and a strange man are sitting around his apartment clothed only in bathrobes, especially since the reason is exactly what he thinks it is.

Big brother has enough problems of his own. The name of his problems is Jo Morrow. He is supposedly an airline pilot, but she gets to do a lot more flying than he does, and all they want to do anyway is land, on the nearest available couch.

No one ever really does anything wrong, you understand. After all, this is a Hollywood comedy, and they didn't know it was going to be restricted. So they miscalculated some of the ingredients: specifically, too much explanation for expiation.
They forgot that schmaltz melts, and leaves a big mess.

All the actors perform smoothly and vivaciously, with the proper touch of light-heartedness throughout.
Jane Fonda deposits her "Chapman Report" complexes with her honor not-sobright brother (Robertson) and the stranger to whom she becomes inseparably attached on the bus (Taylor), but she shouldn't have banked on either of them. Still, Taylor manages to maintain his reserve (s) until her former boyfriend appears about to hold them up. By the time he finally goes (for) broke, there's enough interest on both sides to make up for it, and she's quite content to accept his liquidation.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES  AIR CANADA

Concealed under a mass of white hair and behind steel-rimmed glasses was the mind of a fiend. Her name has slipped from my grasp but I think about the dear old soul about this time every year when the days get longer and the sun smells good and spring looms close. And we all know what spring brings. Summer. And summer brings . . . or it brought when I was a youngster . . . summer camps.

"Little Alan will get along just fine with the other boys Mrs. Walker," gleefully crowed she whom I will call Mrs. Cardigan because she always wore them.

The train pulled out of the station and Mrs. Cardigan surveyed the 15 charges, all aged about eight, that would be hers for the next two weeks.

"Now let's not have any bawling, you're here for a summer holiday," she said ominously, her formerly peaceful smile hardening into a thin, grey line. "If you want to have fun you'll have fun. But," she added under her breath, "you'll have to fight me for it."

Herded into her teeny station wagon, we were driven to Camp Hole-In-The-Hedge which we soon christened Camp Hole-In-The-Wall.

By the time Mrs. Cardigan's aged vehicle creaked into her front yard, it was 6 p.m. We were ushered in to a filling meal of puffed wheat and skim milk.

We were confused. One of my pals (being all in the same boat we soon formed defensive alliances) was car-sick. Mrs. Cardigan had a remedy.

She took away his puffed wheat.

EARLY TO BED

Bedtime was 7:30 p.m. We thought that was a trifle early, even for kids of our age, but soon found that we'd need lots of sleep at Camp Hole-In-The-Wall. Hunger does that.

The first night we slept poorly and were treated to an exhibition of socialism from a counsellor who systematically stole all our flashlights and candy. Who believes kids? We kept our mouths shut.

Early the next morning we had what Mrs. Cardigan called "appel" and I found out years later the Nazis called it the same thing. We lined up outside our sheds and chattered our names. After a filling puffed-wheat breakfast — she must have got a real bargain on that stuff. We found we got more nourishment by eating the boxes it came in — it was playtime.

Mrs. Cardigan was a great believer in nature so she generously provided each camper with a garden plot all of his own. We could see nature in action.

Measuring what seemed to be about 20 feet square, the plot I had kept me busy. We had quotas. All I got to produce was beets. To this day I eat neither beets nor puffed wheat.

Hikes at Camp Hole-In-The-Wall were of two kinds, straight-line or right-angle. We liked the right-angle ones best. That meant Mrs. Cardigan rented us out to local farmers ayn we paraded around their fields mending fences or gleaming cobs of corn missed by the adult (union) pickers.

FREE ENTERPRISE WORKED

Straight-line hikes were when teams of us went to town pulling giant sledges loaded with our garden plot produce that Mrs. Cardigan then sold.

I once saw a brochure advertising the camp activities. Mrs. Cardigan made sure we took full part in the wide training programs available. But who would have thought horsemanship meant stable-cleaning?

Hobbies were plentiful. We spent evening-hours hunched over giant clamshells, making ashtrays, kidney basins and other useful items which later appeared in town as "genuine Canadian native folk art" selling at prices up to $10.

To please the folks back at home, though, we had to learn something. Swimming, it appeared, was the easiest to teach.

The sadists masquerading as counsellors (they were really teen-aged girls with pimples and universally inverted uteruses) lined up along the banks of the greasy river with squawling kids in their arms.

Mrs. Cardigan counted one . . . two . . . three.

Splash.

It worked for everybody but me. I sank like a stone.

The impromptu lesson in lifesaving that followed was the only genuine slice of summer vacation activity the other kids got.

I was content with getting home alive.

STILL LOVES HER; SHE JUMPED SHIP

By ANN CHARLESWORTH

The scourge of unwed fatherhood (said Rodney Zeel, famed television commentator) hangs heavily upon those unlucky enough to be saddled with it. Last week I stood among five men, beaten down, lonely, fretful, sick in mind and body, gathered around a table in a dingy Toronto building, unmarked and unidentified, but known to these poor wretches as the Home for Unwed Fathers. These pitiful creatures, scorned and spurned by the nation, these broken-hearted men, can never forget the loss of their loved ones. They played cards but their hearts just weren't in it. And one by one they stood up, wandered around the ghastly grey room, leaned lopsidedly against the chill walls. They each gave their utmost loyalty to a woman and then, when God bestowed the precious gift of conception upon the then-happy couple, the woman vanished and left her man to face alone the horrible burden of unwed fatherhood. Now they await helplessly for their confinement to be completed. And then at the end of nine months, when the physical pain ended, what is left for these cast-offs of society? Nothing but endless emptiness and shame. We have with us here today one of these wretched creatures, anonymous of course, who will tell us what it means to be an unwed father. Mr. X, tell us in your own words, what is it like, what did you feel on that first dread day when you learned you were to become an unwed father?

It . . . it . . . was awful. Of course me and Gertie had talked about the possibility of my getting to be an unwed father ever since that first night—it seems like years ago—when I . . . when she . . . that is, when I gave myself to her in pledge of our eternal love. I was afraid of becoming an unwed father, and I didn't want to go to bed with her really, and my mother had warned me, but Gertie said it was the only way we could be sure we loved each other. And then she refused to let me take The Pill—said it meant missing the essential spontaneity of the beautiful act that we were committing. And I thought she loved me truly and sincerely, just as I loved her Oh! so very truly and sincerely, and so when I was in the drugstore that day, when I first found out that I was to be an unwed father, I thought it just meant that we'd have to get married right away and that wouldn't have been so bad, but then came the real shock.

What was that Mr. X? Just tell your tragic story in your own hearts-rending words, what was the shock that came over you like a rolling wave as you stood alone and quivering with fear in the drugstore?

Well sir, that shock just came over me like a rolling wave as I stood there alone and quivering with fear in the drugstore. It was Gertie. She put the Playboy magazine back on the rack, came over to me looked at the bunny test report and just turned against me, right then and there. Said I was a lot of fun and a good kid and all that, but that she figured I knew perfectly well she never wanted to marry me. Well I tell you mister, that hit me right there in the pit of my stomach, you know? Right there. No, maybe a little lower. Anyway, I pleaded with her right in the store and started screaming: "Please Gertie, do the right thing by me, make an honest man of me!" And she laughed. Right there, she just chuckled and I beat my tiny fists against her chest and cried—oh I sobbed as if my little heart would break and the pharmacist threw us out on the street. Then Gertie stopped laughing and said of course an abortion was the only answer. I was appalled. Abortion! My lips shudder as I pronounce the vile word! I told her no, of course, that it would be like murder! Human life is sacred!

And was it just after that when Gertie ignored your pleas to do right by you, and jumped ship for Sweden?

Yeah, she just up and left me in the lurch, all alone and soon to be an unwed father. I sought legal advice and the Children's Aid got a warrant issued for her but it was too late. She'd hidden herself well. And she didn't even have the courtesy and thoughtfulness to provide financially for me, and there I was with all those bills coming up.

What happened during the dreadful weeks that followed? Tell us in your own thought-provoking words.

Well, the sickness bothered me a lot. Every morning. Couldn't even hold down my orange juice. And my face all broke out and my nails cracked. Had to eat gelatine. All that combined with Gertie's leaving and all, made my friends know I was going to be an unwed father and they said some really nasty things about me behind my back and snubbed me when I met them.

Yes, what a shame it is that those responsible for these poor men's plights never stick around to take the abuse that a cruel society can dish out. What did they say Mr. X? Tell us in every breath-taking, nerve-tormenting detail. Let no insult be left aside.

— vsp bryce

They blamed ME! They said I was an idiot for getting mixed up with the likes of her, they said THAT about the woman I love so dearly. So I had no other choice, I went into the home and that really broke my spirit. There I sat, alone and miserable, knowing that I could never face my friends again or love another woman because of the shame of becoming an unwed father. I even considered suicide but there was the child to consider. New I must end my life in torture and pain and loneliness because the woman I love fled without me and left me an unwed father.

What about a word of advice Mr. X for those men like yourself unlucky enough to become unwed fathers? What final word can you find leave to leave with our audience? Obviously you're not at fault here. Is it sufficient just to beware of evil temptresses and seductresses like Gertie?

Blame Gertie? No indeed. It's not her fault. I blame the kid, no question about it. If there was just some way to get a message to that kid. Cause a lot of trouble if you come out, boy.

Thanks a lot.

Tales from

The first few weeks in Barcelona were alright. The Plaza Real was nothing more than a Spanish Quarter, a great cloistered rectangle enclosing within its bowels tables in the sun, cafes, plant life and fountains. Our hotel in the nueva San Francisco was a short block away, and we spent most of our time in and out of the Blue Note Cafe. The singer at the Blue Note was a tall willowy negro named Gloria Marshall; she was a very quiet spoken woman, and although she had a brilliant voice and could do fine things with a song, she spoiled everything she touched with perverse streaks of humility and conscience. To the sounds of applause, she would retreat from the stage in great embarrassment and clumsiness; it was the ugliest part of her performance and an uncomfortable thing to anticipate every night. But she could not trust her public, she was constantly intimidated by all those eyes eavesdropping through smoke and noise; so every evening she failed. Danny the pimp, who fancied himself an expert on intimidation, enjoyed toying with her failure; he knew that she felt compromised and humiliated in the Blue Note and every afternoon he would begin his saccharin lecture on "the requirements of art and ease. Look Gloria honey you freeze you break down, you kill everything you build." Gloria hated everything in the open this way: "Why you dirty little pimp dont talk to me about art or anything when you dont believe and you dont care." "Thats true," Danny would grin, buttoning the argument neatly. And that was the substance of their afternoons.

It was Gloria who introduced us to the beaches outside of the city. The beach in Barcelona was filthy and polluted; the sand was clogged with stones and garbage, and inhabited by scrawny little children, their flabby decadent mothers and all the emaciated girls from the slum side of the mountain. But in Sitges and farther down the coast Villanueva, the sand was white. Sitges was predominantly English (it had a Windsor Hotel and a Windsor tea Room), and only Germans went to Villanueva; still, the sun turned you dark in a hour — except for Rose who turned so red with blister that she constantly looked like a plump moulting lizard. So every other day, we would drive out for our afternoon swim, laze in the sand, and come back at dusk to catch Gloria's painful performance.

Iris was living with Doc, of course; they had a room on a lower floor of the Pension Toledo, just below Rose and myself. The proprietress had given Bobby E. a cot in his spare office and there he began a curious treating into gloom and silence; one day he didn't come out, and after a while we didn't expect him to. He wouldn't even eat. Unless someone had bought him a pastry a few times a day, he certainly would have starved; it was a minor mystery. "Whats the matter Bobby?" I asked. "Oh God, I feel funny, I'm all funny," he told me. So we forgot him.

Eventually, we invested in some wineskins and went to the bullfights. We were prepared to love them and we did; Dixie and I had made some money betting on the Jai Alai games on the Ramblas, so we could afford the luxury of the cheap seats del sol twice a week. None of us knew bullfighting by the book and what we saw came as a complete surprise; the first surprise being that there are few good bullfights. A really bad bullfight can be a haunting spectacle. And aside from Diego Puerto, the matadors in Barcelona were generally clumsy and grotesque. The Spanish said they were bad because they were being paid so little and wouldn't expose themselves to any real danger, but whatever the reason, the fights were sensational in the worst way. There's no time to describe the fight in its three phases, but the part played by the picador is unforgettable; he is the villain of the fight, and most responsible for taking the first strength from the bull by working the pic of a spiked pole into the animal's hump of muscle at the neck. He is supposed to weaken the bull, but not to maim it, although he does everything he can to make it easier for the matador; sometimes, he deliberately bleeds the bull or jerks the pic into the bone and when this happens and he refuses to remove the pole after his allotted time, the crowds jeer because they are being cheated. But there is a comic release to this, because while the picador is deviously performing his art—and he is on horseback—the bull charges the scrawny horse in an attempt to gore it through the belly. Before the thirties, the horses wore no armour and were killed fairly frequently. Sometimes, the horse would have to walk out of the ring stepping over its own intestines. With the armour, usually the most damage a bull can do to-day is to knock the horse over—an appreciable test of strength—and get at the picador on the ground; this is one of the highlights of the ritual, and if the pic is still caught in the bull's muscle or spine, the picador can be dragged about the ring and perhaps crushed and gored. As for the horses, they are old and useless anyway, shipped to the fights by the crateload.

But it is the killing of the bull that sticks in the weak craw. A perfect kill, of course, is an act of pure majesty; with the same motion that the matador thrusts and swerves, the bull falls and rolls, dead even before it hits the ground. I have never seen this happen. Usually, the matador makes his sword thrust over the horns and down into the heart, and then stands aside while the bull blinks at him stupidly. The crowd makes sounds of displeasure. The bull charges, again, then walks off with the top of the sword visible in the deflated muscle at the back of the neck. The matador deliberates, bravely leans over and withdraws the sword, wipes off the blood, and begins again. Once again the bull cannot be intimidated into death and once again it stands mute and patient. The crowd hisses and swears. The matador affectionately pats the rump of the animal as if to steady it against the pain. The bull tries to charge, then stumbles. The cheer goes up from the crowd. The bull falls to its knees in a swoon, then shakes off its weakness and rises again, but it cannot charge. Clots of blood spurt from the nose and mouth of the animal and from loss of blood alone it finally kneels, then rolls to one side still shivering. An assistant to the matador crouches down and slits its throat.

But the bullfights were not the only kind of danger we saw. Iris and I had a habit of meeting each other in the Place Catalana late in the evenings when Dixie was milking his sorrow in the Blue Note. We couldn't go to the hotel because Dixie was only a block away, so we went to filthy little alleys while the night drunks of the Quarter drifted past with a chuckle and a sniff. "This kind of breaks up the group image, doesn't it?" Iris said one night; but that wasn't it at all. I was beginning to like Dixie, he had too much sentiment but he was alright, and it was hard to be straight with him in the afternoon and two faced after dark. Yet I managed it. The more he confided in me, the more I knew how to work him for more time with Iris. She was tough and self-sufficient alright, but with a man she was like a scared child without dignity or mystery. This went on for some time.

The one evening, Bobby E Lee came into our room white as a ghost and a quiver in his voice. "Listen," he whispered hoarsely, "something happened, what am I gonna do, mommy." It seemed that Dixie had caught him in bed with Iris: "We were in bed together and he just walked in. He says he's gonna kill me, he went out to buy a knife." We let Bobby E Lee sleep in our room that night. Dixie came back near dawn to morning, still in an unbelieving daze, and lay down beside Iris, morose and on a low flame. She was sobbing for the first time that he could remember. She implored him to forgive her (they even tried to make love) and to put away the switch blade he held in his hand. She didn't sleep all the next day and she begged him to stay in bed with her and not to move. She was scared for her life. Bobby E Lee, a few floors away, cried and ranted; it wasn't his fault, she had invited him up to their room and they had had some pot. He had been high, he explained, and when he was high he took off his pants; but so did she and wasn't that a coincidence? What bothered me was that Iris was too clever to suffer; by confessing absolutely, she would have Dixie again without any trouble. But would she confess everything? It was bad enough taking Iris under Dixie's nose, but to twoface him into the bargain: why he'd slit my throat.

I was too upset not to take a calculated risk and late that afternoon I wandered through the corridors to their room and knocked pleasantly on the door. Iris opened up and gave me a cool, guided stare. Was Dixie there? Yes, but he was sleeping. "Who's there?" groaned Dixie, and I could hear him fumbling among the linen. "Garber, listen you wanna go down to the Blue Note? we're all going." "Who's going?" asked Dixie suspiciously. "Me, Rose, Bobby, come on." "Tell him I'm gonna kill him," said Dixie. So I forced my way in past Iris and talked quickly for half an hour. I persuaded them to take the car back to Paris and forget everything. It wasn't worth it. Iris hadn't told him a thing, because he took me aside and said, "Garber, you just saved my life, you'll never know what you done for us man," and shook my hand. Iris gave me the stare as I went on out.

So they left as the first darkness fell. Bobby stayed locked in our room wrapped securely in blankets and sheets. I promised to meet them in Paris in a couple of weeks and then they were gone with their horrible problem unsolved and things between them as thin as summer ice. Two days later, I put Rose on a boat for Ibeza, left Bobby E Lee whimpering alone in the hotelroom, and took a noon train on down the coast.

Two footnotes concerning some matters of fact that may be bothering my readers. I. I must say it was a simple matter to dump Rose; all I had to say was that I had seen a little man with a wart on his nose and a slight gimp to his left leg and she would scream "Henry, you runaway bastard," and leap out of my life for the day. With such pleasure respites, I knew how to fill my time; Julia knew the better things in life, though she couldn't afford them, and she'd take me to one of the mountains in Barcelona to see the greatest living squirting fountain in the world (possibly exceeded in grace only by a few dear friends who are always sick); watching that great spire of water reminded me of an old pledge: Garber, jump in all fountains as a tribute to nothing. We took off our shoes (a mistake, it was like telegraphing your punch) and made it to the first apron before we were impeded frantically by three different kinds of police. It was more than a fountain, it seemed, it was a national ideal (anything as big as that has to pay its way).

ii. Dysentery was not a sickness invented by the gods because it has no dignity and little charm; it ruins more love affairs, kills more dinners, and execrates more evenings than a pogrom. The urge to finish yourself off is always there, and you learn only through discipline and courage to venture any distance from your hotel. As you walk along chatting amiably with a healthy friend, the sweat breaks out on the face, the skin goes clammy and chill, the legs begin to shiver, and within the all-powerful bowel, a universal urge yearns to assert itself. Even when it goes away the first time, it leaves you weak and loose; and when it hits again, it always does, give up, your sweat is colder and your chills more ravaging than anything you can imagine. It leaves a bug that never quite goes away. A year later you might be sitting in Fran's Restaurant (if you're the kind) and suddenly you feel it creeping up on you like hemlock — "Julia," you scream, "Bobby E Lee, Iris, Rose!" "What," says your date, "Who is Rose?" And rather than explain the nostalgia of the movement, you get the hell out and relieve yourself historically.

By MARCEL DADA
Varsity Staff Poet

In the situation throughout the world today of corruption and general moral decay; of inflation; of irreparable damage to man; and of, most importantly, extreme decadence in art, I feel a reaction to what I call the "babbling-brook poetry" is inevitable.

For proper emotional purgation, modern poetry must increasingly devote itself to emotional rather than logical context. There must be a return to the elements of poetry, to noise and articulated sounds common to all languages. Only thus can the barriers of race and religion be broken down.

In the following poem the words do not exist, but they might exist in any language. They affect the ear with their phonetic vibrations—like music.

Surprise and pleasure are derived from the structure and invective combination of the parts. It is a verbal collage.

Properly recited, the poem lasts 19 minutes. The vowels are gauged and distributed only to the value of the initial line. The final line take seven minutes, eight and one-half seconds. The "W" is recited with a slowly rising voice varying from a whisper to the sound of a wailing siren and ends with a bark in a shockingly loud tone.

The Sound of surprise

by DAVID JACKEL

Faced with the surfeit of uninspired mediocrity currently infesting the local taverns, the jazz critic who wishes to keep his sanity is forced back to that old standby, record reviews. So herewith follows an analysis of some reasonably new records by some relatively unknown young musicians.

All material reviewed was supplied by me, and was carefully listened to on my personal low-fi (discount-priced) record player. This machine produces a constant background noise vaguely akin to the sound of frying eggs, which makes it impossible to tell whether the musicians are cooking musically or actually. But despite this serious handicap, which ranks only slightly below the omnipresent, hard-sell waiters Toronto taverns are famous for, your intrepid jazz critic has persevered and produced the penultimate column. Those who wish to celebrate this event have my permission to assemble in front of the bandstand at the Colonial and subject themselves to the 'jazz' provided by Jonah Jones.

But, to adopt a less serious tone for the moment, the listener's attention is directed toward two recent releases on the Pacific Jazz label: Catch Me, featuring guitarist Joe Pass, and Heat Wave, the latest production by the Jazz Crusaders.

The Pass album represents the first release on which the guitarist has been featured as leader and prominent soloist, and his work here indicates that he has developed an original style and distinctive sound which should make him a threat to the current dominance on this instrument exercised by Wes Montgomery. Pass uses his dark tone and facility for building long but interesting single-note lines to good advantage on the uptempo numbers, and plays extremely thoughtful and well-constructed solos on the ballads which make up about half the record.

Pianist Clare Fischer and bassist Albert Stinson provide an added bonus. Fischer's work has a certain superficial resemblance to that of Bill Evans, but the two pianists actually construct their solos very differently and Fischer has a much noticeably harder touch. Stinson, who was in Toronto with Chico Hamilton this fall, is consistently good throughout, and his technique can only be described as phenomenal.

The Jazz Crusaders, who almost swing hard enough to make it in the popular field, are a group of young musicians from the West Coast who play a brand of shouting jazz which bears no resemblance to the effete music produced in that area less than a decade ago.

Their sound is a big one, utilizing a tenor-trombone front line, and they have a facility for either picking attractive tunes or creating their own. This album includes some rhythm-and-blues numbers, pop tunes, jazz originals by the members of the band, and (you better believe it) a folk-song.

Trombonist Wayne Henderson is the most interesting soloist, and he has escaped from the J. J. Johnson syndrome in the direction of something that sounds as if it is descended from the work of Bill Harris. It is Henderson's solo which makes the folk number (Green Back Dollar) into successful jazz.

Tenorist Wilton Felder and pianist Joe Sample are still in the process of building their own styles. Felder sounds very much like early Coltrane or Rollins, with surprising touches of altoist Cannonball Adderley. Sample is trying to find something new in an area which has been almost mined out by Wynton Kelly. But both avoid the obvious clichés, and their enthusiasm, and that of the whole band, is highly infectious. Drummer Stix Hooper deserves a good deal of the credit for keeping things swinging, and shows that he has subtlety as well as power.

Pianist McCoy Tyner's Nights of Ballads and Blues (Impulse) is not a very recent record, but it provides the best example available to date of the solo work of John Coltrane's current accompanist. Tyner has improved tremendously since his service with the Jazztet a few years ago, and has now developed a very personal chorded style, probably in defense against the 'sheets of sound' used by Coltrane.

The entire album has a relaxed feeling to it, and most of the numbers played by Tyner are standards. His work on Satin Doll and Star Eyes has an appeal which should immediately reach even the novice, and he also handles two Thelonius Monk compositions very well, a difficult task for any pianist. But the highlight of the album is Tyner's imaginative reworking of the neglected tune For Heaven's Sake.

The pianist is supported by bassist Steve Davis and drummer Lex Humphries. Both are unobtrusive, although Davis has a couple of well-used interludes, and Humphries wisely restricts himself to brushes.

Going to Europe this summer? Then Nancy Adams can help you

So who's Nancy Adams? She's a University of Toronto student who can be your Student's Travel Advisor this summer. Her job will be to provide information and assistance to students who plan to visit Britain or the Continent.

How can she help you? In many ways—your money problems—your overseas mail—and even in meeting other students who are going overseas this summer.

You can probably think of a thousand other things you'd like to know about your trip. Chances are Nancy can help you with many of them. So why not fill out this coupon and send it in to her today? That'll give her a chance to get the information back to you before you go.

And, if you should need help while you're in Europe, you'll be able to contact Nancy Adams in England. She'll be at 48 Berkeley Square, the West End, London branch of Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce during June, July and August.

Trouble starts when Burton speaks

By ERIC RUMP

I last saw Richard Burton as Hamlet in the Old Vic production of 1953. Then he was a young and potentially great actor, attacking the part with robust vigor and carrying it off with a fair degree of success. His angularities, his lack of finesse, could be put down to relative inexperience. If it wasn't a great performance, it was at least a performance full of promise. If he was doing this much in 1953, what might not be possible in, say, 1963 or 1964?

The answer provided by his present performance at the O'Keefe is not encouraging. He has more or less remained stationary, except for his vigor, which has ebbed out somewhere during his Hollywood years. Visually he is still compelling—a heavy, craggy face, scarred by internal suffering and explosive with suppressed rage. If he only had to stand around, his performance would be masterly. It's when he starts speaking that the trouble starts.

The main weakness with his voice is that it lacks that middle range so essential to any actor. He can rage and gibber when he wants, often effectively, and the impassioned mutter is within his grasp (though it can drop into incoherence, as in the "to be or not to be" soliloquy), but he seems quite incapable of the sprightly trot. Which is a pity, since Hamlet requires a fair amount of sprightly trotting, if one is not to be breathless long before the end.

The result is a Hamlet who is not so much worried as a man, but worried about his part. Uneasy about the mechanics of delivery, he becomes surly, graceless, lacking in tact. His performance is dumped in the audience's lap with a take-it-or-leave-it shrug of the shoulders. All the careful effort that has gone into it is still painfully apparent; the mysterious point where actual effort becomes transmuted into an appearance of ef-fortlessness has not been crossed. This is Nijinsky at the bar, not Nijinsky on stage.

Around Burton are grouped a curious hodge-podge of performances ranging from the distinguished to the painful. At the top end of the scale is the Polonius of Hume Cronyn, who makes Polonius fussy and narrow-minded without being a ridiculous buffoon. George Rose as the first grave-digger has an easier task, and brings to the part a comfortable solidity, ruddy-cheeked and dependable.

The royal couple are mediocre. Sir John Gielgud, the director, had said earlier that he hoped to build up the part of Claudius by playing him as a more sensitive and intelligent being than is normally done, but little of this comes across in Alfred Drake's portrayal. He has the right beard for the part, but that is all. Nor did Eileen Herlie add as much to Gertrude as expected. She appeared flat and dispirited, as though suffering from an overdose of salts.

It may be unmannerly to single out Linda Marsh for blame, but her Ophelia had one on the edge of the seat, convinced that something disastrous or unnatural was about to happen. Fortunately, it didn't.

There are a number of intelligent touches by Sir John Gielgud, such as his handling of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern (two fishy and sinister fellows), his use of masks and music for the players, scene, and the life he has infused into the courtiers at the end.

But the production as a whole remains a flawed one. The company lacks rapport, treating each other as though they were just meeting at a cocktail party. This is partly due to the inhuman size of the O'Keefe stage, which leaves each actor stranded in a sea of space. In future they could try equipping everybody with stilts and megaphones. Or, failing that, move them over to the Royal Alex., where they'll be much more at home.

Alumnae shows versatility with Pinter

by TONY ADVOKAAT

The University Alumnae Dramatic Club showed their versatility by presenting a tight and gripping performance of Harold Pinter's "The Caretaker", one of the best-known plays of the "Theatre of the Absurd".

The plot is slight: an old bum, Davies, is taken in by Aston, who lives in a cluttered room in a dilapidated house which belongs to his brother Mick. Davies, with a shrewdness born of desperation, tries to curry favour with first one, then the other of the brothers. His clumsy attempts fail and he only succeeds in alienating both of them, after which he is ejected into the hostile outside world again.

As in Pinter's other plays, the action takes place in a single room, a prison and a place of refuge at the same time, upon which the outside world intrudes from time to time in a disturbing fashion. A drop in a bucket from a leaky roof can suddenly take on a frightening significance. In this claustrophobic setting the three characters confront and torture each other: Aston the gentle and withdrawn caretaker, his sadistic brother Mick, and Davies, the ebullient old man, pathetic in his attempts to preserve his self-esteem.

In the first act, Don Ward playing Aston in a very subdued manner acquires himself very well in the difficult task of establishing his character opposite the loquacious and assertive Davies (Donald Ewer).

Michael Barton catches the aspect of Mick's feline cruelty and he is also able to make the transition when Mick faces up to the fact that his dream will never become reality, and we see the anguish behind the mask.

At the end of the play director Herbert Whittaker seems to suggest that Aston might actually build his workshop in the backyard. The director's interpretation might here be criticized, but it keeps the play from being wholly pessimistic.

Fortunately, the vitality of Pinter's dialogue, which is nonsensical and often funny, keeps "The Caretaker" from being morbid. The acting throughout is sure and controlled, but really outstanding was Ward's soliloquy at the end of the second act, when Aston recounts his experiences in a mental hospital, where he received the electric shock treatment, which damaged his brain.

All the productions at the Coach House in the past year have been of very high quality. "The Caretaker" is no exception and is well worth a visit.

Corso psyches Johnson

by KALAMOS JAZPAN
(an itinerant tailor)

The Edward Johnson Building was officially opened Monday. After the usual ritual of presenting a gold key to Sir Ernest MacMillan, the assembled multitude withdrew to observe the fine tapestries, photographs, Potted plants, and benches which decorated the main foyer. A week long festival of music had begun by Monday night.

Within Groot's twisted oaky gnarl by a pumpkin's grinning glow the wingmaker in chaste leprosy does sew

Gregory Corso

So I started writing about the opening of this new music building but I realized that Corso caught its ceremonial mood months ago. It's just another Hotel Broog summoning the chimera, the mugwump, Groot, Thoth, Bunch Bunch and Horace Greeley.

The festival is being used as a rostrum for works by Conservatory composers spiced by some Great Britain. Already, music of Britten, Elgar, MacMillan (of course), Ridout, and Johnston has been performed. Saturday's concert is exclusively devoted to Morawetz, Beckwith, Gellman, Walter and Somers ("Who's he?"). It is more an academic showcase than a representative sample (Give us Weinzwieg at least). One can only hope that the CBC Symphony concert tomorrow is more exciting than that of the opening night.

Monday the Conservatory Chorus and Orchestra performed MacMillan's England and Godfrey Ridout's Esther. Sir Ernest conducted the opening work. One cannot ignore MacMillan's contribution to Canadian music, particularly in his capacity as a music educator. And no one could argue with the choice of his conducting his doctoral thesis to officially open the theatre which bears his name. But there have been few local performances recently which can match the dullness and unimaginativeness of the Overture to England. Parts One and Two are an improvement partly because the addition of soloists and chorus gives the composition more weight. Also because there are some beautiful melodies and an interesting contrapuntal section in Part Two.

The Ridout work, conducted by Principal Mazzoleni, sounds like an Englishman speaking Persian. It's more complex and melodious than England but becomes too repetitive in the end. It would be better as the background score to a movie spectacular viewed every Purim. The orchestra under Dr. Mazzoleni was excellent.

Some of these same players took part in Tuesday's successful Chamber Music Concert arranged by Greta Kraus. Most of the orchestra in Albert Herring, Wednesday, were also students. This comic opera by Benjamin Britten was the highlight of the festival up to now.

Albert Herring, written in 1947, is the second of Britten's comic operas. Based on a Maupassant short story, the libretto is clever examination of the morals of an English hamlet. Lady Billows, an upholder of purity, is a believer in the May Queen tradition. When no suitable (ie chaste) woman can be found, she and her citizen's committee decide to crown Albert Herring King of the May. Herring is a greengrocer's boy tied to his mother's apron strings. The breaking of these ties and the shortness of King Alfred's reign form the last half of the opera.

Britten undoubtedly is England's greatest composer. The scoring ranges from the complexity of the Threnody, where nine characters all sing different lines, to the simplicity of the children's catch at the beginning of Act One. Besides giving the individual orchestral instruments solo accompanying motifs the composer uses cross rhythms, considerable interplay, and some special effects, usually percussive. The orchestra, almost all students, was really fine. Garnet Brooks excelled in the title role.

Dean Boyd Neel conducted the Conservatory Orchestra last night. Varsity hacks have early deadlines so the concert must be prematurely judged on the basis of Wednesday's final rehearsal. The program is certainly the most varied of the festival.

Both the Bartok Rhapsody for Piano and Orchestra (Opus 1), and the Debussy Rhapsody for Clarinet and Orchestra have virtuosic solo parts but limited orchestral work. Much of the technique of the Bartok is Lisztian but it has traces of the rhythms of Bartok's later work. Pianist Averill Piers and clarinetist Brian Barley both excel. Wilson Swift (III Mus) conducts the Brahms' Academic Festival Overture with a real awareness for detail.

Dr. Richard Johnston's Symphony is both musically superior to and more difficult than Monday's choral symphonies. It is dominated by driving rhythms. Tension underlies the whole piece even in the happy mood of the finale. The Elgar Variations on an Original Theme is probably the best composition of English music from Purcell to World War I.

If this week's festival does nothing more than show off a few fine young musicians, the building has proven itself a centre for important musical studies. The past year has already proven its communal cultural value. Thus, as Dr. Bissell says, its double purpose is proclaimed.

BOOKS

Murder and Toronto

by SUE LYONS

THE WEIRD WORLD OF WES BEATTIE. John Norman Harris. Macmillan, 216 pp. $ 4.95.

Although the bright young lawyer-hero of Harris's novel finally proves just how normal Wes Beattie's world really is, he makes Harris's world look slightly askew. This world is an amalgam of Earle Stanley Gardner, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and the Saturday Evening Post, mixed with a good strong dose of Torontonians respectability, and the result is a book which could have been a better comedy if it had been a worse mystery.

Wes Beattie is the unfortunate product of a disrupted childhood: whittled away by his domineering grandmother, he is weak, penniless and a congenital liar at the age of twenty-one. He is accused of petty theft and convicted; he claims he was framed. Then the game gets more serious; for good old Uncle Edgar is murdered, Wes's fingerprints are on the scene, and a second frame-up claim is dismissed as a further development of Wes's mental imbalance. Despite the determined efforts of Sidney Grant, boy hero, the plot thickens almost beyond help, what with uncles and gangsters and disputed legacies. One of the main problems is an over-abundance of characters — it's pretty obvious from the beginning who the villain is; the crime is indisputable; the only thing missing is a motive, and by the time it's established, it hardly seems worth the effort. And it certainly didn't need to take all those people.

However, if the quantity of characters is reason for objection, the quality — of some of them, at any rate — is one of the more promising features of Harris's writing. Sidney Grant and Wes's sister June have a distinctly Post-dated look about them, but Wes is stupid enough to be for real, and Snake Rivers is an honest-to-goodness gem of a crook. Out on slightly nefarious lark with Sidney, Snake is later picked up by the police for not being locatable at the time of a local job. "Ge, it all worked out perfect," Snake said. "The cops were watchin' me so close they forgot about certain other characters. I hear they made a real good haul."

Harris has a slapdash sort of humour that livens up the sometimes tedious exposition of the plot. Some of it stems from an occasional poke at the Rosedale Establishment: grand old Mrs. Beattie, who is not A Tome unless it's a Nurgent matter, according to the twittery maid at the door; the Jag that takes the ladies to morning devotions every Sunday; the simply scandalous evening papers. The introduction of numerous details of local colour — the hors d'oeuvres at La Chaumiere, the Grant Macdonald portrait — may be an attempt to inject a little glamour into the old city, but Harris seems to realize from the start that it's pretty hard to do; as June says at the end, referring to the dramatic whisper of her dying grandfather; "Minerva! What's Minerva doing?"; "Toronto is the only town on earth where a man could be unfaithful to his wife with a mining stock."

And speaking of local colour, guess who is immortalized forever on page 99? "He wanted to know all about you, how tall, how old. I told him older than Bruce Kidd and shorter than Goose Tatum." We always knew Goose would make the big time.

On the whole, then, Harris's book is more attractive when the exigencies of the plot let him slow down and allow the characters a little leeway. The clichés of the ending become particularly annoying — boy gets girl in the usual glib pulp-fiction manner, and a post-mortem dinner-party is held to allow Sidney to explain the brilliancy of his handling of the case. The court-room scene contains just the right number of complications and set-backs for the struggling young lawyer, who pulls out of them with just the right mixture of confusion and luck. Probably the clichés stick out more simply because there is enough originality of approach in the rest of the novel to make their appearance a disappointment. Perhaps Harris might try his hand at some sort of social comedy, if such a thing is possible in Toronto; as it is, The Weird World of Wes Beattie suffers somewhat from the same drawback that hampers the activities of its title character: it prefers credibility to truth, and just because all the pieces fit together doesn't mean that the story goes over.

Harold Town: master of oil

By PAUL RUSSELL

Harold Town has always been controversial. His painting 'Homage to Turner', in the Hart House permanent collection since 1962, is still the topic of very heated discussion on campus.

Mr. Town is best known in Canada for this type of wildly calligraphic and very heavily painted abstraction.

The abstraction and calligraphy remain in his latest work in oils; the heavy use of paint is gone. His large panels for the dining room and lounge at Toronto's new airport are the latest examples of his mastery in the medium of oil painting.

The drawing technique of Harold Town is perhaps less known. The retrospective exhibition of Town's Drawings now at the Jerrold Morris Gallery should confirm his position as one of the leading draughtsmen in Canada.

The drawings cover the period 1952 to 1962 and range through calligraphy, portraiture, caricature and abstraction. They have the intimacy and individuality which are characteristics of the art of drawing; they have the flair and arrogance which are pure Town.

In a series of portraits of Queen Elizabeth I, all of Tudor majesty and pomp is in the stroke of each line. Further detailing in the face is never necessary.

The Bacchante and Artist in his Studio studies, although excellent technically, do impress the viewer as perhaps too conscious of the graphics of Picasso. For those who have seen Picasso's Vollard Suite at the Art Gallery of Toronto, the influence will be apparent.

The latest series of drawings 'The Enigmas', was for this viewer, the most interesting part of the show. Here are several drawings in thin wash on softly coloured paper. They are parodies on life, caricatures of the modern situation expressed with wit and biting sarcasm. For instance, in one work, the naked 'Eternal Female' is taking careful aim with her bow and arrow at her helpless masculine prey who is quietly facing the viewer with a confident smile on his face and an apple on his head. He is completely oblivious to the fact that the arrow is aimed directly at his exposed genitalia.

Each work in this series has the same ordered confusion of myth and modernity with a wealth of social implications. In each drawing the zestful humour of the artist always overrides any bitterness which the satire might imply.

The Town Retrospective is the most stimulating show in Toronto this week.

The exhibition of De Nierville paintings now at the Dorothy Cameron Gallery maintain this imagination. They are dream-like studies of the landscape, surroundings and people of Fench Canada. Figures appear as blank-faced mannequins acting out situations in which they are emotionally not involved. They stare out at the spectator and invite his comment.

The imagination of the ## Queen's has radio station

By JOAN FERGUSON

Students at Queen's are fortunate to own and operate their own radio station, CFRC, one of the oldest in Canada.

It all began in October 1922 when a play by play description of a rugby game was broadcast over a transmitter built by a student. The following year the station was granted a commercial license for broadcasting. The establishment has expanded considerably since then.

New studios, control room, record library, offices, and reception room have been built. At present the staff has a rapidly increasing library of 6500 records to work with. Now CFRC has regular FM and AM listening 52 weekends a year, with reduced hours during examinations and at times when the university is not in full session.

The station does no commercial broadcasting. A volunteer staff of 150 broadcasters and operators is provided by the CFRC Student Radio Club. The station also serves as a valuable laboratory for electrical engineering students who are frequently called upon to build equipment.

After passing a test in announcing or broadcasting, any student may take an active part in the work of the station. Once assigned a show, the member has a week to prepare for it. Experienced members can rustle up a show very quickly.

Programming includes classical and popular music, talent, hootenannies, French poetry, and an excellent lecture series, 'Perspective '64'. A show called "Invitation" offers scope for creative and imaginative talent. One of its most successful events has been a Children's Hour, featuring songs by and for children. CFRC has no hit parade shows.

CFRC is aimed at promoting educational radio listening. It does nothing to undermine the campus newspaper, a fear expressed by members of the Canadian University Press two years ago.

Quebec: a Canadian Cuba

COPYRIGHT 1964 by THE MODERATOR EXCLUSIVE TO THE CANADIAN UNIVERSITY PRESS
PART 3

The position of the young generation in French Canadian universities is best exemplified by their new leader, Bernard Landry, president of the newly-formed Union of Quebec Students. Landry is an outspoken advocate of Separatism: "We are fifty years behind on every subject you can imagine," he says. "Yet Ottawa (the federal government) will not recognize the existence of an underdeveloped region. They will never discriminate in favor of French-Canada, as they will have to do in the next ten years. So we must do this by ourselves, and this means political separatism."

Landry touches on the heart of the matter: The English-Canadians will not recognize French-Canada and the French-Canadian problem as unique. Furthermore, the chances of their coming to recognize what needs to be done are slim. Numerous and lofty barriers stand in the way: separate schools, separate cultures, separate societies, and, above all, separate religions destroy communications between the two sides and militate against mutual understanding.

The University of Ottawa illustrates the situation perfectly: it is an immense no-man's land in which French confront English daily—52 per cent of the enrolment is French-Canadian, 48 per cent English. There, student after student admits that he simply cannot understand the other side's point of view, just as the two observers of the demonstration in front of the new culture centre could not see the same event from the same angle.

Despite such seemingly insurmountable difficulties, a road other than immediate separatism must be taken. The gradualist views of Gabriel Gason provide a view of separatism which appears to have some merit. The hard facts are that it would be almost impossible for Quebec to go it alone right now: it has nowhere near enough French-speaking teachers, administrators, or businessmen to become "maitre chez nous" (a Separatist battle cry).

Ten-province Canada at present resembles a cat working on its ninth life. The Royal Commission is plugging away; Ottawa is planning concessions on taxation powers which will bring Quebec more revenue. If these measures, and recommendations made by the commission, go far enough soon enough biculturalism may yet be a possibility. But if they don't separatism will be tried whether it can work or not. Success or failure lies within the next two years at most.

Even success may well be temporary. In twenty years, Quebec will have her own educated managerial class. Even if economic quality is soon achieved, the cultural split still remains to be solved. Unless mutual understanding between the cultures grows up on the heels of an industrial and educational revolution, a political revolution may well take place, severing Quebec from the rest of the Confederation once and for all.

Meanwhile young French-Canadians talk of revolt and their Anglo-Saxon peers speak, here and there, of concessions. The pieces that follow present the views of leaders who are influential within various segments of Canadian society—a student, a novelist, and actor, and a man of letters. Their views indicate in some measures how far the spirit of revolt has gone and how much Canada must concede to Quebec in order to prevent the sudden birth of A CANADIAN CUBA.

Canada is worth the price of tolerance

By JIM LAXER
Varsity Features Editor

On Wednesday students of Sir George Williams University highlighted their proclaimed "bicultural week" by driving their guest speaker, Guy Pouliot, out of a rear door of the university.

Mr. Pouliot, leader of Le Rassemblement pour l'Indépendance Nationale, had just addressed the students on the principles of separatism. Throughout his speech Mr. Pouliot was heckled and insulted with cries of "speak English."

Later, students of the English-speaking Montreal university cheered heartily as a fleur-de-lis flag (the official emblem of Quebec) was torn and thrown into the street.

Such incidents on the part of English-speaking Quebecers have been too common in the past year. One can recall the plight of Marcel Chaput, the dean of all separatists, before a similar audience a few months ago.

The treatment of French-Canadian nationalist leaders by English-speaking audiences has been a forgotten aspect of the current Confederation hassle.

English-Canadians seem much more prone to remember slights to the Union Jack or allegations that the Queen is not welcome in Quebec.

COMMENT

The latest pious utterance in this tradition has come from Conservative PM Nicholas Mandziuk. He was enraged at Mr. Yvon Turcot's contention on the CBC program Viewpoint that "If I were in a position to decide whether the Queen should or should not come to Quebec City, I would answer no. Not so much because of separatists' protestations, but mainly because, in the circumstances, it is a fact—and on this I do not comment—that she is not welcome."

Mandziuk stated in the Commons that he wished to "prevent the further wanton expression of such outrageous and disloyal utterances through the medium of the publicly-owned CBC."

In this whole controversy English Canadians have not stopped to examine the possibility that the Queen may not be welcome in Quebec. Has it ever crossed their minds that if this is so the blame will rest with a century of their own intolerance and not with either the French-Canadians or the Queen?

The Quebec Conference that the Queen's trip is meant to commemorate was held in Quebec City 100 years ago. If the centennial of the birth of this country is to sound its death knell, the responsibility will lie with those who, like the Sir George Williams Students, have not yet learned that Canada is worth the price of tolerance.

Town (contd.)

'Flight of Icarus' is present here, but the humour is gone. Perhaps this is due, at the Cameron Gallery, to a content which is very much a part of everyday life and far from the mythological. The figures which stare out at us in the exhibition are stilly, clumsy and basically ugly human beings. They are far from cute. De Niverville's figures have no human dignity. In the portrayal of mythology, this produces a humorous image, in the portrayal of contemporary life it is pathetic.

Mr. De Niverville has just been awarded a Canada Council Senior Arts Fellowship. He leaves shortly for two years of painting in Europe.

UBC players find that books stayed put while they carried Canada's colors

This is the time of year when most university athletes close their lockers and open their books in an attempt to be successful at examinations.

But the members of the 1964 Canadian Olympic Hockey team, which operated from University of British Columbia, are not in the position to make a stretch drive attempt at passing.

A recent survey showed seven of the player-students have dropped out of UBC or are about to drop out for the balance of their terms and nine others will get less than a half year's credit for the current academic year.

UBC was the training grounds for the experiment which sent an amateur team of students to represent Canada at the Winter Olympics in Innsbruck, Austria.

The players lost contact with the academic world during a 30-game exhibition schedule in Canada, 10 games in Europe, the Olympic competition and a post-Olympic exhibition schedule in Europe.

Art Potter, president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, sympathizes with the students.

"We are keenly aware of the scholastic penalty the boys paid," said Potter, "and are all proud of them for paying it without complaint. We know they'll all make the grades next year that representing Canada cost them this year."

Reverend David Bauer, who suggested, assembled and coached the team, Mr. Potter and the faculty heads of UBC are working to rectify the matter so future amateurs who represent Canada will not have to sacrifice a year at university.

What's going on here?

Carabins take Blues place

Reversing decisions about the national college hockey tournament to be played in Kingston seems to be the latest craze.

First, Varsity Blues, Senior Intercollegiate League champions, weren't going to the tournament. Then they were going. Then the deal was off again.

First, the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association decided that should its championship teams decide not to participate in either the hockey or basketball national finals, second-place teams would not be sent as substitutes.

Now, the Executive Council of the OQAA has reversed this decision. What this means is that Montreal Carabins, second-place finishers behind Blues, will play at Kingston, March 13 and 14.

Other teams competing will be Western champions Alberta and Maritime champs Nova Brunswick. The Ottawa—St. Lawrence winner has not yet been decided.

Athletic Directorate Elections 1964 - 1965

The Electoral Meeting of the University of Toronto Athletic Association to elect representatives to the Athletic Directorate for 1964-65 will be held on Monday, March 9th at 4.45 p.m. sharp, in the Debates Room, Hart House (south side, upstairs).

Under the Constitution of the Athletic Association (Article VIII), all Athletic Club Executives and College and Faculty Athletic Associations are entitled to send representatives to this meeting. These representatives must be male undergraduates of the University of Toronto or one of the affiliated colleges, who are proceeding to a degree, are in actual attendance upon lectures, and who have paid the annual fee required (By-law 1). The Club Executives and Athletic Associations are being notified to meet on an early date, appoint their representatives and give them their credentials for the electoral meeting.

PROCEDURE FOR NOMINATION

A student to be elected to the Directorate must, at the time of his nomination, be in the second or higher year of his course, at the University, but not in his final year. The nominations must be in writing on the form provided for the purposes, signed by two male undergraduate members of the Athletic Association, in good standing, and filed with Secretary of the Athletic Association not later than Thursday, March 5th. The nomination form may be obtained at the Athletic Office.

J. P. LOOSEMORE
Secretary, Athletic Directorate

WHEN THE ONTARIO-QUEBEC Athletic Association expanded its hockey league to seven teams, it was one of the best moves ever made by the Senior Intercollegiate emperors. Both players and spectators were relieved of the monotony of seeing the same three opponents throughout the season.

But now, there are indications that some narrowminded OQAA athletic directors aren't satisfied with success and are prepared to sacrifice a lucrative operation for a bush-league setup.

Last week at Hart House, the OQAA athletic directors decided to accept Western Mustangs into the Senior Intercollegiate League for next season. Since Ontario Agricultural College had previously been admitted, the league will now be comprised of nine teams.

But eight opponents for each team instead of the former six means more travel, and some of our OQAA brethren are allergic to any thought of increased expenses. The three most Eastern teams, McGill, Laval and Montreal, and OAC in the West protested against a full home-and-home schedule because their teams would be required to make three trips to the opposite end of the league.

McMaster and Queen's also objected to the additional travel, although not as vehemently as the others. Only athletic directors Warren Stevens of Varsity and John Metras of Western were prepared to go along with a full 16-game home-and-home schedule.

As a result, a tentative plan was entertained that carries all the earmarks of bush league. If this plan is accepted formally, the league will be divided into three groups, Montreal, McGill and Laval in one; Toronto, Queen's and McMaster in the second; and Western, Waterloo and OAC in the third. Each team will play home-and-home series with each of the other two teams in its "group" and one game against each of the other six squads.

The defects of this system are obvious. Since all team records will be combined into one standing, the teams playing in more challenging "groups" will be at a great disadvantage. Meanwhile, a team with weaker opponents could have little trouble cleaning up. One consolation is allowed (if it can be considered a consolation). The top four teams play off for the Queen's Cup.

THE OBJECTIONS TO A complete schedule are based on one consideration—money. Some universities are just not willing to spend a few extra dollars to produce a better product. They would much prefer to keep a few rubels in the kitty and operate a bush league. And when you examine scheduling, you can see that the difference between this half-assed schedule and a complete one is not more than an insignificant number of dollars.

When OAC was admitted to the league last year, a schedule for 1964-65 was drawn up and accepted by all teams. Under this schedule, the four Eastern teams and the four Western teams were each required to make three trips to their opposite extremity. For example, an Eastern team would play OAC and Waterloo on one trip, Toronto and McMaster on another and Queen's on the final jaunt.

With the addition of Western to the league, OAC and Western would be paired for one trip, McMaster and Waterloo for another and Queen's and Toronto for the third. It's plain as day that this arrangement would only give the eastern teams one additional expense—the cost of a bus ride from Kingston to Toronto.

As for the Western teams, the addition of UWO also adds only one expenditure—the cost of transportation from Toronto, Guelph or Waterloo to London.

So, in dollars and cents the objections to a complete schedule make no sense whatsoever. The athletic directors had already accepted a full schedule with OAC included, but as soon as Western entered the picture most of them balked at the whole thing.

Stevens is especially unhappy about the proposed arrangement. "This year we had the best schedule ever and now they want to throw it in the ash can for a few hundred dollars," said Stevens.

"As far as I'm concerned, if teams want to join the big league, they've got to go along. If they can't afford it then they shouldn't be in this league."

Stevens' argument is logical. If college athletics are going to expand, the newer and smaller universities have to come up to the level of the established ones. Progress will never be made by reducing a successful operation just to suit a newcomer that wants to go big-time in name but not attitude.

When the directors meet again in Montreal, March 20, Stevens will hold the key. He was outvoted overwhelmingly by his counterparts last week but now he must convince them they will be making a big mistake if they go ahead with the bush-league plan. If Stevens feels as strongly about the issue as he implies, he should not be satisfied with anything but a full schedule.

PHE takes 3-goal (or is it 2-goal?) lead in series

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

PHE I won the first game of the two-game, total-goals semi-final for the Jennings Cup yesterday, taking a stubborn crew from Law, 5-2. Due to a dispute as to whether one Phys Ed goal was scored after the final bell, the margin may be reduced to 4-2, pending the timer's report.

Don Arthurs and Hughie Lynn each potted a pair for the winners and Andy Szandner had one. Charles Macnab and Mike Wallace counted for the lawyers, who battled for two periods on even terms with the highly touted PHE team.

Victoria I, defending champion, and Medicine A will meet in the other semi-final, starting today at 12:30 p.m.

Vic I defeated Vic II by the narrow margin of 3-2 in their quarter-final. Don Wilson, Mike Jones and Stu Grasham counted for the winners, Tom Truesdale and Steve Brown blinked the red light for the seconds.

Thirteen players shared a like number of goals as Meds A took Pharmacy A, 7-6. Bob Bear, Willie Cawell, Bob Coote, Pete Rueffer, Eric Lenczner, Phil Loftus and Don Stemp all scored for the doctors. Orest Seychuk, Jim Mann, John Bird, Bob Ralph, Dave Hannay and Ron Lee potted the Pharmacy goals, three of which came in the final minute of play.

SPS I, Vic V and UC Utica Clubs have advanced to the semi-finals of intermediate hockey competition along with defending champion, Vic IV.

SPS I trounced Trinity E, 10-1 yesterday. Gary Ricker led the rout with three goals, Bruce Burgess added a pair. Ed Shelley broke the goose-egg for Trinity.

Vic V eked out a narrow 5-4 decision over SPS VI. Gary Donald counted two for Vic, Don Beaton, Gary Jarvis, and Eric Watts added singletons. "Howe" scored a pair for the losers, while Bill Brockington and Tom Lobel had one each.

Utica Clubs upset St. Mike's C, 4-0. Barry Scruton led the terrors from the Embassy with a hat trick, Barrie Dudley added one. Scruton's final counter came on a penalty shot.

BASKETBALL

Favored St. Mike's A and PHE I have easily advanced to the semi-finals of competition for the Sifton Cup, emblematic of the interfaculty basketball championship.

PHE I, winner of Group I, trounced Jr. Skule, which had finished third in Group II, 73-32. Art Bennett and Jim Holowachuk paced the winners with 14 and 12 points respectively. Riivo Ilves was high in the game, hooping 17 for the engineers.

St. Mike's A, second in Group I, took UC II, runner-up in Group II, 76-41. Joe Sol-tis and Tony MacGinnis each hooped 11 for the Irish, whose scoring was well spread out among a number of players. Frank Dougherty added 10. Gil Schneider of the Redmen was high man with 14 and Gerry Wiseberg added nine.

Six Blues selected, 3 on first team

By RICK KOLLINS
Varsity Sports Editor

The first time Steve Monteith played in a Senior Intercollegiate hockey game his tremendous ability was recognized. But if there were any observers who didn't believe Steve was the best right winger in the league, they're changed their minds by now.

Monteith was a unanimous choice for the right wing spot in The Varsity's third annual hockey all-star poll. It was the third time in his three seasons Monteith has been chosen by sports writers and coaches at the league's universities as the all-star right winger.

Varsity Blues' strength in the league this season was reflected by the results of the poll. The Queen's Cup champions placed three players on the first team and three more on the second to top half of the 12 spots available. Ian Sinclair was first choice among defencemen, rookie Hank Monteith was chosen as first team left winger, and defencemen Peter Speyer, Bob Awrey and centre Sonny Osborne made the runner-up squad.

Other members of the first team are goaltender Ken Walters of McGill, defenceman Jean-Jacques Granger of Montreal and centre Bobby Apps of McMaster. Selected for the second team were goaltender Maurice Grenier of Laval, right winger Jean Cusson of Montreal and left winger Johnny Taylor of McGill.

Steve Monteith polled 10 first-place votes for a perfect score of 50 points, based on 5-3-1 for first, second and third choices. Monteith, who won the league scoring title last season, finished third this year.

Apps received second-highest number of points in the balloting, 46, to dethrone Blues' Osborne as all-star centre.

Grenier also dropped from last year's first team to the second squad while five players, who were still eligible, failed to retain positions of last year. Blues Stu McNeil and Ward Passi, all-star defenceman and left winger respectively last year, missed most of this season because of injuries.

The great improvement in Varsity's defence this season can be seen in the all-star results. Three of the four defencemen on both teams are Blues. Sinclair, an Eastern Division all-star two years ago, was overwhelming choice of the selectors while the runners-up were far behind.

Walters, Granger, Apps and Hank Monteith made the first team in their rookie seasons. Walters allowed only three goals against per game for fourth-place McGill, Granger helped Montreal to a second-place finish and Hank Monteith and Apps finished second and fourth respectively in league scoring.

Most obvious omission from either team is centre Gilles Lefort of Montreal, who won the scoring crown with 31 points. Apps, Osborne and Don Mervyn of Waterloo all received more votes than Lefort.

Besides the four newcomers on the first team there were three players who made the second team for the first time, Awrey, Speyer and Taylor. Awrey and Speyer are former forwards who only converted to defence last year and Taylor was playing his first season in the league.

Lancer power shows up in all-star teams

By PAUL HENDERSON

Windsor University Lancers, Senior Intercollegiate basketball champions for the second consecutive year, dominate the 1963-64 all-star teams announced today.

Lancers placed three players, guard Bob Horvath and forwards Joe Green and Bernie Friesmuth, on the first all-star team in the second annual poll conducted by the Varsity.

The other two players on the select quintet, chosen by coaches and sportswriters connected with the league, are guard Dave West of Varsity and centre Jerry Raphael of Waterloo.

Members of the second team are guards Tom Williamson of Western and Doug Evans of Queen's, centre Ed Bordas of Varsity and forwards Larry Ferguson of Queen's and Barry Mitchelson of Western.

Horvath received 25 of a possible 50 points on a 5-3-1 basis for first, second and third-place selections to lead the Windsor contingent. In taking second position on the first squad, he upset Williamson, who gained the first-place nomination last season.

Horvath averaged 15.7 points per game this year and Williamson 21.7.

Green, rated second best forward last season, polled 34 points to gain the number one spot. The versatile veteran from Detroit edged Friesmuth, who jumped from a second-position of last year.

Although none of the three Lancers was in the top five in league scoring, they were the nucleus of the strong all-around Windsor squad which went undefeated in league play.

West, the league scoring champion, garnered the greatest number of votes. He received eight first-place nominations and was second on the other two ballots for 46 points, 21 more than Horvath.

When West finished second to Williamson last year, Williamson also polled 46 points.

Raphael retained his position as top centre. The 6'4" 205-pound sparkplug of the Waterloo attack received 10 first-place votes and 41 points overall, second only to West's total.

Bordas paced the members of the second team, finishing only 10 points behind Raphael with 31. E.J., who failed to gain recognition last year, stood fourth in points overall but was up against the second scorer in the league, Raphael, in the battle for the centre spot.

Since West, Horvath and Williamson received almost all votes for guard, Evans won the final second-team spot with only two points.

Ferguson and Mitchelson are both holdovers from last year's runner-up squad. Mitchelson, however, was the second-team centre last year and Ferguson played for Western. All players chosen this year except Bordas and Evans were on one of the two teams last season. Bordas replaced forward Don McRae and Evans guard Leo Girard. McRae and Girard graduated from McMaster.

McMaster Marauders and McGill Redmen were the only teams without representation on the all-star squads.

ETIENNE GILSON

Says all things imitate God

"Intellect is the highest flower of the universe," philosopher Etienne Gilson said Friday in the second of four lectures on Thomism.

"Thomas Aquinas teaches us that only an intellect can know God and therefore there must be intellectual creatures," he said.

But of all intellectual creatures only two share in the knowledge of God—man and the angels.

Thomas Aquinas thought all things on earth imitate God—even inanimate objects such as rocks. But man is above such things because through his intellect he can understand God, Dr. Gilson said.

He added that the end of every intellectual substance, even the lowest, is the knowledge of God. "Once informed by God of his supernatural end, man is able to reach the knowledge of God if the man's nature is unwilling.

But given the will and the object for which to work the knowledge of God is not impossible.

This is what Aquinas taught and Dr. Gilson warned theologians teaching this to view to be careful.

"It is widely disputed because it seems to give too much to the nature of man himself. Theologians teaching it, should not talk too loud," Dr. Gilson warned.

Those who criticize this view say that man should be able to know God or his creation would be in vain. "According to Aristotle this is impossible," Dr. Gilson said.

To such views Aquinas would say: "True, but God provides the natural incentive for religious knowledge," Dr. Gilson added.

Therefore, the views of Aristotle and Aquinas can be reconciled.

"These optimistic views are right at the core of Thomas Aquinas' thought," Dr. Gilson said.

Student, faculty, administration discontent is healthy, Bissell says

The present discontent involving students, faculty, administration and government is no cause for alarm, but is a healthy reaction to changing forces within the university, President Claude Bissell said Monday.

Speaking to 200 guests at the Students' Administrative Council's honor awards banquet in Hart House, Dr. Bissell said the conflicts are not localized.

He said administrators are concerned that government may encroach on university liberties; staff are worried that administrators may be exercising too much power insensitively; and students are concerned that they are not given enough consideration by either staff or administration.

Dr. Bissell attributed part of the problem to the conflict between the service and classical concepts of the university. While the service concept has produced such benefits as adult education and a broadening of curriculum, it can easily be twisted to result in mass-produced degrees, he explained.

If the university becomes concerned with churning out degree-bearing students, a strong hierarchical administration and a concentration on efficiency and economy might result, the president said.

This type of development is opposed to the classical idea of an integrated co-operative community which is equally concerned with transmitting and creating knowledge. The latter is expensive and not easily reduced to accounting methods, Dr. Bissell stated.

Dr. Bissell said the classical concept of the university must be adjusted, without giving in to the service concept.

Criticizing critics of the system, Dr. Bissell stressed three points: critics must aim at the right targets; they must be concerned with ideas rather than personalities; and they must be sure to get the facts right.

He said The Varsity had reported there was no recognition of the faculty association, while in fact the university provides facilities for the collection of the association's fees.

He said he also makes major representations to and discusses major policy decisions with the association.

Petition to support Co-op

A petition to the Ontario legislature asking for incorporation of the Campus Co-op's Rochdale College, including permissive tax exemptions, will be circulated next week.

Sponsored by leaders of several campus organizations, the petition will ask the legislature to grant college status to Rochdale and make allowance for the city to exempt the college from municipal taxes.

"It is inequitable for residential colleges, which are supported by public subscriptions to be given tax exemptions, while a totally student-supported residential college is denied this privilege.

Last week the private members bills committee passed a request for college status, but rejected by a narrow margin the clause which would allow the city to exempt the college from taxes. The bill will appear in the House in the near future.

Meanwhile, the Co-op is organizing its own lobby, which includes letters from the Co-op members, most of whom are from out of town, and co-operation with other Co-ops in the province.

Says non-repressive society impossible

A completely non-repressive society is not possible because of the extent to which man has progressed, Professor Herbert Marcuse of Brandeis University said here Monday.

Prof. Marcuse described a non-repressive society as one free of the use of man's resources for the satisfaction of his vital needs, with gradual reduction of the working day and the elimination of waste planned obsolescence and unproductive production. Social and political conditions bar the possibility of such a society, he said.

Freud teaches that as man progresses he suffers an increase in the destructive instinct. Thus, as man creates a better human life, the death instinct in him increases.

This necessitates intensified repression, said Prof. Marcuse, who spoke as part of the current lecture series. Prof. Marcuse then outlined the type of society he sees emerging.

He called it a "one dimensional society"—one in which the dimension opposition has been removed.

"All radically different thoughts or actions are absorbed or eliminated," he said.

"Since the start of the fascist era, there has been a defeat or absorption of radical opposition in all societies. This leads to apathy, isolation or conformity," he said.

SAC presidential candidates seeking council votes

The annual coffee-buying spree that climaxes with the election of the Students' Administrative Council president is in full swing.

Because the council president is elected by the popularly elected SAC representatives from the various colleges and faculties, candidates for the presidency are forced to seek support among the newly elected representatives.

This involves a quick round of introductions and lobbying between the time these people are elected and the final SAC meeting, which this year takes place next Wednesday.

There are two candidates for this year's presidential slot — John Roberts, a theologian from Wycliffe, and Dave Kilgour, a law student.

Roberts has spent a year on council as chairman of the university committee, and consequently knows the councillors who will be returning. Kilgour is in the position of being an unknown, and having to meet everyone for the first time.

Roberts, 28, is a graduate engineer from England who has been a social worker, an engineer and now a theology student.

Kilgour, 23, who graduated from the University of Manitoba in economics, spent two years on the U of M student council. He is a former sub-editor of The Manitoban, the U of M paper, and a former reporter with the Toronto Star.

Speaking later, SAC president Doug Ward said the university cannot be protected by a board or the government, but only by the co-operation of students, teachers and graduates.

Ward stressed that these persons must be involved with the university and its future. He said it is most important that students be concerned, particularly with such issues as academic freedom. If they do not become interested in the university, the alternative is a super-market university, "where a student comes to buy a parcel he can use in later years."

Dr. Bissell presented 22 students with the SAC honor award. They were: Charles Beer (IV UC), Allan Crosbie (IV Vic), Don Cunningham (IV Dents), Ken Drushka

(III UC), Robert Evans (IV UC), Audrey Gertsman (SGS), Harold Hall (IV Dents), Brian Hull (IV Trin), Frederick Kan (IV APSC), Mike Kisly (IV APSC), Rick Kollins (IV UC), Mary Main (III Trin), Brian McGrath (IV Meds), Mary Pat McMahon (III SMC), Don Munro (IV APSC), Leslie Mulholland (III UC), Lawrence Schafer (IV UC), Herbert Tanzer (IV Meds), Larry Ward (IV Vic), Paul Wilson (IV Trin), Raymond Wylie (IV UC), and Fred Zemans (III Law).

This is not the last Varsity of the year. Sorry, but we publish next Friday too.

MRA has solution to all problems

by ANDREW SZENDE

The solution to Quebec's and Canada's problems can be solved simply by adopting a new set of principles, a South American group told Torontonians this week.

Earlier they suggested the same thing to Cyprus and the Congo.
All it takes is changing human nature to the roots.

They are part of a world-wide movement called Moral Re-Armament and were here to present a play called El Condor which is supposed to dramatize what they mean.

The play presents a picture of a South-American strong-man who uses American foreign aid to further his already vast fortune.

On the side he also has several mistresses and a son who is part of a Communist student group.

The student group to which the son belongs is being trained by a Cuban Communist infiltrator who is presumably preparing the students for a Castro-type revolution.

Here the plot takes a sudden but entirely predictable turn, when it is announced that a Japanese-produced Moral Re-Armament film is about to be shown in the country.

Although everyone is dead set against it, by pure accident, of course, the sinful strong-man and some of the Communist kids go to see this movie.

From here the denouement takes on miraculous and colossal proportions.

The strong-man confesses all his sins to his wife, his son, the American Ambassador, and the Communists, and he immediately resigns from the American aid committee, gives up his mistresses, and the audience is told that now he is a changed man.

His son is next to announce that he is changing. The other students soon follow suit.

What are they changing to?

It's as simple as one, two, three, four.

They are going to adopt the principles of Moral Re-Armament, namely, absolute honesty, absolute purity, absolute unselfishness, and absolute love.

And that, friends, is the answer to all the problems of the world; all it involves is for the leaders of the world to change overnight and we no longer shall have anything to worry about.

The play itself, though unmistakably an amateur and propaganda production, was definitely above most high-school standards.

Since many of the members of the cast speak little or no English, they used an ingenious method of taping the entire dialogue in English, and playing it back to coincide with the actions and mouthing of the actors.

The dubbing was well done and the sound system worked entirely satisfactorily.

El Condor (which means "the eagle" that lives in the Andes mountains) came to Toronto after playing for 11 months in Italy, a few performances in other parts of Europe, and four months in Quebec.

The performers come from some 15 countries ranging from Nigeria to Peru.

At the end of the performance several members of the group were introduced who told the audience how they changed.

These included some Canadians, including one Miss Cathy Young, who was introduced as the "niece of Prime Minister Pearson," and one Mr. Fleming who is the great-grandson of a former Toronto mayor.

In a dramatic confession a former South American general admitted that even though he had never been a decadent capitalist or a subversive Communist, nevertheless, he realized that he needed to reform and now he is completely happy about touring the world and telling everybody how he sacrificed his life to save the world from itself.

About two years ago MRA issued an invitation to the editors of Canadian university papers, offering free transportation to Rio de Janeiro where an MRA conference was held.

But on the advice of NFCU most of them did not go, and of the two who did, one wanted to leave before the end of the conference because he did not like what he was hearing. (He encountered some difficulty in getting his fare paid back to Canada.)

MRA believes in a free press, as their advertisements proclaim, but they are against "newspaper men who abuse their liberty by distorting or suppressing news of Moral Re-Armament."

They claim that they have no religious affiliations and yet they talk about "God's standards" and "Christ as personal friend and Saviour," which would make it just a bit difficult for atheists, agnostics and Jews to support the movement actively.

One gripping thing about them is their passionate enthusiasm for such an obviously idealistic utopian world which they believe they are helping to bring about.

Interfac quiz finals on today

Quiz tournament finals are being held today in the West Hall of University College at 4 p.m. between Medicine and Law. Engineering and Trinity are the two contestants in the consolation finals.

"The success of this tournament will go far in determining the formation of the all-Canada tourney for next year," said Don Snider (II PreMeds), originator of the tournament.

"The newspapers and television have been invited to the finals," he said. "We are hoping that some major company will sponsor a weekend tournament here in Toronto where other teams could meet our team. Our tournament would have to be held in the first term," he said.

"The All-Canada tournament could be held on some mid-term weekend or during the Christmas holidays."

As for this tournament's finals, Doug Ward, president of the Students' Administrative Council, will present the trophy to the winners.

A TUG OF THE BRIEFS

LONDON, Ont. (Special) Westminster College has been given complete municipal tax exemption because it is not considered a "boarding house". The exemption was given by the private committee in the Legislature Feb. 14. The same committee rejected a similar move by Toronto's Campus Co-Op, now incorporated under the name of Rochdale College. The bursar of Westminster College, Neil A. Campbell, said in reply to a recent newspaper report about the exemption that he did not like the reference to the college as being a boarding house. "We consider ourselves a part of the university community," he said.

Students unsure about Quebec

What do the non-English and non-French residents of Canada think about Quebec's demands and threats of separatism?

A French student from France said that probably there is some slight discrimination against French-Canadians, but that it is natural when there are more groups than one.

A Latvian student in III Forestry said lack of commercial education, reluctance to leave Quebec and lack of drive were the three main reasons for the paucity of French-Canadians in high administrative positions.

A Hungarian said lack of education is a drawback that all face when they seek good jobs.

An African political science student believes the Quebec secessionists are not justified in claiming either nation status or special privileges, because they are not a majority.

The French-Canadians will probably maintain their present level of culture for a long time to come, without any changes, for they are clustered in Quebec, and this provides a strong core. This is the opinion of a German sociology student.

A French student in Law said a union of all cultures in Canada would result in an Irish stew—another U.S. melting pot. He said the idea was not new—Lord Durham suggested it.

AVR threatened

The All Varsity Revue might not be produced next year if it cannot be scheduled for the fall term.

Don Acaster (IV Arch), a member of the AVR committee, attributed the low attendance of 'A Thurber Carnival', this year's AVR endeavor, mainly to the time of year.

But it is hoped the show will still be produced in Hart House, despite their heavy fall schedule.

Intensive committee work will take place this summer to reach a final decision as whether the show will go on next year, Acaster said.

He attributed the low attendance of 'A Thurber Carnival' to the fact that "a lot of people didn't connect James Thurber with the show and some of them had never even heard of James Thurber."

Chansonnier here tomorrow

Even Time Magazine has noticed that Gilles Vigneault will be appearing at Hart House tomorrow. The magazine calls him "the most talented of the new-wave folk singers in French Canada."

The Star called him "the most celebrated chansonnier, the most beloved of the people and the most feared by the clergy and conservatives in Quebec."

But U of T students have bought only about half the tickets for the show.

Caput fines parkers

Seven university students were fined $50 each by the Caput for "violating the parking regulations of the university", the Registrar's office announced this week.

The students allegedly forged official stickers that would allow them to park on campus lots, but the university has released no details. The names of the students are not available.

Practise legal discrimination

By MELVYN PELT

The public school system in Ontario is exempt from the Ontario Human Rights Code passed in 1961.

Several students who have applied for jobs in the system have complained that they were given application forms which asked for the person's religious affiliation.

One secondary school representative told a prospective teacher that his school board asked the question to prevent atheists from being hired.

The board of education for the city of Hamilton asks for "religious denomination" on the front of the form. On the back side the applicant is told that if appointed he must submit "a character reference from a clergyman."

The Human Rights Code prevents private employers, trade unions and municipalities from asking questions concerning religion, nationality and colour.

However s. 4(4)c of the code specifically excludes "religious, philanthropic, educational, fraternal or social organizations" that are not operated for "private profit."

A. Alan Borovoy, director of the Ontario Labor Council for Human Rights, commented there is "no more reason why a public school should be exempted than a municipality or a private employer."

Mr. Borovoy continued that the Ontario Labor Council for Human Rights intends to send a brief to the Ontario government "later this year" to ask that the exemptions be discontinued.

No fees hike?

The comptroller of the University of Toronto declined to comment last night on whether there will be an increase in tuition fees next year.

G. L. Court said he could not say officially whether a raise is being planned.

A spokesman in the chief accountant's office said yesterday Mrs. I. McCormick, the head of the fees department had indicated earlier that she did not think that there would be an increase.

A few weeks ago University of Waterloo president J. G. Hagey told The Varsity in an interview that there will likely be an across-the-board fee increase at Ontario Universities because the government's aid is some $40,000,000 short of what is needed.

It is traditional for Varsity editors to head their final editorial with a 30, the time-honored symbol for the end. But this year we somehow can't bring ourselves to write 30, because we feel that rather than reaching the end of anything, we are really only seeing the beginning of many things.

What has the year been for us?

Well, it has been the March for Canada, the change in the CUCND from a protest body to a positive action group, the formation and subsequent achievements of the Canadian/Canadian Committee, the continued negotiations with Simcoe Hall for student autonomy, and on and on . . .

Why do we believe these things are so important? In themselves they aren't. But they indicate an increased concern in students for the world that surrounds them. We think this is important, because it has been so sadly lacking in the last few years.

To us, all these happenings appear as manifestations of an English-Canadian awakening of the type which occurred in French Canada two years ago. We may be wrong, but we hope not.

Over the past few years we have come to see (with help from C. B. Macpherson) that our society is at odds with its morality. Some of the things that have happened this year make us believe that we are getting back on the right track — where we conduct our affairs according to the principles in which we believe.

And we wonder what we have accomplished as journalists. We are very much aware of what we didn't do, the mistakes we made and the things we would like to have done — but we believe that we too have made a beginning.

This has been a year of foundation building; a year of soul-searching that established in a few areas a feeling of promise for the future.

We believe that the next few years will be the most exciting in which a man could wish to live — but we also believe that if it isn't lived in the right way the final result could be disastrous.

One of the biggest things we have learned since September is that we don't have the answer to that right way. But we have had, and still have, a lot of questions. If The Varsity accomplished anything this year it was to raise a few of these questions.

So we don't feel particularly glad that this year is over with, but neither do we feel sad or nostalgic. Rather, on the basis of what we have seen, we anticipate what is to come.

One of the most discouraging aspects of watching the world go by has been the observance of a fatalistic and pessimistic attitude in some of the people we encounter. These are the persons who are so hell-bent on securing themselves a safe niche in the future that they neglect to take what comes and do not participate in life.

Again, we haven't any pat answers, but can only feel sorry for these persons. Our own answer is that we find so much to do that we haven't time to worry about a secure future.

So, today we aren't packing up our typewriters, locking the door and bidding everyone sentimental farewells. We'll be back, because we think there are going to be some fairly exciting things happening. What has been accomplished this year will be built upon and expanded. We want to be part of it.

That's why, instead of heading this editorial with a 30, we head it with the symbol of a beginning — the first thing an editor writes when he sits down at his typewriter.

Letters to the Editor

Defends Lit

I was unimpressed by the factual content in the letter by Miss Leikin that appeared in your paper on Wednesday, Mar. 4. What did impress me, however, was the vivid imagination of the author. Although Miss Leikin has established a remarkable scene complete with stage directions it fails to ring true. In the first place, the "coup" that she supposedly saw being organized never occurred. Rather it was I who encouraged at least two of these four to contest positions. I encouraged them as I encouraged countless others because I wanted to see a campaign waged for all positions. I had no favorites, but rather a sincere desire to see interest stirred in the college by a big election. Of the other two positions, one had decided to run and had told me so at least three weeks before nominations were opened. The four candidates did not, at any time, know that "getting on the Lit. could prove easy". Ask any of the twenty-four defeated candidates if getting on the Lit. proved easy.

In the second place, I question Miss Leikin's logic. She seems to assume that acclaimed members of the Lit. have shown little interest in Lit. affairs. This is ridiculous. Not only have the candidates shown a previous interest but a quick glance at the roster of this year's executive shows that many of those who had previously shown no avid interest in the Society's affairs proved to be the most active members of the executive in the past year. In any case, the fact that these candidates did run for positions indicates that they are interested. One cannot fault them, but rather the students who refused to run. It is always easier to complain than to do something about your grievance.

I turn finally to consider the so-called clannishness of the Lit. The Lit. can in no way be called a self-perpetuating clique. The variety of its members surely indicates that. It is not fair to label four friends as a clan; otherwise every organization in the world could be, to some extent, considered a clan.

I heartily disagree with Miss Leikin's comments, but give her credit for her nerve. I am sorry that she did not run for any Lit. position in past years. But at least it was not a total loss—she still arranged to have her name placed in The Varsity, and she did it the easy way.

Defends Quebec schools

As a graduate of the much-maligned Quebec Catholic school system, I would like to make a few observations on the speech of Doug Ward ("Quebec Intellectuals Leaving Church") reported in The Varsity Mon. Mar. 2. First: Ward states that "French textbooks are the worst in the world". I assume he has never paused to glance at a few old Ontario School Readers; you know, the ones that start with "Rule, Britannia" and end with "England, My England" and feature Kipling's pleas for the civilizing of the "lesser breeds" in Asia and Africa. Would I be presumptuous to add Quebec?

I spent two and half years in Quebec schools. During that time, I remember noticing that the majority of the text-books were direct imports from the United States. The only exceptions were in spelling and geography; both of those came from Ontario.

Second: Ward complains about "one rosary plus two rosaries etc." He has a legitimate complaint here but he fails to precisely pin it down. If the school is, as a great many are, multi-religious, then Ward is justified: such insidious methods of indoctrination have no place in any public school. However, if the school is entirely Catholic, and many are, then Ward has strayed beyond his depth. He has no business telling Catholics how to teach Catholicism to Catholic children just as I have no business telling Ward how to teach United Church Sunday School.

Moreover, Ward is exaggerating greatly in what he did say. I was never taught that "one rosary plus one rosary makes two" either during religion or arithmetic classes; I have never encountered anyone who was. I'm afraid that the old cliché about "one Anglican plus one Anglican makes two heretics" is just that—a shopworn cliché.

Third: Ward leaves the impression that the Catholic schools in Quebec are obsessed with the teaching of religion. This, I suggest, is simply not true. I found that in Quebec, the teaching of religion is methodical and complete but not overly biased. When I moved to Ontario, I found that religion was taught overly methodically and very incompletely; also one was never really sure when the religion period was over. It had a habit of filling the entire day.

Fourth: Ward claims that "there is a totalitarian religious program thoroughly mixed with education". Coming from a theological disciple of Egerton Ryerson, this is rather hard to swallow. Ryerson's quasi-religious heritage to the school children of Ontario has been described in many ways; one of the best came from Spring Thaw which labelled it as "How to convert fourth-graders to Protestantism without violence."

I am the last to say that the Quebec schools are without faults; certainly they need reforming. But I would remind him that the situation in Ontario is not anything to shout about from the rooftops. Prejudice and bigotry, as well as charity, begin at home.

In all this controversy about Quebec Schools, one vital fact is constantly overlooked, so in this respect Mr. Ward is in rather large, if not celebrated company. Despite all its faults, invented as well as documented, Quebec schools manage to teach the grade school student in seven years what Ontario tries to accomplish in eight. Instead of rehashing shopworn complaints, I wonder if Mr. Ward's listeners might not accomplish more by examining how Quebec has managed to cut a full year from its grade school system without sacrificing efficiency and factual knowledge.

Varsity garbage

As you know, I applied for the position of editor of The Varsity for 1964-65. The fact that James Laxer was chosen surprised me not one bit. I was emphatically told by you that he would be the next editor. This was sometime at the beginning of February. I ask now why have a competition at all if the candidate is pre-chosen? Why kid yourself and everyone else? By discouraging people to try you certainly narrow the number of prospective candidates thus giving the candidate of your choice top priority.

When Laxer's appointment was announced, The Varsity quoted Dave Beatty who said that I was an inferior candidate. It seems to me that this word has a derogatory connotation. Who the hell does Beatty think he is anyway? His commission can refuse my application but he doesn't have to throw mud in my eye.

In submitting my application I learned many invaluable things. Most important, I know now why our student publication is of such a low standard. One student described it to me as "garbage." Obviously it is the responsibility of the SAC to appoint an unbiased publications committee and to ensure fair play and fair competition.

Great Lakes Institute fights pollution

By LYN OWEN

The Great Lakes Institute is almost unique in Canada as a school of oceanography.

It was established on campus only a few years ago to conduct studies on oceanography in the Great Lakes. The institute deals with the problem of the increased rate of pollution of the water, and it furnishes graduate students and staff with a chance to study oceanography.

Since the seriousness of water pollution was only realized officially several years ago, the institute has been trying to increase the limited facts known about the lakes, to reach a position of full knowledge of the situation. Even with incomplete information, it became increasingly obvious to examiners that the Great Lakes were in serious danger because of the extent of the pollution.

No one ever really believes that anything could permanently effect a lake.

The Great Lakes are the largest reserve of fresh water in the world, but they have a limit, and that limit is coming closer every year.

Yes, it's hard to believe that a country could kill a lake. But it's being done by degrees all the time.

Lake Erie even has a definite life expectancy term. Erie is in the most critical condition of all the lakes, and the next ten years decide whether or not this lake will live. If the rate of pollution continues as it is today, and if no effective answer is found and put into effect in ten years, the lake has no chance of ever regaining its original purity.

The nature of life in the lake has changed from the big freshwater whitefish which used to be plentiful throughout the Lakes to small schools of perch or smelts, low price fish which command no market. The water itself is physically more turbid and the temperature has been inching up noticeably for the past years.

The final effect of this continuing pollution has begun to show. Lakes and rivers cleanse themselves through natural aeration, but after a certain point has been reached, their ability to do so wears out.

There is an section of dead water in Lake Erie two thousand square miles in area, and growing every year.

The people around Lake Erie don't actually have anything to worry about. They can install huge water treatment plants to strain out the plant life in their water. They will have to put up with the only other unpleasant side of pollution, the sight of a lake choked with water weeds where nothing else can live.

It is happening to Lake Erie first because Erie is shallower than Ontario, with a larger concentration of cities around it. But Lake Ontario is the next smallest lake in water content, and already many of its beaches are condemned. Erie presents the very possible fate of all the lakes unless some effective means can be discovered to halt the process of pollution.

How does it happen? It happens in so many ways that it is a miracle that the lakes have been able to put up with so much for so long without breaking down before. Cities dispose of their sewage in the lake. Even with sewage treatment plants dissolved salts and chemicals still enter the water. The only protection is more complicated, more expensive treatment methods.

Improvements cost money. For old cities like Toronto, where hundreds of short sewers near the waterfront lead directly to the bay, the only answer is a completely revised sewage system. The average man usually can't understand why water shouldn't be almost as cheap as air, and looking out across the vast expanse of water in the bay, he can't believe that the situation is as serious as it has been made out to him.

Industries are major offenders. They use the rivers and lakes near them as dumping places for phenols, phosphates and other chemicals.

Cities like Detroit discharge about four hundred barrels a day directly into the water.

Ships using the seaway pump out the sludge at the bottom of their fuel tanks in the middle of the lakes. Even the run-off of insecticides and fertilizers from the land adds to the waste in the water.

There are laws for ships and industries, but what is lacking is adequate means of detection and enforcement.

The natural solution is prevention. There is a great need for legislation for better control of the use of water in the lakes, but the need is even greater for research.

And money is needed for research. Apparently the government and the political parties have yet to be convinced of its importance.

Enforcement of the present controls, especially on shipping, has to be international to be successful. In order for the International Joint Commission to act, it must be requested by the government and the people of both countries.

In the meantime, the Great Lakes Institute is doing all it can with the limited funds and staff it has. The job is to discover the limits which the fresh water in the lakes can stand.

When research provides the proof of the pollution danger, then a means of prevention can be perfected and put into action. Until then, the half measures in operation now will have to be enough.

The institute's major work is done in connection with this research program on the Lakes.

Lake Michigan is totally in the United States; Lake Superior is in no danger now. Lake Ontario, Lake Erie and Lake Huron are the main interests of the institute.

A small technical and scientific staff samples all possible conditions in Erie and Ontario two weeks in every month along regular belts of stations strung across the lakes between the Canadian and American shores.

They take water samples to examine the content of the water, the amount of pollutant material and chemicals. They make dredges of the plankton and bottom fauna to determine the nature or change of life in the lake. They make studies of the currents, the turbidity and temperature of the water.

The institute's research program isn't its only concern. A weather ship broadcasts the first regular weather reports to Malton off the lake for marine forecasting, and the institute is examining the water area near the new atomic reactor site on Lake Huron at the request of its directors.

The organization wants to know the nature of the lake in that district, the water life and the currents there, and the probable reaction to any radiation which might enter the water.

Marxist revolution still coming

by HANS MODLICH

The Communist Manifesto is 115 years old this year. Yet the theories of Karl Marx, far from being out-dated, are being further developed by a new generation of Marxists, and are acquiring new relevancy in today's world.

"The history of all hitherto existing societies is the history of class struggles". The truth of Marx's class analysis of capitalism has become indisputable. The question of working class revolution in the last strongholds of capitalism is merely one of time. These are the basic ideas of Marxism which I will demonstrate in this article.

The process of revolution is best illustrated by the examples of the past. The revolutions, for example, which carried out the historic transition from feudalism to capitalism have not merely traded one ruling class for another—a mere change of personality—but are based on the most profound transformation of the entire society from its method of production to its morality and even philosophy. The rise of a new economic order, whose final achievement was the industrial revolution, was the underlying cause of the overthrow of feudalism.

How does this apply today? In Canada, potentially one of the world's wealthiest countries, monopoly ownership of industry is stagnating and holding back economic growth. Socialism alone can eliminate slums, misery and unemployment. Only a planned worker-owned and administered industry can utilize automation for the benefit of all.

In addition, we see from the American reaction to the Cuban revolution the fear of American capitalists that a stagnating economy could never survive the loss of its economic colonies.

The sociological results of the present economic system are the increasing alienation of the individual worker from the productive process, and the removal of the propertied middle class as a buffer between wage-earner and owner. The eight-hour monotony of assembly-line or office work makes it impossible for either the white or blue-collar worker to find fulfillment in his job. In order to maintain the class structure the state apparatus has become more and more centralized and all-pervasive. The propaganda media are used to limit and diffuse the critical capacity of the individual in a last effort to maintain the status quo.

A look at the world today will show the increasing strength of the socialist alternative. There is strong evidence in support of socialism in the success of the planned and nationalized economies of the Soviet Union, China and Eastern Europe. In these countries, a high rate of economic growth has been achieved in spite of the anti-democratic Stalinist bureaucracies which continue to rule.

The dynamism of the colonial revolution shows that the world-wide socialist movement is outgrowing the distortions of Stalinism. Workers' self-management, as being developed in Algeria and Cuba, similar to that of the early Soviet republic, demonstrates the real alternative of a society free from the exploitation of man by man.

How will the political change to socialism take place? Marxists insist that revolution is inevitable. Class contradictions reach the point where the working class is strong enough to assume power, and to abolish capitalist private ownership of the means of production. When the majority of workers have realized this, the two classes can no longer co-exist. The Reichstags are burned by the Fascists. The so-called democratic forms of government are done away with and violence becomes the least resort of the falling powers of oppression. The French and American Revolutions, the Chartist movement and even the Mackenzie rebellion in Canada testify to this.

The socialist revolution will not, as revisionists predict, be slowed down by the danger of nuclear war. Starving millions in Asia, Africa and South America will hardly be intimidated by Wall St. threats to terminate human existence. They are desperate and have caught on to the bluff.

Student voting points to minority government

by ROBERT COCKRELL
Canadian University Press

OTTAWA (CUP) — If university model parliaments foretell the future political scene in Canada, then Canadians may look forward to a future of minority governments.

To date, 17 minority governments—14 Liberal, two Progressive Conservative, one New Democrat—have been elected, but within hours most have gone down to defeat.

Their downfalls centre around three controversial issues: should Canada have a "distinctive flag" or retain the red ensign; should Canada join the Organization of American States; and should the voting age be lowered to include those between 18 and 21?

For example, Bishop's Liberal government's speech from the throne established the red ensign as Canada's national flag. At the Eastern Ontario Institute of Technology all but three PC's (including the PC Prime Minister) and three Liberals (including the Liberal leader) voted for the adoption of the red ensign. But St. Mary's Liberals have called for a new and distinctive flag.

Another contrast was the voting age question. Two opposite parties, from the city of Halifax, the Dalhousie PC's and the St. Mary's Liberals agreed in the retention of the present voting age.

Harmony was found on one issue, at least among all Liberal and NDP clubs—Canada needs a medical health plan. The UBC, McGill and University of Montreal Liberals, Waterloo Lutheran and Carleton New Democrats are examples of this harmony.

There were extremes too that are worthy of mention. For example, Eastern Ontario Institute of Technology's PC's and UBC's Liberals wanted an Ombudsman—an extreme socialist policy. And the New Democrats at OAC campaigned for nuclear arms.

When asked about the Liberal's strong showing in Quebec, Miss Ann Booth, National Director of CULF, replied, "We won the province where you would expect radicals to take seats. Perhaps the Lesage-Pearson image helped."

University Liberals at Loyola and Sir George Williams actually polled over 70 per cent of the popular vote. According to Eugene Lapointe (Liberal MP at Laval), "It was Rene Levesque's campaign on our campus which helped us win." Pierre Delude, Liberal president of the University of Montreal, also commented on Mr. Levesque's popularity. "Mr. Levesque was very, very popular with the students and endorsed our policies at the university." McGill Tories actually campaigned against him. "To heck with Levesque, vote Conservative."

What about the campaigns themselves?

Barry Oland, PC PM at Dalhousie, stated, "We Conservatives did not try to snow the voters with party platforms. We fought the campaign entirely and positively on our own issues."

Michael Powers, Secretary of the Liberal Association at Carleton, told CUP that they presented "one speaker every two weeks prior to their elections." Speakers included the Hon. Paul Martin, Douglas Harkness, Miss Pauline Jewett, Real Caouette and John Diefenbaker.

Ryerson's campaign was "very quiet" according to Allen Isien, PC first vice president. But he felt that "The NDP won because they emphasized sin on their posters."

From Quebec CUP learned that elections in that province are "provincial in character, flavour and in voting habits". Eugene Lapointe confirmed this statement. "Every year at Laval, we alternate our elections between a federal and provincial election. This year was a provincial election year. Consequently, it was too bad for the Tories, as they have no provincial party in Quebec."

Muslim leader promises revolution

(Malcolm X, who left the Black Muslim organization last weekend under peculiar circumstances after being the chief spokesman for the Negro separatist group, was interviewed by Varsity staff writer Austin Clarke. Malcolm X says he quit and feels he can create a politically oriented "black national" party. The main emphasis of his new movement will be in the field of social action. It is felt he found the Black Muslim group and its leader Elijah Muhammad lacking in necessary aggression.)

Meanwhile officials of the Black Muslims told The Varsity this week "there is no association between Malcolm X and the temple (Malcolm's old Mosque Number 7) any longer." Indications were strong that the Black Muslims were dissatisfied with Malcolm X's recent conduct. He has been under suspension ever since he referred to Kennedy after his assassination as "a chicken coming home to roost."

...Malcolm X said after his leavetaking: "I shall tell them (Negroes) what a real revolution means . . . There can be no revolution without bloodshed, and it is nonsense to describe the civil rights movement in America as a revolution."

The following is a partial transcript of Mr. Clarke's tape-recorded interview with Malcolm X.)

Most of the black people in America are well aware that the Christian church, as we have known it, has definitely failed us — it has failed to solve our problems. It has failed to make us a godly people, it has made us more ungodly.

This has created an atmosphere in which the religion of Islam as taught by the honorable Elijah Muhammad has found fertile soil.

Malcolm X feels that all classes of Negro are sympathetic to the Black Muslim movement although the bourgeois Negro, being tied economically to the white society, has to hide his interest.

The aims of the Black Muslim as expressed by Elijah Muhammad are to clean us up morally, to awaken us intellectually, to show us how to stand on our own feet economically, and to instill within us an independent desire to govern our own affairs.

As a religious people who have accepted the religious teachings of the honorable Elijah Muhammad, we feel that we are living now in the last days of the white man's world . . . and because we feel religiously that his time is up or that he is approaching his end, his doom, his disaster, we have no desire to accept his belated offers of integration into a corrupt outdated society which is sentenced to doom and destruction by the god or lord of all the world who we refer to as Allah.

We are against segregation but we are for separation . . . Separation is done voluntarily by two equals. Segregation is that which is forced upon inferiors by superiors. We believe that the white man should have his own and the black man should control his own and the white man should control his own. But we don't believe that the white man should control us politically, economically, religiously, intellectually, educationally or otherwise. We believe that we should be in complete command of our own.

The government has shown its inability to give justice to black people in this country; the government has shown its inability to give freedom or equality to black people in this country; the United States government has shown its inability to treat us as human beings in this country. Mr. Muhammad says that the United States government should let 20,000,000 black people in this country leave here and go back to our own homeland but the government doesn't want the world to know that it is incapable of giving democracy or freedom and justice to black people so the government puts forth every effort imaginable to keep a mass number of black people from developing an idea or desire to go back home among our own kind.

And so Mr. Muhammad says that since the government doesn't want us to leave here and go back among our own people, and the government can't treat us right here mixed up with them, then this government should separate this country and give us a section where we can live to ourselves — give us separate territory where we can go.

It is government propaganda which is trying to blow up the fact that we want some separate states and pretend that we are trying to secede from something that is good rather than something that is bad.

We will cease to be a burden on the back of the American white man. We will be solving our own problem instead of sitting around here waiting for a hypocritical American white man to solve our problem for us, which he knows he can't solve.

Malcolm X feels that the Negro has made no progress in America since 1865 and deplores what he considers Malcolm X, defecting or fired spokesman for the Negro separatist Black Muslims, inspects ice cream being pelicaned home by world heavyweight champion Cassius Clay, a Black Muslim.

the subservient attitude of Negro leaders like Martin Luther King. To Malcolm X talk of progress in the Negro fight for equality is simply another form of the white man's attempt to fool the Negro into thinking America believes in racial equality.

Integration is just a political trick. The whole thing is a farce, it's trickery that the American uses to make the Negro think we are making progress when we haven't made any progress.

Malcolm X denies that Black Muslims teach racial violence and black supremacy.

The honorable Elijah Muhammad teaches black people to love each other, to respect each other, and to work together in harmony and unity. Now because he doesn't waste his time telling our people to run around here and drool at the mouth over white people, the white man accuses him of teaching hate . . . We have spent 400 years in the hands of a white man who has actually treated us like beasts, more cruelly than a beast would treat another animal . . . If black people in America don't hate the white man, considering what has been done to them, you can't teach the black man hate . . . It is the white man's own guilt complex which makes him think someone is teaching hate.

Every time a black man stands up and tries to defend himself against the brutality practised against black people in this country the white man puts out the propaganda that we are violent. He never says that these people in Mississippi who are siccing dogs on our people are violent.

We are not a hate group, we are not a violent group. . . . We believe in defending ourselves.

We believe in a philosophy of separation. We don't even want to be with the white man much less over him. We don't want supremacy. We want a godly world.

When we use the term black we mean everyone who is non-white — black, brown, red and yellow.

The white man is more aware of the force of the Black Muslim movement than any other Negro movement in America because all these other groups are controlled by the white man. As long as the white man can infiltrate Negro groups, join them, influence them, and control them, he doesn't worry about them.

STUDENTS

My letter to you on the need for an international clearing house to effect stability in foreign exchange was delayed in the mail and missed the March 6 edition. This is to offer to mail to any of you a copy of An Outline of The Holfatt Plan for solving our chronic economic problems.

The discussions at New College, Hart House, and 93 St. George St., disclosed a woeful lack of understanding by students generally of the nature and purpose of money; of our banking system, and of our fiscal and foreign trade policies.

What is needed is a series of seminars on this vital matter — taking one point, one fact, one truth at a time, and nailing it down. Nothing at this time could be more important. Sundays would be the best time, even if it meant reduced church attendance. If ever a work was the Lord's work, this is it.

Invite the educators, the editors, the politicians, the churchmen. I have questions to ask respecting the apathy of these leaders toward a solution of our economic problems, and I know that more and more students will have more and more questions to ask as they become aware of the truth about our economic difficulties, and of what can easily be done about them.

And again I wish to emphasize that economics is just common sense, and that all students should understand the principles of money and goods exchange. There is nothing complicated, mysterious nor difficult about economics. No one can claim to be educated without such understanding. Our churchmen exhort, but "wash their hands" of responsibility, pleading that they are not economists. Our editors presume to advise, yet they know not that they know not. Our economists mystify because they are mystified, no two of them agreeing on anything for lack of understanding of basic economic principles — of the very nature and purpose of money.

My plan is based on a recognition of the fact that we have developed a dual public and private enterprise economy, and that these dual activities must be financed on different bases — the financing of public enterprise and housing at its administrative cost, and the financing of private enterprise with private savings on a competitive basis.

This will end high cost public debt, high cost housing and high taxation, yes, and exorbitant cost private financing. These desirable results can all be achieved without adversely affecting private enterprise in the actual production of our needs, and in the performance of private services, whence all basic earnings must originate in any private enterprise economy worthy of the name.

The government would be responsible for the issuance of all needed money as was provided for in the B.N.A. The private creation of money would cease. The easy change over from private banker money to national money is explained in the outline I have offered to mail to you. The Holfatt Plan is politician proof.

But I say to you that if anything is to be done to correct the errors we are making in administering our economic affairs, you must understand exactly what must be done, and organize to have it done. As individuals you can do but little. As a body of determined men and women — with an eye single and objective — all things are possible.

The mad tea party at O.C.E.

By IAN THOMPSON

The review article of Feb. 28th titled "Alice, O.C.E. and Teaching", was probably the greatest literary indictment of an educational system since Hilda Neatby's notorious "So Little for the Mind".

But the question remains, "what's to be done"? Unfortunately, our mysterious author failed to provide us with any concrete proposals as to what intelligent and relevant direction a new program should take. You don't have to be mad to come to O.C.E., but it helps. And as long as the students in general have no clear idea as to what direction their training program should take, they and their successors will invariably end up at the 'mad tea party'.

In an open meeting at 3:00 p.m. next Wednesday, the student council of O.C.E. will discuss a draft of a brief to be presented to the Minister of Education. It will be an attempt to make concrete suggestions for the long overdue improvement of O.C.E.

The time is ripe. The minister and his department are presently preparing to institute a new program for teacher training at the University of Western Ontario in 1965.

The exact details are not yet known; however, the general pattern of reform can be found in the 'Report of the Minister's Committee on Teacher Training in the Secondary Schools'.

The controlling idea is to make the program as much a genuine post-graduate course in content and form as is possible in an institution whose main function is practical professional training.

Extensive use of the tutorial system will be made in the methodology options and of the lecture seminar method in the compulsory education courses.

This sounds all very impressive but it remains to be seen exactly how the college staff uses these methods.

For instance, the Minister's Committee recommends that the content of the education courses like philosophy and psychology be pitched at a graduate rather than freshman level. Then they suggest the courses be extended to four by dividing the 'History and Philosophy of Education' course.

They also recommend they be broadened to deal with a wider context of socio-economic, political and intellectual development. The result would be survey courses even more dilute than those presently administered at O.C.E. Survey courses are of little value except when they come in a freshman year as preparation for deeper study.

What is needed at the College is courses with greater depth and relevance. Vital educational issues should be selected for intensive study.

The methodology courses present a different problem. It has been suggested in a stroke of humor that a pamphlet would be sufficient to cover the material taught in these classes. The idea is not so far-fetched as it sounds. There is no reason why a manual on teaching methods could not be drawn up and used as a basis of discussion. Time wasted on needless repetition is time taken from learning the finer points of teaching.

Practice teaching performances however, tend to convince the methodology instructors of the need for reiteration. So much of their advice does not become meaningful to students until after they have had some experience.

The whole problem can be solved by having normal classes on general methods and techniques reinforced by tutorials for discussion of ideas for the organization and preparation of a specific course on the high school curriculum. As a kind of thesis the students would write out a year's program of lessons for this course and it would take the place of final examinations in that subject. Thus there will be the inevitable repetition of fundamental ideas but to a more useful purpose.

There is very little demand for teachers for three subjects. But since there are some school boards who need people to teach three subjects and there are some students who want to have this many it is reasonable to suggest that a third option be voluntary.

Finally, a new system for practice teaching may be inaugurated. First there will be a two week observation period starting when schools open in the Fall. Secondly there may be a block system for practice teaching; students will go out for one week, then two, three and finally four weeks. This is a sort of compromise between the present system of alternating weeks and the program of internship used with a great success in the more advanced colleges of education in the States.

Such is the outline of the program to come to Western. There is no telling how long it will take before Toronto will have it. There is neither the staff nor the facilities to carry out the program of multiple tutorials and seminars.

Still parts of the new program could be instituted at Toronto as soon as next year if the required extra staff were hired. One or two courses would be singled out for a trial run.

Of course all this talk about new great changes in the teacher-training course may be part of the intellectual somnambulism of the rabbit hole. The outcome of the report of the Minister's Committee hangs largely on the recommendation that an advisory board to the Dean be set up in such a way that authority over the administration of OCE be shared by the Minister of Education and the University of Toronto.

Dean Dadson definitely supports such a move. In the President's Report 1963 he wrote that "while safeguarding the fundamental powers and duties of the Minister and his officials, the effect of the agreement would be to incorporate the College into the University and enlist the support of secondary teachers and professors from the other faculties in the conduct of the College." (The Board is to be composed of four appointees of the Minister, four of the President, and four from the Teachers' Federation.)

He goes on to say that "until the relationship between the College and the University is clearly defined it will be difficult to arrive at decisions regarding other important recommendations in the Minister's Report."

So there you have it. But the question remains as to whether the Minister will willingly relinquish some of his de facto paternalistic control and share the authority of administering the College with the University. We shall not know until the terms of his agreement with Western are made public. But the fact that Queen's refused a request for a college of education on their campus may be a bad omen.

Among the "other important recommendations" of the Report has to do with the abolition of (or the restriction of recent graduates to) the summer course. About four times as many prospective teachers take this route instead of the regular course and the ratio will increase in the next few years. Since the emergency course is an inferior substitute, Dean Dadson warns against "the dilution of standards at an increasing rate". He recommends that recent graduates be barred from the summer course so that there will be a balance of load between the regular and the summer course.

Another solution might be a three stream program — one undergraduate course incorporated into a regular degree course followed by a year of internship in the school after graduation; and two post graduate courses operating at the same time but on alternate phases of the program — theoretical instruction and internship.

Once one accepts the fact that the present summer course is the poorest in operation it should not be too difficult to accept these proposals as improvements that would attract more people to teaching, solve the traffic problem at OCE and generally improve the standards of teaching in Ontario.

The three stream plan will be presented in greater detail at the Student's Council meeting at OCE, that is, unless the Queen cries: "Off with their heads."

You feel so comfortable with Tampax internal sanitary protection that you aren't even aware you're wearing it.

You feel comfortable in your mind, too. You know odor can't form. You know that you're perfectly protected. Tampax can't slip. You know nothing can show, no one can know.

So naturally, you're confident. At ease in any situation. At home or away, you're glad for the tiny protection with the great big advantages. Glad it was invented (by a doctor). Glad you use it.

Start Tampax now and be set for swimming next summer. Won't that be nice?

LAWRENCE GARBER

I had been back in Paris a day when I went into the Petit Source for lunch. Fitz the west indian was sitting in a corner smiling grotesquely at the mirror; catching my eye, he jerked his head like a great grinning bird and I wandered over. He was picking some sausage lazily from his tooth with a fork prong, but his eyes were quick and ready. "Hi man," he groaned in that smooth familiar glide of the voice, "how was that Spain?" Fitz had just returned from Tangiers with the girl who kept the albino, Nora. "I'm pretty good, Fitz," I said, sitting down at the table and thinking wasn't it fine to have so many good friends in the Quarter. "By the way," I said, "I'm looking for Dixie." Fitz worked his body like a subtle, leaned forward graciously to dazzle me with his grammar, and said in a voice grimalkin: "Hey, you sure he aint lookin for you!"

So I bought three bags of dry biscuits and went back to my hotelroom where I hid for three days and three nights. I was still at the City Hotel fronting the pont neut, and if you looked through a particular window it was possible to see all the way up Rue Dauphine, and if you were really scared you could even make out the people in the Cafe Buci and count the lights of the Hotel Petit Trianon. That's exactly what I did. Any moment I expected to see Dixie walking grimly towards the island, a switch blade held skillfully in his hand, and behind him Iris hysterically pointing the way. Who wants to die? But after a few days of biscuits and water, listening for creaks on the stairs, and working chairs under the doorknob, I needed air and staggered into the sun late one afternoon.

In no time at all, I ran into Nora and her albino walking along the Quai; she had the albino by the hand and it was sniffing at the cracks in the pavement. Nora was a beautiful animal with lovely red hair and freckles like pepper up and down her skin. But her breeding had been too refined and had turned on itself, so that all that was subtle and calm in her nature had soured, and she was like a plum full of hemlock. Anyway, I took the albino's other hand, pink, dry, eager, and we wandered up Rue St Jacques towards all the corpses in the Pantheon.

All that day, which I spent out of the corner of my eye, I was watching for Dixie. You live with fear long enough and soon it becomes resignation; and if you become resigned too long, you begin to build a longing for the moment of truth. Because that night I went with Nora to the Cafe Monaco, nothing changes, and sure enough there was Dixie with Nate the Accordion and a Danish girl, Maria, all blonde, all smiles, with a certain nordic charm and the smell of soap in her ears. "Dixie," I said, swallowing hard, "whats the word?" He looked up from his demi, his eyes narrower than usual, grinned around his moustache, and shook my hand. And that was all. Well, not exactly all; Iris had left him, she was gone but he didnt know where. "Nasty," he growled, "one day I come in and she's not there, no note, no nothing. Man, I loved that girl." "I know," I said. "You know what she done to me," he said, "son of a bitch, I aint good for nothing," and then the low resonant "Neeceem."

I lived with Nora for almost two weeks. She was staying at the Hotel Dieppe, a dull stuffy place that never caught the sun. There was one thing I insisted on: "That (censored) albino has got to go, honey." She would put it in a blue wardrobe case after dark and I could hear the damn thing whimpering all night long. So she gave it to a friend for safekeeping, and together we settled down to the most sordid two weeks of my life. She was so quiet it was like living with a ghost, and she smoked marijuana all the time so that the room was thick with it and it was always in my lungs and in my clothes and my mouth and skin smelt of it; there was never a moment when the taste of it wasn't sweet on my tongue. To walk around day and night in the quick fading daze that pot builds in the mind, without a respite, always awake and feeling your eyes smart, always talking because there was no other way of knowing that you weren't asleep, Christ it was awful. That was why Nora was so quiet, because turning you on, pot turned you off; when you existed on another frequency, only dogs could hear you.

One day I packed my bags and moved back to the City Hotel. That night, I wandered into the Cafe Tournon for the last time; most of the old faces were gone, but I saw Dixie playing cards in the back and went over to say goodbye. We shook hands warmly; he said he'd write me from somewhere sometime and let me know how he was; he did, and he isnt well. When I walked out of the Tournon, I could hear Maria saying to Dixie "You're funny, you know zat, why are you so funny?" and then Dixie's "Neem," short and surly fading again into the noise of that rotten life.

You live a year in a city like Paris and you begin to need it; so when its time to go or go under, you wonder if you've still got the native cunning to know when's enough. Funny thing is, it wasn't hard to leave at all; you got up in the morning, collected your luggage, paid your debts till noon, hailed a taxi in the rain, and suddenly you were on the platform in the Gare Du Nord waiting to board the train for London. It was so easy, it was frightening, and you began to wonder if there was anything so important that you couldn't cut it out of your life like a dead branch when you had to.

On the train, I stumbled into a compartment, stowed away my luggage, and sat on a nun. She squeaked. I apologized and introduced myself; she was a lovely girl, Sister Angelica, pale and kind. I was sick and she could see it; my head felt like a pin cushion, and I thought maybe Emmanuel the Spanish was idling the night away in the Cafe Monaco sticking pins in his Garber doll. Sister Angelica offered me some food and drink; it was like being asked to eat part of an altar, but I was too hungry to care and when we reached Calais I was deep in a sated swoon. In fact, struggling towards the boat, I couldn't carry all my luggage and Sister Angelica took my heaviest suitcase and manoeuvred it into the ship. The trip across seemed pleasant, so I went up on deck to see the channel. It was the damndest thing I ever saw. It was like being in the middle of an enormous brown abyss. I worked my way down again, determined not to be sick. When I got back, Sister Angelica was being sick in a white pan.

I arrived in London and took a cab to the Canadian Press Offices on fleet street, so feverish I couldn't see straight. I passed out on a table. Then I was being lifted into a car and felt the cold air from the window hit my face. The car wheeled bizarrely through lights and space, turning the sky beneath my feet, and with a helpless gaze I wondered what in hell Trafalgar Square was doing in the middle of the Loire Valley. Bats flapped in and out the windows, rats gnawed humorously at my toes, tiny shrieks faster than the speed of sound got trapped in my head and divulged their silly secrets. I passed out and woke up a day later surrounded by cool sheets and central heating; Binksie and her husband John — my saviours — insisted that I go to a doctor; I did, he put me on antibiotics, and the fever broke in three days. You pay for everything.

I didnt see much of London. One day, walking down Charring Cross, I saw a familiar smile in a book store and out popped Stephen U. grinning mercilessly — I owed him money. We went to Lyons Corner House for tea and he asked me about the car. Oh that, I said, well you see Dixie and Iris had to sell it on the Spanish Frontier for ten dollars and a trip to the station by horse and cart. Stephen U. took this famously, and told me that he had received a letter from Bobby E Lee in Gibraltar. He had almost died alone in Barcelona — did I know — and was now being kept by a little old lady who wanted to publish his diaries. "His diaries!" I yelled (and people spilled their tea four tables deep). "Oh heavens yes," said Stephen U., "he's been keeping records of us, he's got everyone down on paper; why he knows us all to the nth comma, the slimy little bastard." "Well, you live and learn," I gasped, "but I'll get even." Stephen U. said that if I was still alive at Christmas, he'd send me some pictures of myself and Cheryl and Bonnie and the others. "Will you ever forget," he said, "that maddening drive down the one-way street in Paris, and Bonnie hanging out the door..."

Someone staked me to a hundred dollars and I bought the rest of a plane ticket home. No one really means to go home, but its always downhill in that direction, and the easiest place to slide to; I went. They threw me a farewell party at Codgers pub and I got drunk on Russian Stout and almost missed my plane, I didnt miss it — the last of my great mistakes — and all the way to the airport I tried to think of the Quarter fondly but couldn't. There's lots of things I havent mentioned: I havent mentioned Andre of the French Foreign Legion who was made mostly of wood and lived like a machine, or Val who had the rights to an Albee play for all of French Morocco; or Pestre, the artist in Rue Caumartin who painted blues and green nudes growing out of the earth like trees and who once published a cartoon in a small french monthly in which a woman is shown shaking her victorian skirts and out falls a baby head first; or Ox who drew charcoal pictures on the pavement outside of Cooks on the Capucines for money, and who everyday returned to the same piece of art and put another margin around it so that eventually it stretched a good block all the way to Rue Cambon, and later that summer all the way to the Ritz; or the Sex Shows in the old Algerian section of the Quarter where the rich Frenchmen took their women not to watch the positions and perversities on stage but to watch their women watching them; or the Kit Club at the Rond Point of the Champs Elysees where nightly a long, subtle Ngress named Charlene made love to you with her eyes and filled the air thick with mystery and a fin's worth of promise, but never never left her chaise longue under the cooling system; or my first room in Paris on the seventh floor of a five floor building where every morning I woke up surrounded by purple dust, purple dust in my bed and purple dust in my pockets and purple dust when I coughed; or the clochards in the streets at night lying over the subway gratings to keep warm, the jokes of a very cruel and beautiful old city; or the odd habit of a cynic named Foncee who left in little nooks and corners of the world the single note To Whom I May Concern: I Am Not Concerned, or the death of the Esbian pimp, Valentine, to whom the whore Dee belonged, on a boat bound for Turkey and the pleasures of Istanbul.

But no matter. On the plane I sat next to a middle-aged chiropractor from Cleveland. He told me all about the ball-players he knew, how they called him by his first name Joe — "Why Mickey Mantle, Clete Boyer, Yogi Berra, Al Kaline, you mention them. I know them, believe me." And then, "Hey is it true about those broads in Paris, you know what I mean — want some gum? — do they really go down for ya? Tell me about em, ay? and dont spare the details, know what I mean? Haw!"

So I took that flight, back to the time that is daylight saving.

Soviets compete with Ontario

by ANNE LINDNER

The 92nd Ontario Society of Artists Exhibition is currently in the Art Gallery of Toronto. It is, like any other society show, a conglomeration of styles and qualities. The paintings, sculptures and drawings are displayed with almost grotesque naivety — small clusters of sculpture in the Edmund Walker room, and the strained symmetry of a large black painting by Robert Hedrick being flanked by two small, red, paintings and two medium sized blue ones. The effect is sadly unimaginative.

In its Babel manner it is probably as good as this kind of show can ever be. But this is not good enough.

OSA states that its chief function is to "foster and encourage the production of original art in this Province". Great! But they are still fence sitters and keep one foot firmly entrenched in Toronto's mud ditches of conservatism. Witness to this lies in the sale of those semi-modern, nice, paintings that were scattered throughout the collection.

See, see! A foot in crass materialism.

However, there were glimpses of promise of what can be done — but in names that are already well known in Ontario and Toronto. Accepted artists such as Greg Curnoe, John Gould, Robert Hedrick, Grant Macdonald and Jack Reppen and Gerald Gladstone display the best pieces and light up the mediocre show in spots.

From the commercial illustrative quality of Adrian Dingle to an emulation of Kokoshka by his one-time pupil Kelly Clark and the near-pop art of Greg Curnoe and John Richmond; from worst to best in what hangs to represent Ontario's art of today. One positive thing that can be said — it is representative.

Upstairs at the Gallery is a glimpse of Russia — a peek behind the Iron Curtain of stolid Russian emotions. Of the Soviet Graphics some are happy, some are grim, some are black and others are colorful, but all are decidedly not growths of an American-European tradition, nor are they distinctly from the Space Age. The atmosphere of foreignness permeates the room and is in fact enhanced by the presence of brochures "USSR", "Soviet Economy", "Culture an Art in the U.S.S.R."

These publications paint a rosy picture of a world where 21 million clocks and watches were bought by the populace in 1961. But in spite of surface serenity, some qualities of "all's not well" manage to creep through the facade of propaganda in the graphics.

There are a few melancholy and ponderous landscapes (color lithos) by Sudakov, that could well belong to the Canadian Nationalist School of the early 1900's.

RIDING TO SHOP — Lorraine Surcouf

There are woodcuts by Favorsky from the 1880's that look like medieval book illustrations. Technically they are very finely done.

Propaganda will, of course, control much of the content and this is clearly seen in the parodies on artists that Westerners take to be masters — Dali, Toulouse-Lautrec, El Greco, Picasso and even Durer. There were even examples from a series "Americans at Home" showing golfers, business men in conversation, and baseball players. Indicative of the lack of useful "productivity" of Americans?

Perhaps to show a liberal religious attitude, there were two or three illustrations of Jewish Folk Songs. They managed to exude a grey and Hebrew quality by virtue of displaying bearded Jews and a few titles printed in Hebrew characters.

There were some extremely poorly drawn graphics but on the whole technical competence was evident. The latter quality however only conjured up a feeling of waste and misdirection of the artists' talents. A hope that some day their creativity would not be channelled as it obviously had in these graphics.

However, the OSA and Soviet shows offer a contrast — the modern and the old, the free and the harnessed, and the good and bad, the decadent and the pure.

And which is which? . . . decide yourself. They're on till the end of March.

P.S. The Soviet brochures are free — the OSA catalogue costs a dollar.

The sound of surprise

By DAVID JACKEL

This being the final column of the year, it represents a last chance to mention some local jazz which is worth hearing. The Phil Sheridan trio last week inaugurated a program of before-dinner music at the Old Mill, and the group offers some jazz which is well above the type of music usually presented in these circumstances. The trio also provides jazz at a time in the evening when everything is quiet downtown. Leader Sheridan doubles valve trombone and vibes, and is supported by bass and guitar. The trio swings in a very relaxed way, and appears to have an extensive repertoire. Sheridan doesn't extend himself too much on trombone, but his vibes work is very good, the solos being much more than conventional cocktail lounge variations on the melody line.

The trio will continue in its present location for some time, giving those interested in hearing them plenty of opportunity to do so.

Like, How To Be A Jazz Critic

Some of the devoted readers of this column may have been wondering for the past few months (and with good reason) just what qualities are demanded of the jazz writer. The time has come for all these questions to be answered. Just memorize the following simple rules, guaranteed to turn any musically-illiterate moron into an authentic jazz critic.

1. Learn to survive on a small expense account. This is an invaluable asset when working for The Varsity, which does not provide one.
2. Practice nursing one beer for two hours under the hostile gaze of the waiter in your vicinity. Waiters see no reason why you shouldn't spend your own money.
3. Cultivate the impression that Charlie Mingus once wanted to punch you in the mouth. This is not essential. For logical purposes it is enough to develop an irrational hatred of Patrick Scott.
4. Quote liberally and on all occasions from the complete sociological writings of Nat Hentoff. This will convince others that you are aware of the social background of jazz.
5. Memorize completely each issue of Downbeat as soon as it hits the newsstand. It's the only way you will be able to answer questions like, "Whatever happened to Arnold Fishkin?" or "Is Al Haig alive in Argentina?"
6. Know what to tell people who ask where to send contributions to the Support Ornette Coleman's Attempt to Learn to Play Electric Ear Flute (In the Hope That It Will Someday Short-Circuit) Fund. If you don't know take the contributions yourself and keep half.
7. Keep in mind the differences among Johnny Smith, Jimmy Smith, and Johnny (Hammond) Smith. Don't be confused when these names crop up in conversation.
8. Remember that West Coast Jazz is out this year but may come back.
9. Remember that East Coast Jazz is always in.
10. Remember that Dave Brubeck is always out.
11. Look disgusted if someone suggests that there should be a Toronto Jazz Festival.
12. Discover an obscure record that none of your friends have heard of, and refer to it constantly as the most significant recording of the past decade.
13. Vote for Peter, Paul and Mary as the best jazz vocal group in the annual Playboy Jazz Poll.
14. Familiarize yourself with the process by which jazz came up the Mississippi. Think about this whenever you hear the Dukes of Dixieland.
15. Learn how to handle diplomatically those other jazz fans who will disagree with you. The American Dictionary of Slang contains a number of colorful expressions which should be committed to memory for this purpose.
16. Become accustomed to the fact that musicians have an inexplicable antipathy to critics.
17. To counter this develop an antipathy to as many musicians as possible. Start with musicians who are far away and build to the point where you have enough confidence to insult your friends. Soon you will have no friends who are musicians. Remember the previous rule.
18. Learn as quickly as possible why Oscar Peterson is better than Norm Amadio.
19. Be unalterably opposed to anything that was recorded or thought of before 1960. Distrust much of what has been done since, but remember that John Coltrane can do no wrong.
20. Never, under any circumstances, sell marijuana to school-children, unless you really need the money for a new Eric Dolphy record.
21. Think about jazz at all times. Talk about it whether people are interested or not. Refuse resolutely to admit that any other music is spiritually valid in these troubled times.

Canadian art series

By PAUL RUSSELL

The Gallery of Canadian Art — series. McClelland and Stewart, 1962; $1.75 each.

The Canadian Art field generally is underpublicized. No major monographs on the styles or artists of our country have appeared on the bookshelves since the very slight publication stir over the Group of Seven in the thirties. The person interested in Canadian Art must inevitably get his information from exhibition catalogues, if he is lucky enough to find one of these.

The paperback series, The Gallery of Canadian Art, is meant to temporarily fill this gap. Each book is a combination of accurate and knowledgeable text with reproductions of the artist's work.

So far four works in the series have been published: Thomson, by R. H. Hubbard; Pellam, by Donald W. Buchanan; Kriekhoff, by Marius Barbeau, and Milne by Alan Jarvis — four of Canada's most distinguished artists discussed by equally distinguished and highly articulate connoisseurs.

The series in format is very unassuming. Costs were obviously kept at a minimum to keep the individual books under the $200 ceiling. Because of this, the reproductions of the artists' works have, of course, suffered. It might even be said that the color plates do more harm than good to the artists' reputation.

Yet, as an inexpensive series of authoritative studies of Canadian artists for the general reading public, this publication effort ought to be commended. It is a modest enterprise and does not pretend to be anything more.

Literary outside

By BARBARA AMIEL

Claudine at School; Claudine Married; Claudine in Paris; Claudine and Annie; by Colette; Penguin Books; 85c Image of a Society by Roy Fuller; Penguin Books; 85c Hugh Garner's Best Stories; Ryerson Press; $4.95.

Everything comes in paperback now. It's a risky business for the older books too. Reputations are tumbling like Garber's girls.

On the re-issue list, looking very chi-chi in Modigliani and Toulouse-Lautrec covers, is the rather disreputable Claudine. So far Penguin Books has produced the first four of "La Maison de Claudine". Presumably this is a test run.

The four books available, carry us through Claudine's impressionable and impressive adolescence to the mature Claudine, married and confidently manipulating lives.

Colette is at her most effective in the first of the four books. This is Claudine bounding through a maze of sexual skirmishes against a background of exquisite school-girl malice and descriptions of lush, perfectly pagan countryside. By virtue of her pre-eminence in body and mind, Claudine corrupts and dominates with motiveless sensuality.

Precisely what the gift of Colette is, seems difficult to pin down. She writes with, above all, a sense of purity, of style and thought. She achieves an uncanny rapport with her Claudine. If one could only be sure all private school girls would emerge as ingeniously perverted as Claudine, no mother could think twice about the merits of B.S.S.

"Apart from the novels of C.P. Snow, very little serious fiction is based on the hours between nine and five". So reads the back cover of "Image of a Society". Having been unable to reconcile myself to the fact that Professor Snow is a serious novelist, my sympathies were not with Mr. Fuller, setting out to alleviate this glaring deficiency in the literary world.

Mr. Fuller writes a competent and boring novel which catches quite deftly the tedium and petty vanities of the nine-to-five business environment of a Building Society. Though why in heaven's name anyone would want to catch them, I can't imagine. At least Mr. Fuller manages to produce slightly more modulation in his tone than the monostrophic Professor Snow.

Hugh Garner's bleak statement on the dust jacket of his latest collection of short stories, should be a matter of some interest, if not concern, to those who profess interest in the state of writing in Canada.

"The short story market in Canada has almost disappeared" says Mr. Garner. Dismal, but only too true. Apart from the prestigious Tamarack Review, which can only take a writer and public so far, there is little market for the short story. Chate-laine and Maclean's, those two definitive Canadian magazines publish increasingly less fiction. The hope perhaps lies with such enterprises as The Montrealer.

The unfortunate aspect of the situation is all the more apparent when a writer of the competence of Mr. Garner comes along and shows the public what can be done within a specifically Canadian setting. Hugh Garner's short stories are Canadian short stories and the best of them exhibit a rare control of the difficult short story medium.

Hugh Garner's characters are the men and women on the fringes of Canadian society. They are, as Robert Fulford wrote in a comprehensive review of Garner's work in Maclean's Magazine, "outsiders". And unless something radically changes the literary horizons of Canada, they are destined to remain literary outsiders too.

I never got around to figuring out how many mice it would take to pull the Flying Scotsman from Glasgow to Euston. (How would you control them? Smarter, larger mice? No, they couldn't be trusted. You'd have cats. The mice would panic. Hamsters. With whips.)

And I wanted to tell about SAC honor awards banquets when people sit ticking off names on the programs. "Gee I've got lots of friends nominated. Let's see how many I can tick off. How many can you tick off Larry?" Some of the ticked get a little gold thing that's great if you have a watch chain. I think my mother has my award in a bottom drawer somewhere.

I wanted to tell about Christ's visit to the next Vatican Ecumenical Conference—how he was horrified that they spoke Latin. And the business of sending out for Shopsy lunches. ("Lord, before you go . . . we've been having trouble pushing fish near the weekends. Perhaps a special television appearance at Easter . . .")

But they're taking my crossbow away and I only have time to speak of a daring adventure in theatre, brainchild of two ex-Victoria College students, that will take place in an old Toronto synagogue this summer.

Mostly amateur actors will perform three plays at the Coach House from July 1 to about the middle of August.

"They'll get a chance to work abnormally hard, too-long hours doing things that no actor should be asked to do," Dennis Lee said candidly as he fumed busily behind a pipe in Victoria College where he now is a teaching fellow.

"They'll be working in a risky theatre venture in Toronto where summer theatre's reception is still unpredictable.

"And in return for all that, they get no pay."

From that enchanting description of working conditions, one wondered how Mr. Lee had managed to lure the necessary seven or so actors and as many production people. He reminded me that actors are funny people—like to act, prefer it, actually, to eating.

"But we'll find them room and board, on some sort of collective basis, near the theatre," he said.

That's not the only bait. Actors get a crack at a unique stage. The old synagogue is set up in such a way to afford audience space on three sides of the stage, rather like the Stratford, Ont., Shakespearean one.

Seating space will be something over 100 so everybody will be less than 20 feet from the stage and many will be as close as three feet.

And actors get a chance to work with Mr. Lee and co-director Bob Hamlin, now stage-manager at the Crest Theatre. Both are noted for experimental theatre techniques. Mr. Lee wrote a radical musical comedy for Vic two years ago that was widely praised. Mr. Hamlin's past exploits include stints with the Red Barn summer stock troupe.

"But you have to be a bit nuts to do something like this," Mr. Lee admitted with a wry grin.

"It costs money. It's impossible to make back in one year, with a new group, all the money we put into it. We know this. As it happens there are enough people who will be content—nay, in sooth, deliriously happy—to see the shows go on, without being concerned about getting 100 per cent return."

With the theatre at the corner of Huron and Cecil streets, Mr. Lee has his eye on the university to provide much of the audience. There are flocks of people working at the university in the summer, besides many more around the campus and wanting something good to see on summer evenings. And summer stock, outside town always, doesn't offer much. After a long car trip you're liable to have to suffer through ghastly old standards like Salad Days or The Boy Friend.

The group's first production will probably be Wilder's The Matchmaker, which Mr. Lee feels is one of the funniest "and artistically, one of the most rewarding comedies in this century."

The third play will be an original comedy by Mr. Lee and Randy Howard, also an ex-Vic man who has written 2½ musical comedies for his college. It'll be neither musical comedy nor summer stocky stuff, Mr. Lee assures, but a satirical comedy about a 1967 cultural revival that takes place in what Mr. Lee referred to rather vaguely as a "pawnshop-revival centre-brothel-junk shop."

He has high hopes for his actors. With the new stage form and the necessary new method of acting on that stage, amateur actors are an advantage.

"There are a lot of problems you don't have with them. They don't have a lot to unlearn."

BOOKS

THE GAMES WERE COMING by Michael Anthony. Andre Deutsch, 223 pp.

by AUSTIN CLARK

In this first novel, Mr. Michael Anthony, a young Trinidadian author, successfully subordinates the epidemic fever of the preparations for Carnival to the spiritual and moral conquest of a champion cyclist. Leon is preparing for the Southern Games in Trinidad; and the preparation for the Games coincides with Carnival time. All through the hectic and inviting days preceding the Games, Leon must keep his form at high peak; and at the same time he must stay away from his woman, Sylvia, whose visits bring into his presence her own gifts plus the sweet noises of the steel bands. A further temptation is provided by Leon's younger brother, who tries to divide his time equally between the preparations for the Games and those for Carnival. For Leon's single-mindedness towards sports, the reward is the championship of the fifteen mile race.

Mr. Anthony strips writing, and thinking, down to its barest and best. He is perhaps one of the clearest writers to be read in these days of the psychological novel. His style is restrained, simple prose: although the book deals with emotions—emotions heightened by the conditions of Carnival, and a champion's anxiety about his defense of his pride—they are expressed in a clear-minded, uninvolved manner. Sylvia is shown as a simple woman, caught up by the ingrained West Indian stigma of illegitimacy.

On the subject of content, the idea of Carnival is the most important one in the book. Although Mr. Anthony does acknowledge the historical importance of the Carnival—and indeed its commercial and cultural aspects—there seems to be something derogatory about getting involved in the "jump up". A direct correlation is implied between social attitudes towards and participation in Carnival. The author deals with Sylvia's moral collapse before she feels culturally free, like a "true Creole Trinidadian", to follow the bands throughout the town and take part in the celebration. But Sylvia does not like Carnival; for prior to her betrayal of Leon, she had not only questioned the acceptability of Carnival, but had actually decided upon its doubtful social value.

Mr. Anthony does not waste words and time dealing with discrimination and the problem of social snobbery. This is refreshing, although unusual. For Anthony as writer, cannot forget his own awareness of the historical meaning of a Notting Hill; nor can he refuse to acknowledge the insidious presence in West-Indian society of the small businessmen who identify the hiring of a sales girl with taking her to bed. And this is what happens to Sylvia, as it has already happened to her girl friend. It did not happen, as the author suggests, merely because Sylvia was "that type", but because, being a weaker person, she could not justify Leon's obsession with physique and his rejection of her body. It happened—and it will continue to happen—not because Sylvia did succumb to her innate weakness, but because of the sexual weakness inherent in that society.

by JACQUES ROBERGE

FURS BY ASTOR, by John Upton Terrell. (MORROW, $8.75)

'The full story of the founding of a great American fortune': (Barry Goldwater would approve). This is the complete and unexpurgated story of John Jacob Astor, the poor boy who made good in the new world. In true Alger fashion our hero is the son of a drinking father who raises his son to be a butcher. Fortunately, a kind teacher and a devout Huguenot minister were able to influence young John Jacob Astor to work hard and persevere.

Perseverance pays off. At last our hero is on his way to England to learn English in order that he might better survive the trials and tribulations of the new world. True to tradition, he leaves home with a tear in his eye but never looks back.

Poor John works hard in England and after two years of toil he has saved the goodly sum of 15 guineas, sufficient for passage to America and even a bit left over to establish himself in America. (Things were cheaper in the good old days when men were men and.) So, armed with determination our hero leaves the White Cliffs behind and sets out on a four month journey that finally delivers him safe and sound in Baltimore.

A year after his arrival in the land of the free our hero is no longer poor. He has become a reasonably prosperous merchant by shrewd trading, hard work, and the desire to succeed. Ten years later the prosperous merchant could safely be called rich. Afterwards, in quick order Astor becomes filthy rich and eventually makes it to millionaire.

Poor John Jacob Astor. Despite all his money, such friends as Thomas Jefferson, De Witt Clinton and the rest of the United States government he still had to contend with wars, Indians and competition. Fortunately, there was no income tax at the time.

So, what else is new?

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

Toronto will have the opportunity of comparing two quite different film studies of war when The Victors and Kanal open. Both say "War is Hell" but differ widely in their methods.

The Victors is Carl Foreman's long-awaited, much-touted condemnation of war starring a myriad of American and international stars. Vince Edwards appears as a brooding, Ben Casey-like G.I., Albert Finney as a Russian soldier, Jeanne Moreau as an elegant French woman driven to hysteria by the incessant bombings..... and the list goes on and on.

The cast is much too large to make the film effective. We never really get to know any of the characters and can not see the real tragedy in their end. The movie becomes too episodic and seems to be made up of small fragments of incidents out of the war.

An attempt is made to put some coherence into the story. We follow the adventures of one platoon of G.I.s from the Battle of Britain, through Sicily, into Normandy and finally into Berlin. But in this vast pageantry the individual characters are almost lost to us.

Foreman attempts to show that war corrupts everyone—from the Belgian music student that becomes a prostitute, to the French resistance fighter that shoots down surrendering Germans, to the small French boy that becomes a campfollower selling his body to the G.I.s (an incident that the censors promptly removed).

Even the American soldiers come out corrupt. Private Grogan (Jim Mitchum) blasts a small white puppy as it follows the army truck. "It takes a soldier to do that," he proudly announces.

With the help of occasional newsreel interludes, the romantic view of war with its marching ranks and its glorious raids on enemy encampments is contrasted with the realistic view with its death and corruption and its children looting dead bodies for cigarettes. But even after it's all over and peace has been declared, the end hasn't come—we see another war starting in a private fight in which a Russian and an American kill each other in divided Berlin.

A grim picture alright—but it's been painted too many times before. The Victors does not add anything new.

Much more effective in presenting the same message is the Polish movie Kanal directed by Andrej Wajda.

We see the final stages of the Warsaw uprising this time. A small group of resistance fighters is forced to retreat to the sewers and really go through hell. We know from the start that they won't succeed. "These are our heroes—watch them in their last hours", the screen tells us. And from then on it's a dirty, gruesome trip through the dark sewer tunnels amid the filth and stench. The mobile camera, fine actors and excellent direction unite to make this one of the most realistic films ever.

The enemy is only there by suggestion; we never see them until the end, but this fact probably makes the movie all the more horrifying as the Poles grope their way through the tunnels.

Again we have a musician forced to join the war, mothers crying for their daughters and soldiers loosening their trigger fingers. But this film is much more effective than The Victors because we become involved with the characters—the frustrated leader trying desperately to keep his fears from showing, the courageous beauty Daisy, and the wounded and defeated Korab.

Their fate comes as a tragedy because we come to know them. We walk with them through the cold filth in these claustrophobic sewers. This is not a movie for the squeamish.

This film won the Golden Palm Award at Cannes in 1957. It plays tomorrow only at Eaton Auditorium and the Victors is scheduled to start at the Imperial next Friday.

charming exuberance of a child is quickly set to restlessness, boredom, and then completely to sleep; she knows the spiritual emptiness of the Church and its minister.

So does the yawning organist. And the young man with suicidal tendencies who seeks salvation through the pastor, only to be confronted with such desolation that he is driven to suicide. And the pastor's mistress (Ingrid Thulin), who has known only lovelessness and intolerance from him.

He himself is quite the last to face the fact that he believes that God is dead; for he has had "a small hope that it wasn't all lies." The hope dissolves, and he is "free." Free from the torments of gnawing doubt and the vestiges of a soul which were thus far allowed him. Free to finally demonstrate to his mistress his utter contempt for her. Free to drone effortlessly through a meaningless religious service in a deserted church. Free to be dead in life.

The crux of the artistry of this film inheres in the paradox that the picture of unmitigated bleakness is presented with incredible richness: the landscape, at once sharply real, with its claustrophobic leaden skies, yet strangely ephemeral, with its grey misty backgrounds; the deft contrasts between minister and communicant, husband and wife; the brief epiphanies of irony; the reading of a letter raised to the level of a Shakespearean soliloquy; the incisive, yet restrained use of the close-up; the fidelity with which the sound echoes the action, all this and more fuse to create the texture of the film.

Especially important are the performances of Bergman's veteran actors. Ingrid Thulin skillfully plays an aging spinster, who retains her ability to love, and the strength to meet life. Gunnar Bjornstrand is excellent as the austere and frigid pastor, who, for all his immersion in Christian orthodoxy, cannot manage to hold onto his soul.

In the conflict between their characters it is possible to see the restraining hand of their director—as in everything else. It is quite obvious that Bergman's cinematic artistry is more divine than his theology.

Cold Bergman

By ARTHUR ZELDIN

The silence is God's; the winter is the desolation of the soul and the blank earth which bears it; and the film is Ingmar Bergman's beautiful Winter Silence, made in 1962. The village pastor (Gunnar Bjornstrand) has known God very selfishly and unrealistically through the joy he shared with his beloved wife. But she is dead; and so is God. Where is there a God who can explain ugliness and futility? Where is there a faith which can transcend all doubt?

Not, certainly, in the Church; Bergman makes this painstakingly clear. The camera lingers on the minister's indifferent face as he repeatedly intones the Communion service; and the close-up of the wine and water stress their concrete nature. The

Everyone has right to justice

This article is a summary of a submission by Donald L. Granatstein (Law III) to the Joint Committee on Legal Aid.

The Ontario Legal Aid System is today a subject of considerable controversy. It is said that the system is inadequate and dangerous to the freedoms of the citizen and the legal profession.

The object of our legal system is to provide equal justice for all. We cannot afford to ration justice. Equal justice cannot be given only to those who can afford to pay for it. The majority of persons accused of crimes cannot understand the legal process and cannot adequately defend themselves, nor can the judge do so.

Society, therefore, has a duty to provide legal aid for the indigent. The legal profession, too, has a responsibility. It is every lawyer's duty to represent anyone charged by the state with having committed criminal offences and to interpose himself and his talents between the state and the individual charged. He must then, conscientiously, discharge this duty imposed upon him by his profession to his client, to the court, to the state and to himself. The fulfillment of that duty cannot depend on whether a man is rich or poor.

Legal aid then is the responsibility of all. It is in everyone's interest that equality under the law be achieved. Neither the public's interest nor the lawyer's interest is served when a person has to go without justice because he cannot afford to purchase it.

The Ontario Legal Aid plan, the most advanced in Canada, is basically an assigned-counsel system — lawyers are assigned cases by a central agency, usually giving their services free. It is a voluntary system in which lawyers are invited to place their names on a panel list, from which list they are chosen to represent applicants for legal aid. The assigned counsel system has many inherent defects, all or at least most of which are present in the Ontario plan.

That half-hearted representation is given by lawyers in legal aid cases is illustrated by the remarks of Magistrate Addison, who says that he can always tell when a lawyer has a legal aid case. It is also a well known fact, within the profession that a certain amount of extortion is indulged in.

Persons requiring legal aid must request it. Many of these are ignorant of the fact that free legal services are offered. This becomes important because the first few hours after a man is taken into custody are the most vital as regards his rights. An accused person, uninformed of the privilege of silence, may, under police pressure, confess even when he is innocent.

Indigents are often represented by young, inexperienced lawyers who use legal aid to gain experience. These lawyers may be fairly competent but they are often not experienced enough to make the most of an otherwise weak case.

Although at present York's legal aid system is working with reasonable efficiency, despite its many defects, minor adjustments may provide sufficient change. Public clamor however, much of which has been raised by newspaper exaggeration, has created an irresistible demand for a more efficient system.

Any legal aid system, to be effective, must meet certain standards. The present Ontario plan falls far short of these standards. The search therefore is for a method of representing indigent accused which meets these standards.

What are these standards? In the first place, the system should provide counsel for every indigent person who faces the possibility of the deprivation of his liberty or other serious criminal sanction.

Secondly, the system should afford representation which is experienced, competent and zealous. The experience required is that of an advocate.

In the third place, the system should provide the investigatory and other facilities necessary for a complete defence.

The fourth standard should be that the system would come into operation at a sufficiently early stage of the proceedings so that it can fully advise and protect and should continue through the appeal.

The fifth standard is that the system should assure undivided loyalty by the defence counsel to the indigent defendant. A solicitor-client relationship should exist.

Lastly, the system should enlist community participation and responsibility.

There are four basic systems of legal aid. They are: the public defender, the voluntary defender; the public-private or mixed system; and the assigned-counsel system. The Ontario and English systems are basically assigned-counsel systems. The voluntary defender system is similar to the public defender except that it depends for its funds wholly or partly on charity. The mixed system is, obviously a combination of a public defender and a voluntary defender system.

The public defender is retained by the government to see that all accused persons without funds to pay for a lawyer are given equal justice under the law. He is a full-time counsel provided by the government for the indigent who needs to be represented in court.

The voluntary-defender system differs from the public defender in only one aspect. It is not supported by government funds. Its funds are drawn either from charity or from a mother organization.

Practically speaking this system is unable to provide the proper scope of representation, largely because, drawing funds from charitable organizations, the amount of money received is uncertain and often insufficient.

The mixed private-public defender system is merely a combination of the two former systems. It is used successfully in Buffalo and Rochester, N.Y.

I feel that the best system for York County to adopt is a mixed, private-public defender system. It must be remembered that legal aid is the responsibility of both the legal profession and society. No system can be effective unless it has the support of both these groups. The funds should largely be supplied by the government but the Law Society should contribute approximately 20 per cent. The Law Society should get its funds from a tax on every lawyer. In this manner every lawyer is made aware of legal aid and is concerned about its success.

The Law Society would be best suited to establish and operate the system. The system would be organized in a hierarchical manner. There would be a "law-office" headed by a "director" who is responsible to a board of directors, who in turn are responsible to the Law Society.

The Law Society should appoint a board of directors composed of members of the bar and influential members of the community. This board is directly concerned with the administration of the system.

The board must hire a "director" who will be responsible for the day-to-day operation of the office. He will be the person to decide if an accused is eligible for legal aid. It is preferable that this person be a fairly senior member of the criminal bar so that he can bring his experience to bear on the situation.

The staff would also include investigators and secretaries. A crime laboratory may be found to be a necessity but at the outset it would be better to use private laboratories, when necessary.

There must always be a lawyer available to advise a person, who has just been arrested, of his rights. Notices should be posted in all the jails to try to secure the co-operation of the police in notifying accused persons without funds of their right to free legal aid.

To be eligible for legal aid, which will be given free, a person must meet a means test based on the English criterion of disposable income and disposable capital.

To reiterate: a legal aid system cannot be considered apart from the circumstances in which it is to operate. It is not unknown to our law to take a position somewhere between the English and the American position. The proposed system is just such a compromise, which it is submitted is best suited to York County.

TSO concert disappoints

By PATRICK FAIRBAIRN

Last Sunday night the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra gave its fourth and last concert of the season before a none-too-large gathering in Hart House Great Hall. A critic for the Toronto Star ended his music column the next day with a short but devastating note on the performance, to the effect that the entire audience had been most unfortunate to attend. He was right, if the audience had gone, like him, expecting too much from a concert that was free of charge. And less than a month in preparation, at a time when March course worries were causing a more than usually acute personnel shortage. Frankly, Sunday's concert was not truly representative of the orchestra's achievement over the past winter.

Fielding string players is a particularly great struggle. Can a group hope to excel as a symphony orchestra when it counts on a faithful nucleus of not more than two string players per section? But can it be blamed for trying major works? (Beethoven's Fourth went fairly well last February.) The atmosphere among orchestra members is the opposite of lackadaisical: you can be sure every player is there for the fun and the challenge of the thing. The trouble lies in the absence of support from the amateur musicians of this large university. The present productions of the orchestra are unworthy of Toronto's good name, but an experienced conductor like this year's Albert Josef Schardl can only work with the material at hand.

Any performing group needs to attain a certain "take-off" level in quality and prestige before it can hope to attract more players and more audience. The university orchestra is still below and fighting upwards. That it is upwards may be seen by a comparison with the same group last year. It might be a valuable approach next season for the orchestra to function as a "workshop" the first half of the year, so that quality could reach a higher standard in eventual performance.

Future prospects look promising: the projected concert tour to Montreal next season may be just the sort of stimulus needed to inspire many fine musicians out of their present, and somewhat understandable, skepticism or reluctance. A university orchestra is what its members wish to make of it.

The Alexander Lecture

"This year's Alexander Lecturer has more than maintained the standard of excellence for which this series is famous," Professor A.S.P. Woodhouse remarked yesterday, and his comment has more than ordinary significance. Professor M.H. Abrams of Cornell University, author of The Mirror and the Lamp opened his first lecture by expressing his desire to dedicate the series of four lectures to Professor Woodhouse, "if they were only a little better." His offer was greeted with a warm round of applause as the audience paid their respects to the retiring head of the U.C. English Department.

The title of the lecture series was a phrase from Carlyle, "Natural Supernaturalism," by which Professor Abrams referred to the amalgamation at the end of the eighteenth century of the Biblical view of human history with the neoplatonic idealism of Romantic philosophers and poets. Admitting that his generalizations about the history of ideas were "immensely sweeping," Professor Abrams nevertheless showed the development of a basic mythological pattern of unity, fragmentation and reunion in order to establish both the orthodoxy and the uniqueness of Romantic aspirations for the apocalyptic attainment of a new heaven and a new earth.

The lecturer chose for his central text Wordsworth's "Prospectus" for his projected epic poem The Recluse. Although his method at times approached a Hegelian complexity, Professor Abrams' treatment of this passage provided a parallel for his theme: starting with a bare outline of several of the main points in Wordsworth's lines, he proceeded to expand their significance into a "moment of revelation" for the whole of Western culture.

The approach taken is best described in Professor Abrams' own word: schematic. On a graph on which the vertical axis is Happiness and the horizontal Time, the Biblical philosophy of history is "finite, cataclysmic, right-angled and symmetrical." This view sees a creation at a definite point in time, a sudden vertical fall, a horizontal progress to the point of the second coming, an equally abrupt restoration to heaven, and, after a certain period of time, traditionally the thousand years of the millennium, an apocalyptic end. The millennium balances the stay in the garden of Eden both in extent of time and level of happiness.

The modification of this scheme introduced by the Romantics, Professor Abrams contended, was the culmination of a long tradition of neoplatonic thought. When the idea of "the great circle", implicit in Plotinus, of Unity/Good splitting up into Division/Evil and returning full circle to Unity was applied to the right-angled Biblical scheme, the Christian theory of the fortunate fall was absorbed and transformed. Thus, Professor Abrams concluded, the symmetry of the earlier scheme was replaced by the Romantic vision of a new paradise on earth even happier than the original one. Reverting to the "great circle" figure, the Romantic view altered it to form a spiral, rounding the circle but also ascending.

The Romantic equivalent of the Fall, according to Professor Abrams, was man's alienation from nature. Cartesian philosophy had stressed God's remoteness from mind and nature in a mechanistic system; post-Kantian philosophy emphasized the division between mind, or subject, and the external world, or object. In alienation the effects of evil became apparent, and thus man's salvation lay in his reunion with the natural world surrounding him.

By SUE LYONS

In tracing the relationship of mind and nature to God, Professor Abrams pointed out that Romantic philosophy tended to transfer powers generally attributed to God — divinity and creativity — to the mind. "God is non-operative in most Romantic philosophy and poetry," Abrams said. "In Wordsworth's poetry, mind creates in interaction with nature, but the heavier demands are on mind. Wordsworth's religion is more a religion of mind than of nature."

If reconciliation with nature, however, is the Romantic version of redemption, Professor Abrams said, Wordsworth's use of the marriage image in his "Prospectus" indicates the underlying sexual theme in Western literature. From Homer to Eliot and D. H. Lawrence, "the goal in the form of the eternal female leads man ever onwards and upwards."

The intimate relation of the Romantics to twentieth century literature was illustrated when the lecturer designated Wordsworth's Prelude and Excursion as the precursor of Joyce and Proust in the "spiritual autobiography of the artist." The theological original and counterpart was St. Augustine's Confessions.

Summing up, Professor Abrams isolated three main elements of Romanticism which have been carried into the mainstream of twentieth century literature: freshness of sensation, in which commonplace objects and events take on the novelty of a re-created world; moments of illumination, made most famous by James Joyce's "epiphany"; and the approval of lowly characters as subjects for literature. Referring to the Beats, "shouting Apocalypse! Apocalypse!", Abrams quoted Ginsberg and Kerouac to show how far the Romantic tradition can be carried. It was apparently too far for him. "Just how corny can you get," he concluded.

Pan-Niks panic Canada

What is believed to be the only genuine steel drum band in Canada, is operated by seven young men from Trinidad, five of them students at this university.

Called the Pan-Niks, they've become quite well-known on this campus and across Canada.

Students might remember the band's appearance in this year's Christmas Tree and in the first Winter Carnival. The band also supplied the music for the recent musical Ti-Jean presented by the West Indian Students Association.

It was in a show presented by that organization in 1961 that the Pan-Niks was formed. Someone had heard that Nick Ennis had been a member of a steel band in Trinidad, and asked him to contribute to the show. Nick gathered some friends and had a band.

"We knew four songs then," Nick said. "After that, people started calling to see if we were available for engagements and so we kept the band going. Since then we've learned close to 100 songs."

The group has played numerous engagements at fraternal houses, club parties and now appears regularly at Little Trinidad. Tonight They'll be participating in a big Calypso Festival at Casa Loma.

Besides Nick, the members of the band are Cecil Louis, Pat Clark, Lennox Borel, Steve Seargent, George Corneliuss and Vaughan Thomasos all in their early twenties.

Cecil does the musical arrangements although he, like all the members, has had no formal musical education.

The Pan-Niks do all type of music: calypso, rumba, cha-chas and even popular standard songs, anything that's good for dancing.

Of the seven drums (known as pans) in the group, the first carries the tune, and the second two play counterpoint and harmony. The next pair of pans are known as guitar pans because they play chords only and sound similar to the strumming of a guitar. The last two are base pans.

The natives of Trinidad make their pans out of abandoned oil drums but the Pan-Niks didn't. Nick explained that part of the manufacturing process involves the tempering of the steel over an open bonfire. "You just throw them into the fire and forget about them for a few hours." But, that would have called for a special permit from the Fire Department plus a fireman present during the whole process, so the Pan-Niks found it easier to get a complete set of drums sent from Trinidad.

Occasionally the pans get out of tune. Returning them involves tapping the dents in the metal back into the correct shape with a hammer. The deeper the dent, the higher the note.

The Pan-Niks also use a full range of rhythm accompaniment including maracas, conga drums, bongos, scratch-ers and triangles.

Nick reports that in Trinidad calypso songs are written everyday about topical subjects, items in the newspapers and even rumours. Everything from boxing matches to the Coronation are discussed musically.

Once there was a set musical form used by these Calypsonians—with a set number of lines to the stanza and a set number of bars in a line. But with the influence of American and Latin American music calypso is breaking this form, becoming freer with more variety and less and less occurrence of the same tune over and over.

These Calypsonians are now very careful to copyright their music—ever since the famous "Rum and Coca-Cola" Case.

One of the most popular of the Pan-Niks numbers is "Yellow Bird" which isn't a song written in Trinidad at all. However, many so-called Calypso songs are written by West Indians living in America working for record companies.

The Calypsonians feel themselves quite regal taking on names such as "The Roaring Lion," "Lord Invader" and assorted "Dukes, Kings, and Princes," Nick said.

But what's next for the Pan-Niks? They appeared in the "Nationbuilders '63" show at the CNE last year and if the show is repeated they'll will probably be reappearing. Also, negotiations are being carried on for the band to appear at the Lunenburg Festivals in Nova Scotia next year.

The decline and fall of U of T

By PETER S. JULL

On Tuesday evening, as Toronto lay dead under the deep white snow of the afternoon blizzard, Charles Munch conducted Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" in Massey Hall.

The music turned one's thoughts to balmy May or summer, and happily forgetful of the reality of the snow, I fell asleep. Surely everyone has an annual springtime fancy, some more fanciful than others.

I was lying under a great bushy green tree on the front campus, under a clear, warm sky, sipping iced tea, and thoroughly content. But the campus was different.

The main library was no more than a little scattered heap of moss-covered rubble, and all the books and furnishings were gone, probably used by birds for their nests or else completely decayed into earth.

The picturesque ruins of Gothic Knox and Norman University College fostered tall trees in their roofless grassy chambers, and birds flitted where lecturer had droned. The bookstore had fallen like the House of Usher, and resided deep beneath an algae-strewn tarn.

All the other familiar buildings were gone, as was Toronto. Where there had been streets and hydro poles and the places of men there was now only misty green forest.

A cold, clear brook babbled by my feet, and in the bottom sparkled gold nuggets. They were real gold too — Geological Sciences 1c was not entirely lost on me — but nobody was trying to collect them. Little fishes sported around my hand, quite unafraid.

The soft music of Debussy, the music of the spheres, drifted dreamily around me, and seemed an actual part of the whole scene.

Suddenly a wild-eyed grey little man rushed into the clearing. A great top-hat was half over his face, and tucked in the hat band was a card with "Ten New Colleges Needed" printed on it.

He grabbed me by the arm and bellowed, "Do you see this? Do you see all this? What's the world coming to anyway? People have absorbed and digested knowledge, and are just living by their spirits instead of their wits!"

"Why," he continued in a rage, "they say they don't need lectures and libraries and exams and essays any more. They don't even want to criticise or analyse or solve problems any more. They just want to contemplate beauty and improve their beings! Small-time pseudo-mystics they are. It's subversive!"

"And it's not just the academics. Nobody wants to go to work and lead a good healthy life. A time for work and a time for play, and church on Sunday — that's my motto. Balance in living I say! Society has to be organised and working. We need planning to keep us on the path, to keep vigorous and moving."

"We need people building roads and going to school and manufacturing. Life is work, and work is the means and the end of life!" With that he ran off into the woods, shrieking about the state of the GNP.

For a long time I lay in the soft grass, musing idly, strangely moved by the flute theme, following vague mental shapes and images and sensations. I heard a tinkle of melodic voices in the air.

"And he hath judged among the nations, and hath rebuked many people: and they have beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

A hard elbow jab in the ribs woke me with a start, and the hopefulness of spring had vanished. "A fine concert companion you are!", snapped my very real female friend. Home we walked, I getting lectured on my poor manners.

Changing theatre scene

doesn't change

By CALINESCU

As the 1963-64 theatre season is slowly coming to an end, it might be interesting to compare this year of Toronto theatre with the 1953-54 season.

When I began the research for this column, there was little doubt in my mind that Toronto was pretty dead, theatre-wise, a decade ago. To my surprise I discovered that the number of scripted shows, musical or straight drama, was almost exactly the same ten years ago as it was this past season.

In the early part of the 53-54 season, the Royal Alex was the only more or less full-time legitimate theatre in operation, presenting mostly one and two week engagements. Audiences saw SOUTH PACIFIC, GUYS AND DOLLS and PORGY AND BESS along with the still great Jose Greco and England's funny girl, Beatrice Lillie.

THE LOVE OF FOUR COLONELS by Peter Ustinov had Rex Harrison and Lili Palmer in the starring roles and the two most controversial plays of that time, THE MOON IS BLUE and STALAG 17 were also part of the ALEC playbill ten years ago.

A handsome new play is serving to introduce the town to a handsome new playhouse says the 'Star' of January 6th 1954, referring to the successful experiment of the Davis brothers who had opened Toronto's newest theatre, the Crest, the previous night with their production of RICHARD OF BORDEAUX. Following a policy of two week runs, the Crest gave its audience Sir Tyrone Guthrie's play, HASTE TO THE WEDDING followed by Eliot's MURDER IN THE CATHEDRAL and Strindberg's MISS JULIE.

One of the most active semi-professional groups at that time was Dora Mavor Moore's New Play Society. Five plays, among them Mazo de la Roche's MISTRESS OF JALNA, appeared on the tiny stage of the Museum Theatre, their temporary headquarters.

Robert Gill took a fling at Shakespeare with THE MERCHANT OF VENICE, and the stage at Hart House was also the place where University students could be seen in THE ANIMAL by James Thurber, Ibsen's WILD DUCK and Anouilh's modern version of the Greek tragedy ANTIGONE.

Few might remember the fact that in those days Massey Hall was occasionally used as a theatre. The Dublin Players were with their production of PYGMALION, and Henry Fonda and Lloyd Nolan starred at 'The Hall' in THE CAINE MUTINY.

The Metropolitan Opera Co. followed Hockey into Maple Leaf Gardens, Holy Blossom Temple presented Thomas Mann's JOSEPH AND HIS BROTHERS and at the CNE, Melody Fair was raking in the green stuff with CAROUSEL.

The Casino presented Gypsy Rose Lee and Christine Jorgensen, the man-turned woman and a fine program. Richard Burton was the rage then as now, then in the Cinemascope picture THE ROBE, now in HAMLET. The HAMLET that excited Toronto audiences in 53-54 was the film version with Sir Laurence Olivier in the title role.

This was the Toronto theatre scene ten years ago. A conglomeration of classical and modern plays, of hits and flops, and of a new experimental repertoire theatre, the Crest, showing great promise. How different was the 63-64 season?

A theatre opening was also one of the main points of interest this season. Toronto's well known Ed Mirvish had bought the old Royal Alex in the spring of 63 and six months and $250,000 later, in September of last year, the NEW Alex opened to wide critical acclaim that called it 'one of the most beautiful theatres in the world, with the comedy NEVER TOO LATE. Among the more interesting shows were Enid Bagnold's new play, THE CHINESE PRIME MINISTER, with Margaret Leighton, the negro spiritual show, BLACK NATIVITY, and the marvellous STOP THE WORLD. British Royalty in the HOLLOW CROWN, Russia's master puppeteer Obratsov, the French-Canadian BALLET CANADIEN and Josephine Baker's Paris Revue gave the Alex an international flavour.

The Crest, Toronto's new baby in '54, and fully grown now, made a dream come true by instituting an authentic repertoire company with revolving programs. Their very successful first term productions, OF MICE AND MEN, JUNO AND THE PAYCOCK and BORN YESTERDAY made way in the second half for the much less successful HAMLET, starring the youngest Hamlet in modern stage history, an attempt at Shaw's CAESAR AND CLEOPATRA, and Lilian Hellman's masterpiece THE LITTLE FOXES.

The major change from ten years ago is of course the existence of the O'Keefe Centre. I know it is too big, it has bad acoustics and a hundred and one more faults but has given Toronto audiences the opportunity to see some shows they would not otherwise have seen. Sir Alec Guinness' DYLAN and Sir John Gielgud's HAMLET with the fabled Mr. Burton were the most interesting productions at the Centre this season. The rest of their program we could have done without.

Although the Canadian Opera Company and the Ballet Folclorico Mexico created some interest, the former especially with its sumptuous production of AIDA.

At Hart House, Mr. Gill was on a sabbatical and the guest directors tried their hands at Chekov's THREE SISTERS, Sir Michael Redgrave's THE ASPERN PAPERS, a very fine production of LOOK BACK IN ANGER and the rather odd EGG.

The University Alumnae Drama Club deserves the prize for the most varied program. Shaw's MAJOR BARBARA, THE DOUBLE DEALER by Congreve, Max Frisch's controversial COUNT OEDERLAND and the 'theatre of the absurd' play; THE CARETAKER, by Pinter added an interesting note to this year's theatre scene.

The Bohemian Embassy tried THE ICEMAN COMETH and failed, the Theatre Upstairs tried OEDIPUS REX and was successful. THE FANTASTICKS by the Red Barn is now in its 6th month and has become the longest running book show in Toronto's history. The Theatre in the Dell brought us intimate theatre.

Looking back now at these two seasons, we find the variety in programming was good then and now. Conservatism in the choice of plays is still present, with Shaw and Shakespeare as popular as ever and only the odd way out play being produced by a courageous group.

An interesting fact becomes clear in our comparison. It seems that ten years ago, local professional productions were many and varied, much more so than in this past season. This poses the question whether Toronto audiences have become more discriminating or local productions have lost some of their professionalism. The fact is that local producers want to make the big time quickly and when they fail to do so, wail that no one will go to see Canadian Theatre. The Crest had to work ten years for its place in the sun. The trial and error method is the only way to succeed, and it sure as hell isn't without really trying.

What lies ahead for the rest of this season and for 64-65? Well, the National Ballet Company, sadly enough, is deserting the Royal Alex. Succumbing to the lure of bigger box office receipts, it will move into the beer barn. A return engagement of BEYOND THE FRINGE, and the two Broadway hits A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS and A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON THE WAY TO THE FORUM complete the Centres list of attractions.

The Alex' next show is called IN ONE BED AND OUT THE OTHER (1), after which we will see some real theatre with the Jean Louis Barrault Company of Comedie Francaise fame. To round out the season THE BEST OF SPRING THAW, now touring in Canada's West, will try and repeat previous successes.

Two more presentations at the Crest, A FAR COUN-

TRY and the new musical, EVELYN, will bring an end to a financially very rewarding, artistically somewhat split season at this theatre.

As for next season, none of the theatres have any definite plans as yet. This is some cause for worry, for in previous years many of the coming attractions had been booked by this time. But, all we can do is hope for an exciting and varied program next year.

I think it is fairly obvious that theatre in Toronto is very much alive and that we as audiences are lucky to have the wide choice that is probably equal to any city in North America with the exception, of course, of New York. One thing our audience is apt to forget, that the play's the thing, and a failure to realize this can kill a lot of good ideas that may come along in the future.

Ontarionians ignore heritage

By PAUL RUSSELL

French Canada has long been proud of its cultural heritage. The Quebec government protects ancient buildings and sees to it that French Canadian 'objets d'art' are well publicized. The Minister of Cultural Affairs for the province has a full time job keeping French Canadian culture in the public's eye. Thus the traditions of the lower St. Lawrence are assured of recognition and preservation.

Canadians west of Montreal have been made distinctly aware of the Quebecois' pride in his heritage. Torontonians are conscientious advocates of biculturalism. Yet the only side of this bicultural Canadian heritage which is well known is the French Canadian. English-speaking Canadians, particularly those of Ontario, know little if anything about their own traditions. In fact, most are innocently unaware of the existence of such a tradition.

In helping to remedy this situation, THE ANCESTRAL ROOF is a long-awaited publication. The wait has not been in vain. It is a thorough treatment of its subject, amply illustrated, and makes fascinating reading for the layman and scholar alike.

THE ANCESTRAL ROOF is a concerted and highly successful attempt to throw some light on the architectural past of Ontario, a tradition which up to now has gone largely unrecognized and which is quickly disappearing from the towns and rural areas of our province. As Mr. Adamson points out in his preface, this architectural heritage is so completely unknown to the general public that important structures are torn down without anyone realizing their significance. One out of eleven of the buildings which the authors found of interest during their research had been destroyed before publication.

This book presents a discussion of the architecture of Ontario or, as it was then called, Upper Canada, between the arrival of the first loyalist refugees in our generally uninhabited forest land in 1783 and the confederation of the colonies of British North America in 1867. The authors have disregarded the monumental but totally alien public architecture of the period — e.g. Osgoode Hall — in favour of a concerted appraisal of the more distinctly Canadian part of our architectural tradition, Domestic Architecture. THE ANCESTRAL ROOF is a study of homes built in Upper Canada by local craftsmen to the specifications of local patrons.

The authors see this field of architecture as developing rapidly during the eighty-four years covered by their research. They see its source in the conservative, idealistic temperament of the loyalist refugees and its stylistic changes as reflection of the social and cultural vacillations of the population between Britain and the American Republic. The little French influence in the Upper St. Lawrence Valley and Lakes region was quickly extinguished by the new settlers. It was totally alien to their way of seeing things.

While such architecture as may be found under discussion in this book is far from stylistic importance in world historical development, it is an important aspect of the short history of a very young country. As such it ought to be preserved.

The decadent South

By ANDREA FAWCETT

When Lillian Hellman's southern melodrama, The Little Foxes, opened on Broadway in the late thirties, its theme caused many justice-hungry critics to dub it an "unpleasant" play. The production which opened at the Crest on Wednesday night is still unpleasant in content, but not presentation.

Little Foxes is a psychological study of a rapacious Southern family on the make at the turn of the nineteenth century.

The testy trio of malignant Hubbards, Ben, Oscar, and their sister Regina, are the evil aspirants to wealth and power. Juxtaposed against them are all the other unlucky inhabitants of their small private world: Regina's ailing husband Horace, her daughter, Alexandra, Oscar's pitiful wife, Birdie. And Leo, Oscar's son, who aspires to Hubbard infamy but lacks the cunning.

Tobi Weinberg as Regina, in the role which Tallulah Bankhead made famous, reacted well to the pressure of being the pivotal point, and was steadily powerful throughout. Best in her shockingly villainous scenes, such as immediately after Horace's death, she failed to establish a convincing mother-daughter relationship, satisfactory or otherwise, with her daughter, Alexandra.

As Alexandra, Roberta Maxwell was fittingly sweet and skillfully imitated a younger version of her twitty Aunt Birdie.

William Brydon (Benjamin Hubbard) as a performer of immense physical and vocal power, complimented and balanced Miss Weinberg's strength. However, his portrayals of more subtle human emotions were poor, tinging Ben's character with insincerity, one of the sins of which this forthright Hubbard is not guilty.

Michael Snow presented a beautifully contemptuous, greedy, Oscar Hubbard. However, the plotting scenes with Leo were slow and completely uninteresting, causing serious weak spots in the play.

Barbara Brynes' Birdie flitted and fretted, but with an unevenness of accent and action which suggested uncertain stage presence rather than diversity of character.

WW Fellowships

Twenty-three University of Toronto graduating students have been awarded Woodrow Wilson Fellowships, it was announced earlier this week. Twelve others received honourable mention.

The University of British Columbia was awarded 15 fellowships, McGill 14 and the University of Manitoba 11. The remaining 30 Canadian awards were distributed among 15 other universities.

The U of T fellows are: Michael Church (IV Trin), James Dingle (IV Trin), Richard Elphick (IV Vic), Robert Evans (IV UC), Howard Gorman (IV UC), Brian Hull (IV Trin), Edward Johnston (IV UC), Atsuko Kamitakahara (IV UC), Edward Ket-chum (IV Trin), Mary Krug (IV UC), Robert McGhee (V Meds), Edward Nelson (IV SMC), Patrick Julian (IV Trin), Eric Polten (IV UC), Catherine Reid (IV UC), Gilbert Reid (IV Trin), Jean Reilly (IV Vic), Douglas Richardson, Barbara Richmond (IV UC), Leslie Saunders (IV APSC), Michael Tooley (IV UC), William Wine (III UC) and Marguerita Zilett (IV UC).

Purpose of the one-year fellowship is to encourage undergraduates to consider a career in university teaching. "Past experience," said foundation president Sir Hugh Tyler, "indicates that most Woodrow Wilson Fellows complete their doctoral programs and enter the academic profession."

A Woodrow Wilson fellow is entitled to full tuition at the graduate school of his choice and a $1,800 living allowance.

More than 11,000 students applied for the fellowships.

Blood results

Official results of the recent blood drive, released last night, showed students of St. Michael's College donated the most — 322 pints. U.C. was second and Vic placed third. Commenting on the results, Miss Finnegan said: "We improved so much — 240 pints — over last year's 1,759 that I simply wish to thank all those who helped to make this success possible."

NICKEL...its contribution is QUALITY

HOW INCO HELPED MAKE PROPELLERS LIGHTER YET STRONGER

The 45,270 ton S.S. Canberra is the largest liner to be built in the U.K. since the Queen Elizabeth. The fifth largest liner in the world, the Canberra features many innovations, including twin streamlined, side-by-side funnels; engine rooms located aft, instead of amidships; and huge propellers that can be locked together in any phase relationship, thus solving the problem of hull vibration. The Canberra's two 29-ton propellers are constructed of a nickel-aluminum-bronze alloy, developed by Inco. They are lighter, yet stronger than other types of propellers, and they are extremely resistant to corrosion and cavitation—long problems with marine propellers. The development of this special alloy is another example of Inco's continuing research contribution which, for some sixty years, has led to improved techniques and products.

Nurse claims blacklist

By DAVID BRYCE

Efforts to reform the nursing profession in Ontario may have resulted in the refusal of a city hospital to honor its offer of a position to a U of T student.

Jean Cranstoun, 25, finishing her degree in nursing education at U of T in May, is secretary of the Committee for the Advancement of Professional Nurses, a group seeking far-reaching changes in the nursing profession.

Miss Cranstoun believes the hospital's action resulted from her activities in the CAPN. She thinks the hospital is under pressure from "the nursing hierarchy" which, she says, exerts "authority for authority's sake" to the detriment of nursing standards.

Miss Cranstoun, a graduate of St. Michael's Hospital nursing school, taught at St. Joseph's Hospital for two years and left in September to complete her degree in nursing education. But she says she accepted a request in December to return. She was informed by letter March 2 that her services will not be required.

In an interview with The Varsity yesterday afternoon Miss Cranstoun described

VSP Bryce

JEAN CRANSTOUN

the state of nursing in Ontario and what she and her colleagues in the CAPN are trying to do.

They feel a basic step required is the reform of the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario. (RNAO). The RNAO is a voluntary association although there have been cases of attempted intimidation to force nursing staff to join. But Miss Cranstoun feels it is undemocratic and ineffective: staff nurses have virtually no representation on any of its policymaking bodies, and the hierarchy, being the same people who directly control the nurses within the hospitals, have done little to cope with the deterioration of nursing's status and of the traditional warm relationship between nurse and patient.

Vic, PHE battle for Jennings Cup

By AL SCHOENBORN
Interfac Editor

Victoria College Scarlet and Gold, defending Jennings Cup champions, and Physical and Health Education have advanced to the finals of interfac hockey competition.

Vic I finished off Meds A in short order in the two-game, total-goal semi-final, 7-1 and 5-3. Vic goals were scored by Stu Grasham (3), Keith Noble (2), Jeff Maybee (2) Rick Elliot, Mike Jones, Don Wilson, Jim Gilchrist and Rick Wardell. Meds scorers were Pete Rueffer for a pair, Dave Ewing and John Kempston.

PHE I, meanwhile, added a 6-1 triumph to a 4-2 edge from the first game to take Law, 10-3. Pete Burwash led Phys Ed in the 6-1 game with two goals, while Don Arthurs, Andy Szandner, Bill. Waters and Bob Carson added the others. Mike Innes potted the lone Law tally.

In intermediate hockey, SPS I and defending champion, Vic IX advanced to the final for the Rick Kollins Memorial Trophy.

SPS took Vic V, 4-2, as Riivo Ives scored twice and Bruce Burgess and Don Dmytriw once each. Bill Pashby and Doug Gornall counted for the losers.

Vic IV escaped elimination by two seconds to tie Utica Clubs 3-3, and then came back to win the replay 4-3. Bill Prince potted three goals in the two games, Al Crosbie a pair while John Baird and Joe Smith added others. Barry Scruton and Glen Mainprize each hit for two UC goals, Paul Sharkey and Steve Fisher got one apiece.

New College won the Division II title with a 2-1 win over Pharmacy B, which had previously defeated Architecture, 4-2, in the semi-final.

Bob Kellerman and Gregor McGregor scored for the winners, John Wallbridge for the losers.

WATER POLO

It's an all-Medicine final as Meds I yr. will meet Meds IV yr., defending Eckhardt Cup champion.

Meds IV yr. defeated favored PHE, 7-6, in overtime, after a 12-5 win over New College in the quarter-final. Harvey Armstrong scored five times in the upset.

Meds I yr. easily dumped St. SPS, 6-3, in the other semi-final. Graeme Barber scored a hat trick, Pete Richardson a pair. Mike Chapelle had two for the engineers.

Forestry took the honors in Division II with a 6-4 win over Knox. Les Burridge potted three tallies for the woodchoppers and Gary Felton Larry O'Connor and Willy Cormack each scored one. Grant Leishman had two for Knox with others going to Nick Vandermey and Cam Taylor.

BASKETBALL

Recent semi-final play in the interfac basketball play-downs for the Sifton Cup produced two record-high scores in one night as PHE I and St. Mike's took handy leads in their first games of the two-game, total points semi-finals.

PHE I handed Meds A a 96-79 setback, paced by Jim Holowachuk's single-game high for the year of 33 points. Andy Klimas and Ken Elashchuk followed with 16 and 15 points respectively. Martin Schiller was the pick of the losers with 20 points, Pritt Fallopson had 16, Jerry Goldman 15.

St. Mike's A exhibited a powerful, balanced attack, spearheaded by Ray Schaedler, 25 points, Tom Kent, 21 and John MacInnis, 19, in defeating University College, 91-76. Andy Birrell of UC was high man in the game with 26 points, 20 of which came in the last half.

SQUASH

Trinity A retained the Boake Trophy upsetting previously unbeaten University College in the final game.

The Trinity squad consisted of Wally Ross, Don Matthews and Mike Gardiner. Gary Miller, Alby Garbe and Harvey Wortsman were members of the losing squad.

Another award for Kidd

Track star Bruce Kidd is the third winner of the Thomas R. Loudon Award "for outstanding performance in the advancement of athletics at the University of Toronto."

Kidd was chosen as this year's winner of the award, which goes to either a faculty member or student, by the U of T athletic directorate.

Previous winners were both from the faculty. Prof. Loudon himself was given the award the first year and last year it went to Dean J. W.

Sisam of Forestry, Varsity's representative to the OQAA Executive Council.

The award was presented in 1962 in honor of Prof. Loudon by former students of the University. Prof. Loudon is professor emeritus of the department of aeronautical Engineering and a former rowing coach.

He founded the Varsity Rowing Club in 1920 and coached his team to second place in the 1924 Olympics. In 1926 he designed Varsity Arena.

Maureen McConnell top female athlete

Maureen McConnell (III PHE) is the first Phys. Ed recipient of the Benson Trophy, awarded to the female athlete of the year at the annual athletic banquet. The trophy goes "to the student in her graduating year selected for outstanding ability in athletics and scholarship."

Miss McConnell performed for four intercollegiate teams this year, including two championships, and holds numerous athletic executive positions, on both the intercollegiate and interfaculty level.

Physical Education also walked away with the A.E. Barie Parkes Trophy for the highest point score in intermural competition. This marks the fifth straight time PHE has won the award.

This season PHE finished with 9648 points, almost 7000 ahead of second place Victoria who managed 2676. The POT girls held down third place with 2484 points.

Five elected to Directorate

At an election Monday, representatives from the various intercollegiate teams and faculties elected five students to the University of Toronto Athletic Directorate.

Larry Johnson (Rugger), Steve Monteith (Hockey),

Nolan Kane (Basketball), Tom Verth (Swimming) and Noel Bates (Football) were elected after five rounds of balloting.

These students will serve during the 1964-65 term.

Richardson, Verth share Bickle

Two swimmers will hold the handles of the T. H. Bickle Trophy this year. Pete Richardson and Tom Verth were declared co-winners of the award for the 1964 swimming season.

The award is presented annually to the member of Varsity's Swim Team whom the award committee feels is the most deserving on the basis of "character, scholarship, and general interests." It was felt by the committee that these two swimmers complemented each others' scholastic and athletic abilities justifying dual presentation of the Bickle Richardson and Verth were co-captains of this year's OQAA swimming champions. This duet represents the strongest one-two free style punch of any Canadian swim team.

This is the second time Richardson has won the Bickle having copped it solo last year. Verth is not unfamiliar with awards and was an All-American swimmer for three consecutive years while attending Indiana University.

In his two years at Varsity, he has won six out of a possible six gold medals at the Intercollegiate swimming finals.

Both swimmers will be back with next year's team. Richardson is in first year Medicine after graduating from Maths Physics and Chemistry and Verth is in second year Dentistry.

FROM ACTUALITY TO HISTORY TO MEMORY

Not just a piece of paper

When you approach the end of an undergraduate career at university, the unavoidable force of sentiment brings a trickle to the eye and reflection to the mind. All of a sudden, you are aware that these fruitful days are about to become history and your four years as an undergraduate will survive only in memory.

Your stay at university takes on a new light and you can't help but ponder and try to analyze what life as an undergrad has really meant to you.

For me, University of Toronto has meant The Varsity—that mysterious piece of paper that students scorn, professors ignore and mothers wrap the daily garbage in. But, as I retrace the days of the past four years I know that The Varsity has not been for me just a piece of paper.

"What is The Varsity?" I ask myself.

It's work . . . Hundreds of hours spent assigning stories, covering games, writing copy, charting statistics, editing copy, attending meetings, interviewing athletes, making phone calls, sharpening pencils, biting pencils, laying out pages. . .

It's excitement . . . The thrills of athletic competition are many but some remain foremost in memory . . . Early in 1961, Gene Rizak, looking more like a water boy than a star athlete, hooped 44 points for McMaster to set an intercollegiate basketball record in Hamilton against Varsity Blues . . . Later in that year, McGill's sensational quarterback Tom (The Turkey) Skypack completed seven passes in the final 10 minutes of a game at Varsity Stadium to bring Rdmen from behind a 21-10 deficit and defeat Blues. I can still see Blues' Bob McMurry lunging for Keith Acheson's pass on the final play of the game and just missing to give McGill the win. . .

Blues reached the bottom of the pit that season when they did everything wrong and lost to Queen's, 58-6. It was the worst defeat ever inflicted on a Varsity football team. . . There were pleasures for Varsity fans that year, however. George Hicken scored a goal 43 seconds into overtime against McMaster to give Jack Kennedy's hockey Blues the Queen's Cup. Hicken's goal followed a frantic third period in which Steve Monteith gave Blues the lead in the series 59 seconds before the final bell only to have Jim McLellan tie the count for Mac 14 seconds later. . .

The Rabbit ended an era

Varsity's athletic scene underwent a face-lifting in March of 1962 when Peter Potter played his final game as a Blue. The "Rabbit", as Potter was called, was given a farewell night by The Varsity after a 10-year career that encompassed several sports and a record 11 first colors. A token gift to Potter from The Varsity was a white rabbit. . .

Last season was the year of the "Moppers." Steve Monteith, Sonny Osborne and Ward Passi combined on the hockey Blues' first line and game in and game out gave fans an exciting brand of shinny seldom duplicated anywhere. The artistry of the Moppers' passing plays won't soon be forgotten. . . The Turkey said goodbye to Canadian college football with yet another heroic passing performance. The McGill ace threw five bombs in the dying seconds of the playoff against Queen's to give Redmen a spectacular come-from-behind Yates Cup win. . . The Turkey is gone but the image of him setting back into the pocket like a plump thanksgiving bird is still vivid. . .

Kidd and Crothers, next-door-neighbour types turned celebrity, whetted the appetites of Toronto track fans in January of 1963 with victories at the first Maple Leaf Gardens games. Kidd ran the second fastest indoor three-mile in history and Crothers took the 1,000 yards and ran a brilliant anchor leg in the 2-mile relay. . .

Jumbo Petrushchak etched a place in memoriam last year. No, Jumbo didn't throw any passes or score any goals. He just forgot to resume timing the Varsity-Waterloo basketball game in the final two minutes with Waterloo leading by two points. Blues won the game in overtime and Jumbo donated a prize quote. "I got so excited over the game that I just plumb forgot to turn the clock back on," said Petrushchak. . .

There were more thrills and spectacles this past year . . . Bryce Taylor threw three touchdown passes to Gerry Sternberg in the final five minutes against McGill but one of Taylor's convert attempts hit the upright and Redmen won, 25-24. . . Monteith, Monteith and Osborne took over from the Moppers and Blues won another Queen's Cup . . . Bob Awrey went fishing at Varsity Arena. . . And Chris Speyer got in some early law practice by arguing a case against the Sports Editor of The Varsity about the ethics of hockey. . .

People make this world

The Varsity is excitement . . . but it's more. . .

It's revelry . . . McGill weekends, Western weekends, Queen's weekends. . . Jim Laxer trying to give away a fur-lined urinal on the McGill train . . . Paul Henderson following Varsity cagers around the province and leaving a piece of his clothing at every port. . .

It's drama . . . Lawyer Joe Kane wakes up his hockey team at 4 a.m. and displays his court-room prowess with a stirring oration on the pros and cons of throwing pillow feathers in the halls of Quebec City's Chateau Frontenac hotel. . .

It's education . . . A visit to Western that turned into a cultural exchange because this reporter found so much knowledge that he never made it to the football game. . .

It's people . . . More than anything The Varsity is people. . . From the Varsity staffers to the SAC "publishers", the Athletic Association, the coaches and the players, it is the human element that makes The Varsity. . . Al Schoenborn's interfac statistics, Shel Krakofsky's letters from mama, Gord Bellmore's dates, Bruce Kidd's uncles, Sheila Lithwick's bouquets, Paul Henderson's prose, Katie O'Sullivan's knee socks. . . Phyl Lea's smile, Mac McCutcheon's office, John McManus' humor, Tom Verth's history, Paul Wilson's Golden Toe. . . these are the things implanted deepest in memory.

What is The Varsity?

It's something I'll miss very much.

Final Fling Fistaminations

Bill (Bear) Kennedy, one of Varsity's all-time great hockey players, takes a year off from teaching to enter the one-year Phys. Ed. course at McMaster next year. Marlins will welcome the addition if they persuade Kennedy to don the blades. . . All-star centre Jerry Raphael of Waterloo Warriors may be at U of T law school next year. . . Varsity Rugby Blues are negotiating for a tour of the United Kingdom next December. There are plenty of invitations but not as much money available. . . Bobby Lewis of the Soccer Blues has been invited to try out with Chelsea of the British pro league. . . Gene Glsky, former features editor of The Varsity, and his wife, the former Betty Lou Joynl, became parents of a baby boy last week in New York. . . Biggs Trophy winner Paul Wilson won the university squash title Wednesday, defeating Doug Tilley, 3-1, in the final. . .

One parting wish. . . that the U of T administration becomes inclined to see that the campus has its new athletic building by 1970. The edifice would be the only appropriate monument to those people, past and present, who have devoted their lives to athletics at this great institution.

SPORTS REVIEW

Isn't any pleasanter, as they topped a 71-69 cliffhanger in Kingston. January was also an unendingly month for the Hockey Blues. The pucksters began on the rails, overcoming the Laval jinx. 2-0, but then being upset by Montreal Carabins 1-0. But that setback wasn't half so serious as the broken-leg loss of Ward Passi, hurt during a questionable check by Carabin defenseman Pierre Charbonneau. Passi's injury spelled the end for the high-scoring MOP line (Steve Montieth-Sonny Osborne-Passi). So undaunted Joe Kane pulled another ready-to-score trio out of his hat, and in Blues' next outing the line of Steve-Hank Montieth-Stu McNeil figured in every goal as Varsity squeaked by 5-4.

Then Carabins came to town, and Blues whopped them 7-3, while Bob Awrey shocked Charbonneau with a four-foot eel. But the MMM line sounded too good to last, and when Stu McNeil injured his back, Kane was forced to come up with something more secure: you guessed it — the MOM line (Montieths-Osborne.)

FEBRUARY

February got a good start off the blocks, but runner Bruce Kidd began sluggishly, only finishing third in the Gardens' three-mile run. But Kidd then won three straight races in New York, and lost another by just an eyelash in Chicago, indicating he'll still be a contender for an Olympic medal.

With his inevitable thrust home, Helmut Microys climaxed Blues' undefeated climb to the OQAA championship, as the sabre artist won a sudden-death bout to give Imre Hennyey's fencers a narrow 55-54 victory in the title meet. Sharing the limelight with Microys, was versatile duellist Nansing Ho.

Blues' grapplers placed second to OAC in the OQAA finals after an spectacular exhibition season. Don Merker and Alvin McKenzie were the sole individual winners for Varsity, with John Holt a very much undefeated finalist.

In the home stretch of the basketball schedule, Blues finished strong, revenging Western on the road, splitting with Waterloo, and whipping McGill, Queen's, and McMaster (on television).

Veteran Dave West finally hit his stride, gradually moving into the scoring leadership, and finishing up top with an impressive 26.2 average. West's spectacular jump-shot also won him an All-Star berth and the Potter Trophy.

The swimmers swept to another league championship, and so what else is new? The embarrassed Benson Building saw defensive end Tom Verth splash to two victories, and anchor a Canadian record-breaking 400-yard freestyle relay. Graeme Barber and Pete Richardson each won their specialties, as Blues swamped Western by 26 points.

It's nice to finish off the year with a winner, and the Hockey Blues won about everything there was to win. With the MOM line monopolizing all the scoring, Blues overhauled league-leading McMaster with one week remaining in the schedule, and clinched the Queen's Cup with a convincing 7-3 victory on Marlins' home ice. The final rout of Laval was anticlimactic.

Rookie Hank Montieth almost captured scoring honors, with brother Steve the loop's top goalgetter. Gary Aitken was a shoo-in for goals-against laurels. But the Queen's Cup was more than the prize of a handful of stars, for Blues had a supporting-cast to make any other coach green with envy.

The only blemish in this happily-ever-after ending is the CIAU scheduling of the national championship which prevents Blues from being crowned Canadian champs as well. But as they used to say in Flatbush: "Wait 'till next year."

SPORTS YEAR IN REVIEW

By UNCLE HARRY

It was an eventful year for the sports fan at U of T.

It began on the back campus, alive with the shouts and sweat of beefy footballers, laboring into condition under a merciless summer sun and oblivious to the curious gaze of registering students.

And in September, Dalt White's

And in September, Dalt White's charges looked like champions. Powerful, mature, and confident, Blues whopped Ottawa University 28-0 and toyed with Western 13-7 in two exhibition contests. Switching Harold Hall to half-back, they abandoned their 1962 twin-fullback formation for a tricky and effective flip-flop offence. (The pun only became apparent in retrospect.)

OCTOBER

But it was the year Blues blew the pennant, and those Yates Cup hopes died with the summer. The league opener in Kingston told the story for the whole season: good show, bad luck, no win. While Gaels triumphed 21-14 on Cal Connor's pair of long touchdown strikes, Blues threw away the ball and the game in a split second in their own end zone. That Varsity was a match for Queen's was clear to all, but who told the scorekeeper?

Miss Lea had another set of pigskin heroes as stand by's for campus idolatry—and the University of Toronto Rugby Football Club didn't miss the opportunity. "There's none so fair as can compare with the UTRFC..." and it's been some time since U of T has been blinded by the brilliance of an athletic organization quite like Paul Wilson & Company.

But if the Ruggerites did have a flaw this season, it was too much top talent. With a different lineup every outing, we can forgive them for starting slowly and leaving all their scoring until the second half. In the first OQAA match, they were actually held to a tie.

In the fiercely-contested soccer loop, the Soccer Blues of Katie O'Sullivan and Charley Oster dropped their opener to Ryerson Rams, but roared back a week later to overwhelm Ontario Agricultural College 8-1 on Keith Murphy's five goals. As the season aged, the initial loss to Rams was to loom larger and larger.

Varsity captured two Intercollegiate titles on a balmy October Saturday. Blues' fairway foursome of Alby Garbe, Norm McGill, Mike Whitney, and Rich Hamel swept to golfing laurels, a full 11 strokes up on Western.

And Toronto thinclads retained their three-year hold on the Tait Mackenzie Trophy and the OQAA track title with a thrilling four-point upset over McMaster. Blues were led by amazing Rod Chintu, who won the 440- and 880-yard runs and anchored the meet-winning victorious mile relay, dependable Bruce Kidd, who captured both one- and three-mile runs, and Peter Auksi, who out-twirled his discus competitors.

But return to the month's central tragedy: McGill 25 Varsity 24; Western 52 Varsity 15.

At the Bloer Bowl against Redmen, Blues threw away a ballgame—three fumbles and four interceptions—but discovered a star. Filling in for rib-injured Harold Hall, sophomore Gerry Sternberg made the score respectable by conspiring with quarterback Bryce Taylor on pass-and-run touchdown plays of 75-, 31-, and 63-yards—all in the last quarter.

Then, Blues got gored in a bullfight. Repeatedly repelled by Mustangs' hulking, stubborn defence, the Blues were routed by a skinny third-string pivot. "No fluke!" Sternberg salvaged Blues' only touchdowns.

Meanwhile the soccer and rugger squads kept winning, winning, winning. While the Eleven tamed McGill, Ryerson, and Western, the Fifteen blanketed Redmen and twice annihilated OAC Aggies. Highscorers Larry Johnson and Rod Sanders were sidelined about this time—the back campus pitch was becoming like a concrete slab.

Varsity had an intermediate football squad this fall, and despite constant player raids from upstairs, the Baby Blues of Creswell and Casey finished a strong second in their loop. The intermediates proved an excellent nursery for such late-season Blues as Tom Verth and Pete Sutherland.

Homecoming—and all was sweetness and light. Blues came from behind to revenge Western on Mike Hollett's last quarter TD. Whether or not it was the new sweaters, which fired up Blues, fired up they were as Noel Bates, Kaspar Pold, Jim Fisher, Bill Jackson, Ken Davison, Bill Watters, Jim Israel, and Bryce Taylor all shone. It was a good win to end the month.

NOVEMBER

November meant an early month and has become the winter for football. As Bryce Taylor's last-minute field goal attempt soared inches wide of the uprights, Blues painfully watched the last hope for a title vanish. (Queen's drubbed Western 51-9 in Kingston to clinch the Yates.) That Varsity could suffer another one-point setback was too hard to believe—but it happened, 5-4. (That season Blues eventually lost four games, by a total of 13 points.)

But the Molsonville weekend was by no means a lost cause. In fact, we won two titles.

The equally-unbelievable Rugger Blues disciplined a Redmen fifteen 8-0 to cop their fifth consecutive Turner Trophy and loop championship. And the Soccerites captured the Toronto & District Soccer Trophy (sorry Katie) by winning a home-and-home series with McGill 6-5.

In the other direction at Lake Fanshawe in London, the unsung but dedicated Rowing Blues took the Eastern Canadian Intercollegiate Rowing Crown.

Varsity's long-distance ace Bruce Kidd chose November to sweep to a grand slam of cross-country victories. In four consecutive weekends he raced to the OQAA, Canadian AAU, Canadian Intercollegiate, and American AAU individual titles.

By trouncing Queen's 18-8, and tying Ontario Rugby Union champs Toronto Irish 3-3, and ORU All-Stars 8-8, the UTRFC wound up its season undefeated. Some of Dick Gaetor's population problems will be solved by the graduation of stalwarts Jim Humphries, Bill Charleton, John Cameron, Doug Bosomworth, and Paul "Golden Toe" Wilson. But while Varsity mourns their loss, the rest of the OQAA can breathe a little easier.

In the final exciting week of soccer action, Blues got squeezed out of another title. The Blackwood Trophy (Katie?) went to McMaster, a mere point ahead of Toronto and Western.

Then the footballers lost a pair of heartbreakers. Aided by a drunken fan, Blues played their best game of the season in the finale against Queen's, but ended on the short side of the 19-15 score. The scene was changed two weeks later but the script read the same as Blues bowed to St. Francis Xavier 15-9 in the Atlantic Bowl.

Despite a last-place league finish, Blues placed five men on the coaches' All-Star team: Sternberg, Davison, Ray German, Watters and Dave McCullough. Sternberg wound up fourth in scoring, behind the remarkable Willie Lambert who tabulated 60 of McGill's 81 points.

The Adam of championship mugs — the Mulock Cup — went to Victoria for the sixth consecutive time to keep the percentage players still in the game. St. Mike's provided the excitement again this fall, outpacing Vic in every department but the right one. Scoreboard: Vic 21, SMC 19.

With the seasonal exit of soft-spoken Dalt White, the focus switches to story-telling John McManus and pun-proficient Joe Kane.

DECEMBER

December started with the Hockey Blues in high gear, winning all four exhibition games, including two over defending national champion McMaster. With five rookies and returned Ian Sinclair in the line-up, Blues opened league play with a win over Queen's and a tie with McGill. Gary Aitken won hemp hut chores with his dramatics in the Boston Christmas tournament, in which Blues placed second.

Led once again by Dave West and Ed Bordas, the McManusmen split a pair of exhibitions, but opened well by taming McGill 99-56. As Santa drew into sight, Physical Educational was the T. A. Reed Trophy leader at the halfway point.

JANUARY

The New Year began miserably for sun-tanned John McManus and even the friendly confines of Hart House couldn't rescue his cagers from the Windsor Lancers. When West and Bordas fouled out of the game with six minutes remaining, Blues' stubborn resistance crumbled and the bobby-soxed powerhouse from the border pulled away to a 88-79 win. Varsity lost another toughie in The Cage, as Tom Williamson and the Mustangs toppled Toronto 79-72 in overtime, with West again fouling out early. Blues' first outing on the road

Varsity athlete of the year

Paul Wilson wins Biggs

Personable Paul Wilson has been named winner of the George M. Biggs trophy for 1963-64 as the undergraduate who has contributed the most to University of Toronto athletics from the standpoint of leadership, sportsmanship, and performance.

The fourth year Political Science and Economics student from Trinity College is known mostly for his feats on the rugger pitch where he led the Varsity team in scoring for four consecutive years. The "Golden Toe", as he is known for his place-kicking ability, captained the Rugger Blues twice and twice was chosen the "Fairness and Best" player by his teammates.

Wilson was also instrumental in bringing 7-a-side rugger to Varsity's intramural programme. He not only supervised and refereed in the league, but also taught the game to multitudes who thought a rugger ball was nothing more than a football with gland trouble.

For three years, Wilson was on the Trinity College Athletic Association and in his third undergraduate year was president of the TCAA and served on the University's Intramural Sports Committee. This past year, he was one of the five undergraduate members of the University Athletic Directorate.

Always willing to learn, Wilson played Interfaculty football this year and didn't look out of place in a sport he had never played before. (Well... maybe he was a little awkward.)

He was on Varsity's "B" Squash teams in 1962 and 1963 and this year was a member of the Intercollegiate team. He has steadily improved and this week won the undergraduate title.

Wilson, who graduates this year, will return to his home town of Swanage, England, where he hopes to start a career.

An urgent situation arose late last night which concerns every student.

The provincial government introduced legislation which threatens to bring Ontario to the position of a FACIST state.

The legislation would give the Ontario Police Commission power to summon any person for questioning in secret, deprive him of counsel, and jail him indefinitely if he refuses to answer questions.

The legislation does not provide for bail or appeal by an imprisoned person.

The proposed legislation makes us sincerely regret that this is the last issue of The Varsity this year. The student body on this campus is thus deprived of a voice.

We urge every student to acquaint himself with this dangerous situation. Today's Globe and Mail has a complete report and carries a front page editorial opposing the proposed measure.

Assuming student readers share our horror and indignation, at this proposed legislation we hope they will let their Members of Parliament and their newspapers know their opinions on this matter.

'Defiant mindlessness' makes SAC copeless

Says SAC not with it

The SAC has never been a motivating force on this campus, a special presidential committee said ruefully at Wednesday night's council meeting.

"As a potential leader in a supposedly liberal society the SAC has in the past shown a disturbing reluctance to move forward with the times," the report, prepared by Fred Gans, Howard Simmons, Ed Greenspan and Stephen Fienberg, said.

"The challenges facing the university community both from the outside and from its own internal expansion have been met not with the purpose necessary to cope with them, but with a defiant mindlessness, based on an unearned complacency that has put the SAC in a position where it lacks the confidence of the students."

The report said the greatest problem the university faces is the increasing size of the institution and the resulting diminution in the stature of the individual student.

The student is forced by society into a common mold and is told that conformity is a good thing . . . But this idea is based on the wrong premise because each student is different from the other."

Development of the group instead of that of the individual, which the report implied was the new course of university operation, "smothers people by suppressing their idiosyncracies. It cuts off those imaginative people from whom new ideas come, and what started as a campaign against individuality, ends as a campaign against creativity."

But the report ended optimistically.

"It is the feeling of the committee that once the SAC changes its basic attitudes, and remembers that it exists for the students of the university, and once the SAC recaptures its sense of purpose, the SAC will experience a regeneration of creativity seen in a new and persuasive spirit."

The overall object of the committee was to examine the relationship between the colleges and faculties, on the one hand, and the SAC on the other.

On the question of whether the SAC "representative" truly represents his college or faculty or is merely a delegate, the committee was divided, but leaned toward the latter view.

Th committee said where a college or faculty elects two persons to sit on council, the practice of having one female and the other male should be abolished. Students should all vote for both reps.

The majority of the committee felt strong impeachment provisions should be written into constitutions of all bodies having reps on the SAC. Regarding the mandate principle, "it was felt that each college should have the power to mandate the SAC reps regarding matters which concern the college but not necessarily on matters which touch the university as a whole."

The committee noted that representation on council for the larger colleges and faculties is inadequate. It recommended a system whereby there would be a representative for every 500 students on campus.

Student goals cause conflicts

SAC President-Elect John Roberts (II Wyc), reporting to Wednesday's final meeting as university committee chairman, cited a basic conflict for university students—whether they see the prime goal of a university as the cultivation of a academic knowledge or cultivation of decisions as well.

Roberts said the conventional notion of student government's purpose was "to direct, regulate, and control extra-curricular activities." He said this attitude saw students as hurting their studies if they became involved in running "things."

"Instead of being free to cultivate new thoughts, the mind would be enslaved to administrative and organizational decisions, few of which they would be capable of evaluating."

But, Roberts said, if the true role of university "includes the education of the will as well as the mind; if we must cultivate decisions as well as thoughts, then student governments, as the bodies responsible for regulating and directing that decision-making, can no longer be concerned with extra-curricular matters."

"Rather, student government becomes inherent to the very process of education itself. . . . Student govern-

SAC Wins Half

The SAC has nearly won half its struggle with the board of governors for constitutional changes that will grant the council more autonomy.

In a letter to SAC President Doug Ward, President Claude Bissell said the board's executive committee has recommended that the SAC be given the power to hire and fire its staff, subject to ratification by the board.

This change is one of two requested by the council more than a year ago. Then, the SAC asked for the right to hire its own staff and for the right to administer its own funds.

The board bylaws stipulate that the board hires the council's business administrator and controls the SAC's finances.

Dr. Bissell reported that he is sure the board will accept the committee's recommended changes.

One of the reasons given for the sudden recommendation was to make provision for the appointment of R. S. Rawling, the business administrator selected by the SAC last summer, but not yet approved by the board.

Indiana students on trial today

The case of the Bloomington students against the State of Indiana and the United States opens today in Bloomington—with a reduced charge against the four defendants.

The prosecution has submitted a bill of particulars which drops the charge of conspiracy against the federal government. The students, one of whom visited Toronto this term, were originally charged with advocating the overthrow of the government of the United States and Indiana by means of force.

The new charge has expunged "United States" from the text.

The original charge came after the students sponsored a speaker at Indiana University who defended a Negro's right to defend himself with arms when his civil rights were impinged.

Roberts new SAC prexy

By DON SMITH
Varsity SAC Reporter

A 12-hour joint meeting of outgoing and incoming SACs Wednesday night elected John Roberts of Wycliffe College to head the 1964-65 executive; heard Canadian Union of Students President David Jenkins outline the aims and major programs of CUS; and appointed Alan Hughes (SGS) and Rosemary Speirs (SGS) as co-editors of the restored Jargon.

Roberts, a second-year theology student at Wycliffe, former Fulbright scholar and chairman of the 1963-64 university committee, was selected by the members of the incoming council over second-year law student David Kilgour.

In his speech before the elections, Roberts stressed two areas in which he intended to concentrate his efforts—revision of the present constitution along lines indicated by the university committee hearings this year and the improvement of "lines of communication" between council and the board of governors, council and the college and faculty councils, and between the executive and council members.

Kilgour said he considered the presidency "a matter of emphasis," the emphasis being on national affairs. "It is easy," he said, "to speak of autonomy for the SAC, but hard to make well-thought-out proposals to the board of governors."

In a close race Diana Bennett (III UC) defeated Mary Brewin (II Trin) for the vice-presidency. Miss Bennett was weekends chairman this year, while Miss Brewin is a newcomer to council.

Miss Bennett in her speech outlined her concept of the role of the vice-president. "It does not," she said, "have the maternal complexion some people seem to think. The position calls for calculated 'help-matism, to complement the abilities of the president."

JOHN ROBERTS

Miss Brewin was subsequently elected publications commissioner, defeating another freshman on council, Ashish Sen. The other two members of the executive, finance commissioner Howard Adelman (SGS) and national affairs commissioner Kevin Keough (IV SMC), were elected by acclamation.

The appointment of the co-editors of the Jargon caused

When in Rome...

This editorial appeared in the March 13 issue of The Ubysey, the University of British Columbia student newspaper.

We shed a tear for the University of Toronto student council, which is presently grovelling about on its knees in its latest run-in with the university administration.

The Toronto council, probably the most farcical of any large Canadian university, has for years existed as little more than a tool of the faculty authorities, because of a university act which states that the student organization exists solely as a creature of the Board of Governors, and at the pleasure of the Board.

The Board of Governor's latest attempted clampdown on what remains of student autonomy has the council president making a plea for "consideration and mercy."

As the situation now stands, the administration has to approve formally every single expenditure by the student council—and by thus controlling the students' purse-strings, the administration effectively controls the students' activities and programs as well.

To UBC students, who have since the creation of the University enjoyed the widest freedom and responsibility, Toronto's situation resembles a bad dream from the dark ages.

Because of our continual involvement with the very existence of UBC, particularly with the Great Treks and the Black Mac campaign, the students here have come to cherish a tradition of autonomy envied by student organizations all over North America.

It is a tradition that has been jealously guarded, and proudly upheld, for nearly 50 years now. UBC students have continually demanded their wide historical freedoms, but they have also continually demonstrated their ability to responsibly use the freedom they've gained.

More and more in the future, however, students will be called upon to defend and uphold this tradition.

As UBC grows larger, as its administration becomes more impersonal and more like that of a giant corporation, there is a new and greater pressure brought to bear upon the Alma Mater Society. It becomes increasingly more difficult for the student body to remain the well-knit group it has been in years past. It often takes incidents of the scope of the huge Back Mac campaign for its spirit and vitality to display itself.

The new student council, which officially takes office next week, will have to provide the leadership in perhaps the most difficult year UBC students have ever undergone. If they grasp the magnitude of their responsibility early, if they can be made to feel the powerful tradition of the students who went before them, they will surely move on to a successful year.

If they become complacent, disinterested, and worst of all, lazy, then they will fail, and the AMS will falter.

Surely the ignominy of the Toronto council is sufficient to jar any UBC councillor to a consideration of the problem at hand.

By JIM M
Varsity Ne

When the Faculty of Law has sprung, the University of Toronto's most dynamic and principled president's legacy will remain in the spirit of the movement.

Vincent Kelly, 26, has accomplished more on campus than even a president. President of the University Administrative Council in 1958-59, he was St. Michael's College SAC the next year. He sat in Model Parliament years except his last one. He went to the SMC senate club.

But it was his not sitting the evaluation of Kelly. After a long campus Liberals, which helped him for Lanark for the 1962 federal election in a matter of hours last January came before expediency in politics.

When the Liberal party announced and had decided to favor the arms, Kelly held a press conference and announced his resignation from the party.

At the time, he said "Mr. Pearson's previous Liberal policy. It is political or military terms." He spoke talk had ended in a stalemate.

"The events of the last few days only genuine reform movement in the Party. I would hope to win those social objectives of which we have apparently lost sight," he said.

The move was seen as costly for left no alternative.

Audrey Gertsman, now in Guelph, friend of Kelly's when he was a speaker in 1960-61. She can remember when Kelly decided to join the Liberal party so decisive a move.

"I visited Vince when he was being nominated by the Liberals as a young and presumably inexperienced, conservative, provincial and Orange, campaigning reduced a previous Liberal party really took notice."

Miss Gertsman, like Rick Alway, low Liberal, agrees Kelly had a party. "Vince felt the Liberal chair him to take the role he wanted to feel it would conflict with his status."

"Vince was always a progressive person could work in, and with him. He had taken a stand on nuclear war, the Liberals, even to their dislike was an election year," said Alway.

a big job

We congratulate John Roberts on his election as president of the Students' Administrative Council.

We do not envy Roberts the job he is stepping into, particularly because he has to follow one of the best presidents this or any university has ever seen.

Doug Ward, the outgoing SAC president, is one of this country's outstanding student leaders. Under him, this year's council has set a theme which will be followed for years to come.

But while it will be a big job to follow the lead of Doug Ward, we believe that if anyone can do the job it is John Roberts.

We wish him the best of luck in what promises to be an exciting year.

one down

The executive committee of the board of governors is to be commended on its decision to grant the Students' Administrative Council part of its request for constitutional change.

The committee has recommended that the SAC be given the power to appoint and dismiss its own staff, subject to ratification by the board.

Although the committee decision has to be accepted by the board, President Claude Bissell has expressed his belief that there will be no obstacles to such acceptance. It is to be hoped that the board will accept this long overdue recommendation.

Also, it is to be hoped that the board will see fit to grant the SAC the other half of its requested changes — financial autonomy. Until this constitutional amendment is granted, the students at this university will not be responsible for their own affairs.

The committee's recommendation is most encouraging, but it is only part of the change which the SAC has requested. We hope that the granting of financial responsibility will follow soon.

V-p wants clearer duties

In her final report to council for the year, SAC Vice-President Mary Pat McMahon called for SAC's right to self-determination in policy making and a clearer delineation of the duties of the vice-president.

"Our activities throughout the year have evidenced an increasing feeling of responsibility for the university community and the community beyond," she said. "We have demonstrated our concern and our ability. We have received recognition. We ask now for the right to make our own decisions and to determine our own policy."

"I, with the position of vice-president, would urge that the duties of that office be more clearly indicated. The social label attached to this position is erroneous and restrictive."

"The vice-president should share the work load of the president more effectively. An attempt was made this year and realized, but even more of a presidential-vice-presidential exchange needs to be established."

Speaking of SAC's interest in defining its relationship within the university community, Miss McMahon said SAC's "decision and conviction has been outlined in brief to the board of governors."

Other indications of future concern to council as touched on in Miss McMahon's report were: the possible establishment of a fourth student exchange; changes within SAC "that expansion dictates" which will be facilitated by this year's university hearings; and the "need for expanded service in the area of student counselling" as pointed out at the Mental Health Symposium.

SAC to spend $300,000 in 64-65

In 1964-65, the SAC will spend slightly more than $300,000. Finance Commissioner Larry Ward revealed in his budget Wednesday night.

Gross expenditure for the year will be $300,418, and income $304,418. This will provide a net income of $4,000.

The total expenditure is an increase of close to $6,000 from the $294,813 spent this year.

Largest cost totals are for "services and activities," which account for $173,556, and publication, which cost $66,807. The largest single source of income is from student fees of $8 per student, totalling $119,504.

CUS president must come from

The SAC is the real representative of the Canadian Union of Students, national CUS president David Jenkins told the joint council meeting Wednesday night.

"The students' council is CUS on this campus," Jenkins said. "We at CUS function by drawing on councils such as this for program ideas."

Jenkins noted five areas in which major programs of CUS are being pursued: "unity toward national consciousness," intellectual and material welfare of students, education, international programs, and the exchange of ideas.

In the first of these, he cited the seventh annual national seminar which this summer will bring 150 students from all campuses together, and the publishing of Campus Canada, the national student magazine.

As programs contributing toward student welfare, he mentioned CUS's pressure for 10,000 scholarships from the federal government, CUS life insurance, and the organization's travel department in Montreal. In the field of academic welfare he re-

KELLY: A DYNAMIC AND PRINCIPLED POLITICIAN

"Vince wanted to take a lead and show other persons that they could take a stand against the federal decision and maybe make Pearson change his mind," Miss Gertsman said.

But SAC executive assistant Rose Marie Harrop, who has been in close touch with SAC committees that Kelly has been on since his term of office, recalled a speech that past NFCUS president Stu Goodings gave last week at St. Michael's SAC — which she feels explains Kelly's activities over the past seven years. (Kelly worked for IBM for two years after graduating from SMC in Political Science in 1959.

VINCE KELLY

Goodings felt a student governor should have senses of vision, growth, humor and creative pragmatism. Miss Harrop felt all but the last could coexist with a man of principle. A rejection of creative pragmatism is evident in Kelly's political activities both on and off campus.

In his year as SAC president, Kelly managed to lay the foundation for what present chief executive Doug Ward calls "the modern council."

Before Kelly, Ward explained, the SAC was just that: administrative. It had little notion of what SAC is becoming presently — a governing body. Before Kelly, council had very limited powers and didn't even have any official office space. Even getting that was a fight, Ward said.

In office before a divided council and ignored by a Varsity run by an in-group CCF staff, Kelly refused to play up to any of them for the sake of creative pragmatism.

"Council that year was about the last of those noted for lobbying, politicking, and personal dissension," Alway said. "Council was split within a month, one group siding with Vice-President Adrienne Poy, the rest siding with Vince."

Kelly never sacrificed his stand, but continually compromised within the bounds of principle with the vice-president, he added.

Kelly was, as both Doug Ward and Miss Gertsman agree, long-ranged in his ideas, governing rather than simply administering. He proposed earlier spring elections on SAC, so that better continuity between successive councils with similar aims could be maintained. The proposal has since been effected by council.

The present SAC constitution book was drawn up. A first foray at the U of T board of governors was made when Kelly Kelly called for partial SAC control of disciplinary problems arising out of student activities. The move itself was overshadowed by the implications of the proposal which have been the basis for the more important, governing motions of SAC in the past two years.

The new governing stand was echoed in Kelly's farewell speech, when he called for a continuation of the struggle to get a co-educational student union on campus.

"There should be no conflict between student union and government. Unfortunately, because of the inadequacy of Hart House, there has been overlapping . . . On at least one point we should remain firm. While the position of student union is changing . . . SAC alone appoints accredited representatives of this university to outside-university extra-curricular activities."

Kelly's ideas and proposals five years ago set the stage for the new entente with the board of governors developing this year.

Vince Kelly's success in campus and non-campus politics (in the good sense of the word) belies predictions from his teachers at home in Smiths Falls. "In high school he was told he would never be a good speaker," Miss Gertsma said. "But by 1960 he had won a national Liberal oratorical contest."

But there's more to the success story of the Liberal who could even think to move to open or break a political career in its most promising stages.

There was the institution of the U of T awards dinner, the successful creative writers conference in 1962, the first national NFCUS meeting here (with French-speaking visitors having access to a translation service over earphones.)

All such accomplishments may seem at first inevitable, simply good, ideas. But all of them have been acknowledged by present campus leaders and past SAC members as portentous of long range continuation and future development of similar moves.

A distrust from his fellows because of his political attitude didn't hamper Kelly in getting the job done over seven years. He overcame it in Lanark, but couldn't do the impossible in Armordale, where he ran for the NDP provincially last year.

When he starts to article with a downtown firm after graduation, Kelly will join a Conservative-bent company, not a labor group as might be expected.

Simply because of principle, probably.

To study AVR fate in summer

A thorough study of the problems of the SAC-sponsored All - Varsity Revue which this year lost almost $1,200 has been commissioned for this summer, UTDC Chairman Ann Chudleigh announced at Wednesday's council meeting.

Chairman-designate Donald Ancaster will prepare a set of proposals for council to consider next fall.

There are two trends of thought towards the all-campus show: some feel the AVR has outlived its purpose and should be replaced with a theatre workshop or a conference on the arts; others believe it has an important function to perform and should be continued.

At least one thing is certain: the AVR will never again be produced during the spring term. After only 600 paying customers watched Thurber Carnival last month, council decided nevermore.

"I think the arguments used against these people are unfitting," Rogers said. The charge that these people are unfit because they are members of a UC clique is shabby."

Commission member John Robert replied: "Mr. Rogers does us an injustice to say the only factor we considered was the matter of a clique."

Varsity Editor Ken Drushka added, "I refused to support the re-establishment of Jargon unless good editors could be found. When these two applied first I was not prepared to support the venture, but I changed my mind when I found Mr. Hughes had applied."

SAC meeting (contd.)

heated debate. The publications commission had recommended the choice of Hughes and Miss Speirs for the posts, but Don Rogers (III UC) objected to this recommendation.

He charged that they had been chosen rather than Joan Murray (III UC) and Peter Auksi (III UC) because members of the commission felt the latter pair were members of a "UC clique," and moved that the council go into a committee of the whole to fully consider both applications.

ment must be responsible for influencing the direction, regulation, and control of the complete environment of the university."

Touching on the committee's relations with the administration, Roberts described as "rather quaint" the notion that "at least two of these very important men" held: that The Varsity should and could be representative of a collective student opinion and not dominated by the opinions of its editor.

"In fact, they quite openly advocated that The Varsity should be merely a house organ of the SAC," Roberts said.

"It is interesting to note in passing that opinion as to student participation varied widely. Most (men) were disposed to a non-voting student representative on the Senate.

"None could be said to be enthusiastic about a non-voting member on the board of governors. On the other hand, there was a great deal of interest in greater student participation."

Speaking further on The Varsity, Roberts said it was generally agreed that "it was contradictory for the student government to ask autonomy in relation to the board of governors and yet refuse to put into action those same principles of autonomy in relation to its own subsidiary organization."

The Varsity also was praised and blamed in Publications Commissioner Dave Beatty's report. "In general, the editorial comment has been provocative and aggressive. . . . It is of value for any thinking individual to be continually confronted with issues which challenge his intellect and his position in society."

Beatty criticised The Varsity for twice "allowing editorial bias to appear in a news story: the Tarheel Exchange controversy and the Model Parliament difficulties."

U of T's long-anticipated student centre is still a decade away from realization, Roberts said. "The 1970s, generally, was indicated as the earliest time at which the matter would probably even come under serious consideration. . . . No plan exist for co-educational student union facilities."

PHE & Irish upset top teams to win titles

By GRANT PURDY

The date is January 17. Rookies of Physical and Health Education's hockey team are being received with indulgent smiles as they state their team's 0-5 record does not belie its actual potential.

PHE has been scored on infrequently but is having trouble scoring even one goal every other game.

Who would dare to dream that in the next two months PHE would register 10 victories and two ties in 13 games to win the Jennings Cup and the interfac championship?

The date is Monday, March 16, three o'clock in the afternoon. PHE Bad Men have just posted their second consecutive overtime win over defending champion Victoria to take the Jennings Cup final series, two games to none.

The climax to this spectacular comeback by PHE began with a 4-2 win over Vic in the first game of the best-of-three final. Gil Farmer and Don Arthurs overcame a 1-0 deficit and then Bill Watters and Hugh Lynn scored in overtime for the victory.

Don Wilson and Mike Jones counted for the Scarlet and Gold, who had won the title the three previous years.

Arthurs gave PHE the championship by breaking a 4-4 tie in overtime of the second game. It was Arthurs' second goal of the game to match Watters. Tom Hain added the other for the Bad Men.

Rick Wardell, up from Vic II for the game, scored three goals for the losers, Jones tallied the other.

Vic had finished in first place, PHE third.

The Rick Kolins Memorial Trophy, invisible emblem of intermediate hockey supremacy, went to SPS I after a 12-10 verdict over defending champ Vic IV in the two-game, total-goals final. Skule, undefeated over the season, won the first game 7-5 and played to a 5-5 tie in the finale.

Paul Stephnik and Bruce Burgess scored four goals each for the engineers in the series. John Bennett tallied five for Vic.

BASKETBALL

St. Mike's Double Blue retained the Sifton Cup by upsetting PHE in two straight games of the best-of-three final series. PHE had finished first in the regular season, four points ahead of the Irish.

St. Mike's took the first game, 84-80, and the second, 81-68.

Andy Klimas of PHE was top scorer in the series with 49 points, 33 in the first game. Ray Schaedler once again paced St. Mike's, scoring 44.

Bryan Ferroni added 32 to the Double Blue output, Tom Kent 30 and John MacInnis 22. Jim Holowachuk had 31 and Art Bennett 26 in the two games for PHE.

WATER POLO

Big brother beat little brother in the all-Meds final for the Eckhardt Cup. Defending champ Meds IV Yr. defeated Meds I Yr., 9-6 and 13-8, in the first two games of the best-of-three final.

Harvey Armstrong scored 9 goals, Dean Chamberlain 6 and Brian McGrath 4 for the veterans. Pete Richardson and John Maki shared honors for the losers with 5 goals apiece.

TRACK

The University College team of Gurston Dacks, Bruce Kidd, Carl Funke, Doug Wiggins, Ron Veale, Bob Manning and Nelles Van Loon combined to win the Indoor Track championship and the Toronto Cricket Club Cup.

UC totalled 127 points in the weekly events, followed by defending champ Vic, 78, and Dentistry, 24. All points for the dentists were scored by Roger Sumner.

Lancers and Golden Bears cop CIAU championships

Windsor Lancers and Alberta Golden Bears won the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union basketball and hockey championships respectively last weekend.

Lancers, Senior Intercollegiate League champions and undefeated in league and playoff games in two years, retained their national cage title, defeating British Columbia Thunderbirds, 94-70.

Lancers gained the final with a 107-69 win over Acadia Axemen in the semi-final of the tournament played in Windsor. UBC defeated Sir George William, 78-70, in the other semi-final.

Selected to the tournament all-star team were guards Bob Horvath of Windsor and Warren Sutton of Sir George, centre Bill McDonald of UBC and forwards Bernie Fries-mouth of Windsor and Dave Way of UBC.

Sutton, who scored 56 points in two games, was selected as most valuable player. Sir George defeated Acadia, 63-57, in the consolation game.

Alberta won the hockey title at Kingston by blasting Sir George Williams, 9-1, in the final. Golden Bears previously edged New Brunswick, 5-3, in their semi-final game.

Montreal Carabins, who represented the Senior Intercollegiate League because first-place Varsity Blues decided not to participate, finished last in the tournament. Carabins lost, 5-1, to Sir George in their semi-final and then dropped a 4-2 decision to New Brunswick in the consolation game.

Dal paper calls Feinberg Communist

The Dalhousie University newspaper The Gazette is in hot water for calling Rabbi Abraham Feinberg of Toronto a Communist.

Rabbi Feinberg said he was shocked and disappointed that the article by Donald Brazier should appear in a university newspaper.

Brazier apologized to Rabbi Feinberg and admitted he took his information from the Canadian Intelligence Service — an anti-Semitic "hate sheet" published in Flesherston, Ont., and distributed widely throughout Canada.

The article March 6 said Rabbi Feinberg, an American, was refused Canadian citizenship because the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation gave the RCMP information that he was a known Communist and had been guilty of a large number of Communist acts.

"The retraction promised by the Dalhousie Gazette does not entirely satisfy me," Rabbi Feinberg said, "nor does it absolve the editor of gross journalistic irresponsibility."

Harris named prof of higher education

Dr. Robin Harris, acting principal and associate professor of English in University College, has been appointed professor of higher education at University of Toronto. In his announcement, President Claude Bisell said Dr. Harris would assume his new duties July 1, the day he becomes principal of Innis College.

It is the first such appointment in Canada.

While Dr. Harris will be concerned with higher education in general, his chief interest will centre on University of Toronto. For the last four years he has been chairman of the president's advisory committee on policy and planning.

He has also been concerned with primary and secondary education and served for four years on the Toronto and Metropolitan Toronto school boards.

Offer chance to go to Cuba

The Fair Play for Cuba Committee says you can join them and see the world—the Cuban part at least—this summer.

There will be 25 French- and English-speaking Canadian university students chosen from campus volunteers to spend six to eight weeks on the island—assisting the Cuban people as a work corps repairing damage hurricane Flora.

The Cuban government has allocated facilities for the working tourists on its boats calling at Montreal in mid-June and July. All expenses are paid from Montreal.

The Cuba Committee views the tour as an opportunity for this group of students to see and evaluate the Cuban experiment first hand, and at the same time to make a positive contribution to the establishment of friendly and mutually beneficial relations between the two countries.

A Woodrow Wilson Fellowship was incorrectly termed won by Robert McGhee, "(IV Meds)" in last Friday's Varsity. The fellowship was won by Robert McGhee, IV UC.
